"Tomorrow evening at approximately 8:00 P.M., Halley's Comet will be visible in the area, an event which occurs only once every 75 years. Have the men file out in white Tee-shirts, and I will explain this rare phenomenon to them. In case of rain, we will no be able to see anything, so assemble the men in the theater, and I will show films of it."

Memo from Associate Warden to Captain:

"By order of the Warden, tomorrow at 8:00 P.M., Halley's Comet will appear above the yard area. If it rains, fall the men out in Tee-shirts; then march to the theater, where a rare phenomenon will take place, something which occurs only once every 75 years."

Memo from Captain to Lieutenant:

"By order of the Warden, in Tee-shirts, at 8:00 P.M., tomorrow evening, the phenomenal Halley's Comet will appear in the theater. In case of rain in the yard area, the Warden will give another order, something which occurs once every 75 years.

Memo from Lieutenant to Line Officer:

"Tomorrow at 8:00 P.M., the warden will appear in the theater with Halley's Comet something which happens every 75 years. If it rains, the Warden will order the Comet into the yard area."

Line Officer to Inm,ates:

"Tomorrow at 8:00 P.M., the phenomenal, 75-year-old Officer Halley, accompanied by the Warden, will drive his Comet through the Yard Office Theater in his Tee-shirt."

Daddy! Daddy! Can I See Your Medal?

(one of two articles)
by Teddy Lyras

It is 1998, Mr. George Anderson is on his way to Pittsburgh and is a little nervous, but not much, because he will soon be participating in a 10 mile race. He thinks he is pretty well prepared since he has been running consistently and is now looking forward to this race. Mr. Anderson does not really care whether he wins or not as long as he runs well — in the sense that he does his personal best. That's what is important to him.

He has finally arrived at the race site. He does a warm-up which consists of a jog, calistentics and another jog. This time he warms-up with no pestering from his family because he left his wife and children at home. They bother him too much because they become more excited than he does and pester him with needless comments and questions. This pestering makes him far too excited to run a decent race.

It is now after the race. Mr. Anderson has finished respectably enough to receive a medal. His name is called to receive his award. He then starts to finish his warm-down by doing some more jogging. As he starts, he hears, "Hey George! Wait a minute!" Mr. Anderson sees this guy coming toward him.

"Hey you remember me?"

Mr. Anderson looks at the face. Hm! He looks very familiar but just can't pinpoint the name. He knows he has met him somewhere, but where?

"It's me, Steve Hooper, one of your Cross-Country teammates from JC. Remember?"

George takes another quick look at Steve and says, "That's right! Wow! How are you? This is sure a surprise to see you here. It's hard to believe, after so many years to meet you at a race. Wow! What are you doing here? Did you race, too?"

"Yeah, I came for the race too. I don't want to keep you from your warm-down, so I'll join you, If you don't mind."

"Sure, come on!"

"So what's happening old buddy?" What have you been doing lately?"

"Right now I'm working," says George. "Things have been coming along quite well for me. How about you? I guess I can say that you are still running."

"Yeah, I'm still running. I've stayed with it pretty much. You know I find it's like an addiction, something I must do everyday. I used to go on running spurts. I used to run consistently for quite some time, then for some unknown reason I drop it, but I always have come back to it after a period of time. I have been running consistently now for, oh, let's say about five years. You know, upon graduation from college, I didn't know if I was going to continue or not. I wanted to, but I wasn't really positive that I was. I wasn't going to push myself, only as long as I enjoy it, I would continue. And I guess that's exactly what I'm doing."

"That's exactly how I feel." adds George, "Running is only for enjoyment, and I also find it addicting, as you say. I run only about 3-5 miles a day, and I find that these little runs are a daily necessity. Besides finding them very enjoyable and refreshing, they keep me in good physical shape. It's very cheap and does not require a lot of preparation. I just put on sweats and run. How about you, any special reason why you have continued running?"

"Well, as you said," replies Steve, "it keeps me in shape and gives me personal satisfaction. I'm not good at all, but I go for my PR's (personal records). As a matter of fact, I run my best time today. Remember those practices we used to have back at JC during Cross-Country and track seasons? How about that hill we had to run up, the one by the cemetery?"

"Ugh, that was murder! It was really a toughie. Can't say much else for our course either. Remember how the other teams used to die on it, especially if they came from a flatland course? They were sure hurting! Also I remember in my freshmen year, when I was not out for Cross-Country, I used to run every afternoon with my room mate. On the days I didn't run I felt different. I was much more relaxed on the days I did runn, because I was greatly refreshed. The run had purged me of any stagnancy, and it was much easier for me to study. Hey, I wonder if Coach Mitchell is still running?"

"Knowing him," says Steve, "he probably is still running. I remember how he always used to run to keep in shape, even when he was not coaching us. It was neat when he used to run practices with us. What about the times we used to do the Petersburg road (a 7 mile road full of little rolling hills) and Coach Mitchell would tag along with his bike and stopwatch and encourage us to keep moving under the auspicies of his stopwatch."

"Yeah, that sure was a grueling practice, but boy was it worth it when racing time rolled around!"

Meanwhile Steve and George have finished their two mile warm-down and found themselves at the racing site once again. Before they even stopped, they heard voices shouting, "Daddy! Daddy! Let me see your medal! Daddy where is it? I want to see it. We were watching you the whole time and you didn't even know it. We came up in Mom's car."

"Hey you guys really surprised me. I never thought Mom would drive you up after I left," says George as Mrs. Anderson walks over. "Good run, George. You really did swell! You should have heard these kids routing for you again. Boy were the excited!"

"I can tell," says George, as he finds the 3 of them scrounging through his belongings for the medal.

"Hey Dad, can I keep this one in my room?"

"Daddy don't let him. He has the last one. It's now my turn. Can't I have it?" pleads the youngster.

"No! That's not true! He's lying! It's my turn!" says the other.

"Hold it, wait a minute! Let me introduce you to an old teammate of mine from my college years. We ran Cross-Country and track together. This is Mr. Hooper. Steve, this is my wife and children."

After the greeting exchangements and some more of odd and end catter, Mr. Hooper invited George's family over to his house. The invitation was accepted and before they knew it, they were at Steve's house and his brood was also jumping over him pouring out all their questions.

"I see that you also have a rowdy bunch too. That's kids. My family gets more excited over my running than I ever do; and as I see, yours do too."

Good Luck To All 3 Teams

Mat Men News

by Teddy Lyras

Coming off a six week break since the Indian wrestlers last faced competition, they went up against nationally ranked Gettysburg. Eventhough the wrestlers put up a brave fight, they suffered a stunning defeat, 43-3.

Coach Bill Berrier says this was the toughest meet of the year with Gettysburg ranking 5th in the nation for Division 3. But Coach Berrier has a good outlook for the rest of the season. "We will also have kids like Harper, Simons and Perry placing in the MAC's. The match today was like a warm-up. This was Gettysburg's 11th meet and for us it was only our 5th."

This was Scott Simmon's first dual meet of the season (due to an elbow injury), but he saved the Indians from a shutout by scoring 3 points over his opponent.

Others wrestling for the Indians were Bob Smith (118), Rich Brandt (126), Bob Thompson (134), Brian Ashworth (142), Gary Moellers (150), Bill Bruner (158), Steve Harper (167), Jim Ruoss (177), and Herk Perry (190).

The Indians wrestlers are currently 1-3, their lone win coming over Susquehanna, 40-11. So now being well-rested after their month-and-a-half lay-off, the Indians will find action fast and furious for the next two weeks. They will host Frostburg, Wednesday January 28, travel to Messiah Friday night, then host the Penn-State Altoona and Scranton the following week.

Good luck to the wrestlers!

THE JUNIATIAN

VOL. XILX NO. 12 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | February 5, 1976

Whats Yours?

A Plea For Help

by Rob Loprest

Many people, myself included, feel that the Juniatian has currently reached its lowest point in quite some time. This is particularly upsetting because of the visious circle it creates: a bad issue lessens student interest, less interest produces worse papers. Two weeks ago there weren't even enough articles to fill the paper at all.

And so I'm writing on that dullest of all topics: a plea for interest in the newspaper. About ten issues are still to be published this year. We have the opportunity of producing the best ten issues ever seen on this campus, or of continuing to slide downhill. The choice is truly in the hands of each of you reading this article. There are many ways you could help.

First of all, we need writers. If you have written for us, please continue the good work. We do appreciate it. If you have thought about it but never got around to it, why not try it once? You'll probably find it less work and more fun then you expected. If you are interested in writing, but don't know what to write about, the editors would be pleased to discuss possible topics with you.

Secondly, we need suggestions. What do you want from your campus newspaper? Do you have ideas on how it can be improved?

Drop off a note in the Juniatian office and let us know.

Finally, we need to know what's going on in the school so that we can tell you. If you are preparing an event and want people to know about it, write an article, or let us know, so we can write one. Do you know something the campus community should hear? Is there something about this college that you would like to hear more about? Let us know and we will do our best.

The editors are Ralph Whetstone and Bob Meacham. A message to them or through the office will get attention.

The object of the Juniatian is communication, but this is a two-way street. In order for the campus community to hear, someone must speak. This is your opportunity to speak and be heard. Please take advantage of it.

CS Jobs Limited

College students who wish to apply for state civil service positions in the college career series may submit applications until March 26, the State Civil Service Commission has announced.

Job opportunities are limited.

Written tests for these positions will be scheduled periodically at statewide test centers. The examination will also be given daily by appointment only at State Civil Service Commission offices in Harhisburg, Pettsburg, and Philadelphia. Applicants submit college transcripts with their application.

The college career series includes trainee and beginning level positions in administration, social services, education, and natural science. Most positions require a bachelor's degree in a field appropriate to the job title. Candidates should refer to the examination announcement for full details on salaries, examinations, and position requirements.

Applications, examination announcements, and further information may be obtained from the State Civil Service Commission in Harrisburg, Pittsburgh, and Philadelphia, or from college placement offices.

"A Season of Good Favor"

by Evagelis "Teddy" Lyras

For those of you who were not in Alumni Hall on Saturday, January 30 really missed out on a lot. The two highlights of the afternoon were the fabulous etching "Mountain Day" and the extraordinary production of "A Season of Good Favor."

"Mountain Day" is the Centennial etching created by Steven Barbash. Steve Barbash was chairman of Juniata's Art Department from 1960-1970. Currently he is Chairman of the Art Department of the College at Cortland, State University of New York. An etching is a picture made on a metal plate. In this special etching Mr. Barbash captures the feeling of what has been the "Mountain Day" for Juniatians over the years. Only two hundred copies of this etching are available.

"A Season of Good Favor" is a portrayal of Juniata's Centennial History by James Lehman. Through sight and sound, Mr. Lehman encapsulates Juniata's history into a sensitive and fast-moving production which many times found the audience rolling over with laughter. James Lehman, a graduate of the class of 1966, is currently a free lance writer and media consultant in Elgin, Ill.

He began the production with a very interesting introduction concerning JC's creation. Of how the Brumbaugh's got together to offer higher education to people, something which the Brethren Church saw as corruption at the time, but did gradually accept as a norm.

A teacher was found. After much planning and so forth the school was in session. It was small but succeeding. Small— it was very small— 3 students! But by the next year enrollment increased tremendously — 100 students. But then tragedy struck JC — a smallpox epidemic hit Huntingdon. The school was closed. There were, however, two youths from Ohio who knew that if they went home they would never be able to return, so what else did they do but take refuge to the woods! In the Trough Creek area. It was a hard and adventurous winter living in a hut, but they made it and returned to the school in February when it reopened.

The years went by. Juniata was growing — in quanity as in quality. It was finally accredited as a college. Juniata was succeeding. It's past soon became the present.

Some of the highlights that have stuck in my mind: Quality-wise Juniata was changing both academically and morally. The trustees tried so hard to control the "morals" of the students, but to no avail. Nothing worked. The roaring twenties were at work! Then for some odd and unknown reason JC quieted down.

Then . . . then disaster struck campus! The "experienced and adventurous VETERANS" OF THE WAR CAME IN. Things charged downhill! There was ruckus on campus! Things were changing once again. To the disgust of the trustees shirts were getting shorter, and smoking and drinking hit all corners of the campus.

Another problem which had to be solved: JC's president at the time smoked cigars. He would not give them up for anything. An agreement was made: he would smoke only in his apartment. Then people would just pretend not to smell cigar smoke. Anyway things quieted down once again. Things were back to "normal."

Time went by. Things started up again. What now? The students were clamoring for power. They wanted a say in matters: they wanted a Student Government — an atrociously, horrendous idea to the trustees of the time. But after much clamoring a Student Government emerged. Then the Juniatian emerged along with many other campus organizations. The first intercollegiate meet did not concern the football team, but the debate team!

After many, many years Juniata even got a football team. Yes, a football team! A dream which the Juniatian students thought they would never be able to achieve. Juniata had a few other team sports but no football team! The trustees did not want this "atrociously, brutal" sport to take place on this "quiet, little campus". They were boiling over with anger because a student was injured in a secret football scrimage! Atrociously bad! But once again after a brave and bitter struggle a football team was embarked to the great enthusiasm of the students. $600 was raised overnight. What of Janet R. Lewis, assistant professor of philosophy and director 2 suitcases full of equipment. A professor was conned into coaching and since then Juniata has produced many a glorious football team.

Basically this is what the production was about.

It was an excellent production and can be best summed up by a student who I heard remark, "This must be made a must for everyone!"

Rise In College Cheating Officials Take New Look

Cheating on college tests is:
A. Limited
B. Widely practiced
C. Looked down on
D. Glorified
E. All of the above

If you copied your neighbors answer to this question you are an average college student.

A marked increase in cheating has caused many college officials to take a new look at the traditional honors system of test taking. In a poll of Kansas University students, 45 per cent admitted to cheating while at K. U. Seventy-five per cent of these people said the reason they cheated was because of the institution's stress on grades.

There are two common types of cheating and in their practice, cheaters polish their art to a point of finesse. The first type of cheating is cheat sheets, which consists of information written on small pieces of paper. These papers are then concealed in their hand, under the test, up their sleeve, taped onto a pencil, slid under a watchband, in socks tops, pants cuffs or any other secret easily accessible place. Cheat sheet information can also be written on hands, arms, desk tops, kleenex, shoe soles and matchbooks.

Copying is the second most common type of cheating. Obtaining answers from someone else's test requires a sly eye. The drawback in this type of cheating is that you aren't assured of the right answer.

Modes- Ade From Exxon

Juniata College has received a grant from the Exxon Education Foundation to help implement a "guided design" program in its Modes of Thought and Methods of Inquiry course. "Modes," a required course for all freshmen and transfer students here, is one of the key elements of the college's academic program. The course seeks to point out the strengths and weaknesses of various patterns of inquiry which are associated with different fields of study.

Exxon's IMPACT (Implementation of Materials and Procedures Affecting College Teaching) program, which provided the funds, proposes to shorten the "time lag" between the development and evaluation of new educational techniques and materials and their widespread adoption by colleges and universities. A new approach to teaching and learning, "guided design" focuses on developing the student's decision-making skills as well as teaching specific concepts and principles.

The guided design implementation project is under the direction of Janet R. Lewis, assistant professor of philosophy and director of the Modes of Thought and Methods of Inquiry program.

In the guided design technique, students work in small groups to solve meaningful open-ended problems which require them to think logically, gather information, communicate ideas and use each of the decision-making steps. Moving at a self-determined pace, the students are guided through the solution of each problem by a series of printed "Instruction-Feedback" pages, by their discussion with other students in their design team, and by the instructor, who acts as a consultant.

Student Gov't

This weekend the foundation was prepared for the private college sector of the Pennsylvania Student Lobby. The PSL got its beginnings at Juniata bck in March of 1974. Since then the Lobby has worked at increasing financial aid for students, lowering the drinking age, post card registration, and other issues directly effecting students. In recent months, members have realized the importance for some organization within the PSL especially to look after the needs of the Private College.

The turnout was disappointingly low due to the inclement weather but with those representatives present many decisions were made as to the future direction of the Private College Lobby. Discussion centered upon increasing interest and credibility among student leaders from other colleges, legislative priorities, and responsibilities of those attending the conference. One of the most important things which came from the conference was the creation of a communication network of Private Colleges across the state. Another Conference is in the planning for the beginning of March at Juniata but on a smaller scale with only those schools in our district beging invited. This organizational conference will prepare those attending for a meeting in Harrisburg where they eill actively lobby among the State's Representatives.

A meeting was held to consider the possibilities for a vegitarian diet. Ed Straub agreed to supply a "Dietary Supplement" program. The supplement consists of a high protein food which is dupplemented for meat 'entrees. This supplement is available on demand to students who do not wish to eat meat.

In order to allow students an informal opportunity to meet with professors, Department Tables are being established. During a particular meal one department will have their professors VAILABLE TO EAT WITH STUDENTS IN THE Faculty Lounge. Schedules of means and departments will be posted and classes will be notified.

Dorm visits are now completed and lists of all concerns and complaints are being compiled. Action is being taken to solve many concerns which were voiced. The next major program sponsored by Student Government is the National Loompoon Show on March 13, 1976. This program is done in conjunction with Center Board. The speaker will be Chris Miller, one of the Editors, and a nominal fee will be charged.

Salaries Increase 6.1% For Faculty at College

The average salaries of full-time instructional faculty on academic year (9/19 months) contracts in colleges and universities increased by 6.1 percent from 1974 to 1975, according to preliminary data released today by HEW's National Center for Education Statistics (NCES).

The data are from the current NCES survey of Salaries, Tenure, and Fringe Benefits of Full-Time Instructional Faculty, 1975-1976.

NCES, located in the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Education, publishes selected preliminary data as early as possible so that the information may be of maximum use to the education community, government agencies, and Congress in their planning processes.

The preliminary data, covering the 50 States and the District of Columbia, also indicate that:

- from 1974 to 1975, instructional salaries increased 6.2 percent at publicly controlled institutions and 5.9 percent at privately controlled institutions;
- the percentage of women among all faculty on academic year contracts remained at the 1974 level of 24 percent. The percentage of women declined at the ranks of professor, associate professor, and instructor while increasing at the ranks of assistant professor, lecturer, and "undesignated rank";
- overall, women's salaries increased 5.8 percent while men's salaries increased 6.3 percent from 1974 to 1975. The average salaries of men continue to exceed the average salaries of women at every academic rank and at every institutional level, in both publicly and privately controlled institutions;
- sixty percent of men and 42 percent of women were tenured, with an overall total of 55 percent of institutional staff holding tenure.

Responses from the total survey are not yet complete. The preliminary statistics above and in the attached tables cover 2,782 (91.9 percent) of the 3,055 reporting units (campuses and branches of institutions) in the higher education universe. A detailed report on the survey will be published at a later date when additional responses have been received and processed.

Student Job Placements

Summer job placement specialists at Opportunity Research report that the improving economy will provide good opportunities for summer job placement this summer.

National Parks, guest ranches and resort areas are looking for their "biggest" year ever. Mr. Citizen's tight pocketbook for the past few years has substantially reduced the number of summertime travelers and vacationers, however, this year the improving economy will encourage literally millions of families to head for vacationland U.S.A.

The gas scare of the last two years does not appear to be an issue for this summer which should provide an added incentive for vacation travelers.

Job placement specialists at Opportunity Research indicate that there will be in excess of 50,000 good summer job opportunities at National Park facilities, State Parks, dude ranches and private summer camps. Students are urged to apply early (prior to April 1) as the good jobs go fast. Free information on student assistance for summer job placement may be obtained by sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Opportunity Research, Dept. SJO, 55 Flathead Drive, Kalispell MT 59901.

(Along Muddy Run)

by Saltz

We hear a great deal about the small college's dillema, in that they have grave financial difficulties and are experiencing a lowering rate in new student enrollment. These problems do not appear to be as crushing to Juniata as some small colleges. Our prospective enrollment figures are high, and the trustees seem to remember their Alma Mater with fond memories, and with a great deal of that all important green paper. We are indeed fortunate, however, it is my opinion that there is a step which might further enhance Juniata's possibilities to celebrate a Bi-Centennial in 2076.

The step that I am talking about is the incorporation of graduate study to the curriculums now offered here at Juniata. There are a number of questions that this step entails. Probably the most logical question is why should this school stick it's neck out with such a bold move, and why is now the most opportune time to consider graduate study at Juniata.

First of all, A graduate school would be a selling point for this institution to use in drawing prospective undergraduate students to this school, particularly if the graduate program would be set up some where in the disciplines of the Humanities. My reasoning for picking a Division 2 area of study is that it would appear that our Physical Sciences are already a fairly reknowned aspect of this college, also there would appear to be a greater vocational applicability for graduate studies in the humanities, than in the Arts.

A further important point that should be considered about a Graduate Program is the prestige that this college could enjoy, by the implememtation of such studies. Although some small colleges do manage to run a graduate school, there are not an overwhelming number that do so. Therefore this college would be perpetuating it's idea of a low student to instructor ratio from it's undergraduate level to a graduate level, and keep further education on a very personal basis. The prestige of this personal program could be used as a selling point for the graduate program itself.

One may ask why a step such as being discussed here should take place at this point in time? My answer to this is, that the employment possibilities at the present are not all that great for those graduating with a Bachelors Degree, or at least not as good as they once were. I have heard people time and again saying, "Well, if I don't get a job soon, I may try to get into a Masters program somewhere". there are people in Huntingdon, who are going to other Universities and Colleges such as Penn State, and Shippensburg to recieve graduate training. Juniata could possibly cater to some of their needs, keep their money in the area, and save these people the hassle of driving hours to attend classes.

Of course the question of money certainly must loom as a large consideration as a program such as being discussed here can't be started on our looks. Although I'm sure there would have to be some additional staff hired, I think that we have some very capable people teaching at Juniata that could rise to the challenge, and more than satisfactorily meet it. There is at least one member on the staff of each humanities discipline, that hold doctorate degrees. In fact in some departments, such as in Psychology and Business and Economics, there are two or three instructors with P.H. d's. I have no idea how many people it would take to start a graduate program staff, but it would seem to me that this is a fairly good start.

There are some problems with this idea that I have proposed here. First of all, it would seem to me that it would be a good idea to start small and see how graduate study works out on this campus. The problem is where to start. Should we offer an M.B.A. program, or a Masters in Counseling. These are questions that can only be answered with intesive study and serious consideration made by the administration of this institution.

I realize that the expenditure needed to start a graduate program of some type would be great, however, in June of 1972, Juniata boasted in it's catalog of a total asset figure of $21,520,450.00. God and the accountants only know what this figure is now, and I believe that a graduate program could be instituted as an investment, and further support the financial situation of this college.

What An Eccentric Bunch!

by Steve Townsend

Friday afternoon I arrived at one of my exams ten minutes early in expectation of being able to review my essay outline one last time. As it was, I was, I had already seen the lothsome thing two dozen times and so I found myself more interested in watching my fellow students file into the classroom. To my delight, I discovered that we are an eccentric bunch when it comes to taking examinations.

Without exception, I noticed that the first group through the door had seen fit to bring along all of the course's texts, pampiets, note-books and supplementary readings. This was a tactic that I had observed before without taking special note of how incredibly absurd it was. Now I realized that uness they had discovered some sort of cosmic, Rosicrucian communication with their books, the energy expended in lugging all that printed material to the test was completely wasted. Upon reflecting on such students I decided that (poor bastards) they are susceptible to needless syndromes and complexes of guilt. Maybe the nite before they had gone to bed a half hour sooner than planned and now felt compelled to carry all those books as a form of public penance.

Next to come through the door was the class paranoid. I'm sure you know the type. He is the one who shows no fear over not having studied proper•y, but when it comes to the possibility of his pen running dry, he goes bananas. This character took a seat in front of me with a bic pen behind each ear, five Parkers in his shirt pockets, packs of keenly sharpened No. 2 lead pencils in his pant's packets and, just for an emergency, chalk between his teeth.

At the opposite end of the spectrum from the Paranoid, lies the guy that never, ever brings anything to write with. No sooner had my test begun than he was asking the class if anyone had an extra pen. Of course, everyone immediately looked in the direction of the guy with the seven pens, six pencils and chalk. True to his paranoid form the skinny pack rat pretended not to get the hint. At that point I decided that enough was enough so I smacked him up side the head and knocked a couple loose.

The guy I most respect though, is the guy that shows up twenty minutes late and leaves ten minutes early. He has either got a total command of the material, or else his CUM is already so savagely ravaged that he figures one more major fugup won't make a whole hell of a lot of difference. But reguardless of where he's coming from, he has at least freed himself of those terrible examination queezes which seem to plague another group of test takers.

Right beside me was one such pitiful victim. From the look on his face I suspected that he had been eating pepermint No-Doz for a goodly number of hours, a.d when I heard the various pitched rumblings from deep within his intestinal cavity, I knew my suspicions weren't wrong. The poor clyde was so bloated with caffeine gas that he kept bobbing up and down in his seat in an effort to hold it all back. "The hell of it," he whispered, "is that there is no such thing as an SBD when one is in my situation."

When the test had come to an end, and all the blue books had been collected, the differences of just a few minutes ago absolutely vanished. If everyone had entered the test in their own particular style, they all left exactly alike—quickly.

Margo St. James

Hooker Howls About Discrimination

Hooker Howls About Discrimation

The star lady of the afternoon was Margo St. James, founder and chairmadame of COYOTE (Call Off Your Old Tired Ethics), an up-and-coming "loose women's organization" fighting for decriminalization of prositution.

Looking understandably weathered, but still feisty, the 38-year-old St. James was greeted by a raucous applause and scattered wolf-whistles. Anticipating the audience's first question, she admitted her status as a retired harlot. "I'm too busy talking about it to do it," St. James remarked.

"The government is the worst pimp — and the strongest." St. James decried. "Prostitution laws are enforcement of one-sided monogamy," she continued, "A man is considered virile if he has numerous experiences where a woman is thought of as cheap, vulgar, or dirty if she does."

St. James tried to dispel some of the myths surrounding hookers and the profession. "They are not all lesbians and jaded despisers of men," she pointed out. "Money is the biggest reason and adventure is the next." She also denounced the notion of the wealthy trollop, as prostitutes are subjected to wage drainage all down the line from bellhops, hotel owners, doctors and cops. "The police either want a piece or money," she said.

Engaging in some legitimate intercourse with the audience, St. James was asked about the demand for male prostitutes during a question and answer period. "How often can a man work?" she answered. "Women can work for $5 a trick, but a man turning $5 tricks would be burnt out."

Illuminating the audience as to the cost to the taxpayer in bringing a street-walker before the courts, St. James stated "The cost of arresting a prostitute in San Francisco is $1,700 and since public prosecutors are used, the cost is about double." She added "And if they're customers they're paying three times."

The audience was curious about the ins-and-outs of the business. "What it comes down to is taking turns doing each other," the ex-call girl stated. "Most women don't do 'flatbackers'," she stated, adding, "Sure we enjoy it if the customer's good."

Civil Service

Representative from the State Civil Service Commission will be on campus at Juniata State College on Tuesday, February 10, 1976 to alert prospective graduates to civil service opportunities with the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Staff from the Commission's recruitment office will present a brief slide-and-tape talk, "Effecting Responsive Government". Following the talk, information about current examination programs will be available. Questions about state job requirements, starting salaries, and employment opportunities will be answered.

Applications will be accepted for state government positions in administration, social services, education, natural science, and other fields. Students should have their completed applications and college transcripts ready prior to the presentation.

Seniors interested in state government opportunities may obtain applications and further information about the State Civil Service Commission recruitment presentation at the college placement office.

Music Makers

by Laurel Crowley

This Sunday, amidst the regular campus-wide ritual of adjusting back to the harsh realities of books and the approaching Monday morning, the Juniata College Band will present a unique mixture of musical compositions. This will happen in Oller Hall at (of course) 8:15 p.m. Admission is free, and (especially since the program will not be excessively lengthy) all are encouraged to attend.

Prof. Ibrook Tower, director, has so planned the program that everyone, regardless of personal taste, should find at least one composition especially pleasing!! The opening number, "How the West Was Won", weaves together various tunes from the movie of the same title, concluding with rousing choruses of the familiar, "When Johnny Comes Marching Home" and "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." To completely change the mood, this is followed by "Four French Songs of the 16 th Century" by Robert Hanson. The four chansons upon which the piece is based are entitled, "Troubadors," "Solemn Ceremony," "Petite Dance," and "Festivals," The next composition, "Days of Glory", is in the style of a Revolutionary War marchings song. Then, again to present a new atmosphere, the next piece to be played, "A Festival Prelude", by Alfred Reed, boasts especially rich instrumentation, specifically designed for symphonic band. To lighten the mood, the band next presents "Variations on 'America'" by Charles Ives. This is a collection of various interpretations of "My Country "Tis of Thee"—all of them with surprise bits of musical wit thrown in. An old lively march, "The Gold Bug", by Victor Herbert, follows. The band concludes their program with two dance band selections, Benny Goodman's Theme Song, "Let's Dance", and a lush arrangement of "On the Street Where You Live" from Lerner and Lowe's "My Fair Lady."

All in all, the program should prove varied and very worthwhile. Hope to see you all there!

Congratulations!

Congratulations to seniors Alan Kulp and George Kourakin. Their Super 8mm movie entitled "Smile" won first place in a national contest for movies on preventive dentistry. The contest was sponsored and judged by the New Jersey Chaper of the American Socitey of Preventive Dentistry. The 30 minute color film is descriptive of the general dental practice and details proper brushing, flossing, and eating habits, as well as the process of tooth decay. The film features several local dentists and many campus personalities. It is narrated by Dr. Kenneth Rockwell and technically supervised by Associate Professor Clayton Briggs. Producers Kulp and Kourakin spent many careful hours of labor filming, editing, and deveioping their script, but the sizeable award made the extra effort worhtwhile. The Juniata College Biology Department will make a copy of the movie for its film library.

Daddy! Daddy! Can I See Your Medal?

BY Evagelia "Teddy" Lyras
(second of two articles)

'Hey Steve have you run a marathon yet?'

Steve looks at George. "Hey, you're asking that question very slyly. What's up?"

"What do you mean? I'm just asking out of curiosity." (Sure he is!)

"Well, yes. I have run some. They were O.K. Just the last few miles were the toughest and most grueling. How about you?"

"I've tried a couple also. I never thought I would though. I always looked upon a marathon as an interesting thing to try in the future, but I never actually imagined myself running one. I've run plenty of half-marathons, but I just never enjoyed thinking about a full marathon. The reason I'm asking is because I remember distinctly a conversastion I had with you once. I asked if you ever were planning to run a marathon and you blurted out, 'No! I'm not that crazy!' Then Jack McCullough, remember him? The guy who never missed a day of running no matter what. Jack put in that you once attempted a 50 mile run. You just looked at Jack and mumbled something about being able to make only 30 miles of it."

Silence envelopes between the two men.

The women's voices were rambling on. They too were talking about running. The conversation had turned toward the "torturous" aspect of running. One was saying to the other how her husband has tried to explain to her so many times that he is not going through torture when he runs, but she can never understand his reasoning.

George and Steve pick it up from there. "That's right," says Steve. "I think that it is ridiculous to hurt like that. There is a fine line between hurt and motivation to keep going. If one keeps going even though he hurts tremendously, he is on the border of a masochist. Why should one run if he hurts? No good."

Both wives too have gone on running spurts. They have actually put on a pair of sweats and have gone out to hit the roads. They come in a few minutes later exhausted. They think they have already run a mile or so, when only a few minutes had actually gone by!

"I keep on telling my wife," says George, "that she should be patient with her running. That it takes time. The main object of running (besides maintaining one's physical shape) is enjoyment. Running must not be made a chore. Running should be looked upon as something fun to do, otherwise, stop. That's the problem with so many beginner runners. They want to be good so fast, they don't give their body time to adjust to this change of activity. They eventually become disillusioned because it becomes a chore for them."

Steve would advise a beginner to run every day if possible. Run the distance and pace which suits him, don't worry about what others may be doing. He should possess confidence in himself and be patient for it takes a while for one to become physically and mentally in shape."

Reader: Steve and George are not married and it is not 1998. This was just a setting I made up. Actually Steve and George are two senior JC students. They run for enjoyment. What you have began reading is basically what Steve Hooper and George Anderson have to say about running. But one last word:

According to Steve, running means to him something fun to do, something that purges oneself from his frustrations bringing about relaxation.

George agrees with Steve and adds, "Running is one of the best things. It's good for the overall health because it cleans one's system from impurities. It also improves one's mental discipline. The fact that I run every day is a mental discipline. And to enlarge my mental discipline and will power is great! To a certain extent I should say that by principle,to have enjoyment one must have a little pain too. By pushing myself enough to feel a little pain is a good mental discipline. Running provides me with a physical challange I don't get all the time."

Hockey Club Opens Season

The ice hockey club at Juniata College opened its season last weekend, dropping contests to a pair of awesome foes, Indiana (Pa.), 13-2, and Slippery Rock, 9-1.

Composed of 15 players, the club practices and plays all "home" games at Penn State University. Its 10-game schedule including post-season-tournament play, is the largest schedule in the club's three years of existence.

Last season the Indians were 4-4, with their four wins coming against college clubs who also lacked ice time. The absence of sufficient practice time poses a problem for the team, says advisor-coach Paul Heberling, as little conditioning and strategy can be mounted.

Boosted by a crop of experienced returning players, however, Heberling's as little conditioning and strategy can be mounted.

Boosted by a crop of experienced returning players, however, Heberling's hopes for a good season remain high. He feels his players' dedication will overcome their lack of ice time.

Under Heberling, an associate professor of sociology, the hockey club is self-supporting. Membership fees provide ice-time fees, transportation and other related costs. Players provide their own equipment, excepting a set of goalie gear which was provided by the school two years ago.

Heberling, a native of State College, holds a master's degree in psychology and sociology from Penn State. He played varsity hockey as an undergraduate.

To date this season, assistant captain Ken Roger, junior wing from Wallingford, Del. leads all scorers with two goals. Sophomore defenseman GaRY Hager, Franklin Lakes, N.J., and Mark Casale, sophomore goalie from Johnstown, played well defensively last weekend.

Other games remaining for the Indian club are February 14, Penn State-McKeesport; February 15, Cleveland State; February 21, Penn State; February 22, Lock Haven STate; March 20, Millers ville State; playoffs, March 27-28, April 3-4.

A look into the past — but not a too distant future for some

Wrestlers Suffering From Tough Season

by "Crazy" Joe Kershishnik

The Juniata College wrestling team, entering the match against Frostburg on January 28th with a 1-4 record, was pretty confident they could over-take the visiting Bobcats from Maryland. With the team score of Frostburg 20 and Juniata 18 upon entering the heavyweight bout things looked pretty good for Juniata because the highly touted Scott Simmons seemed to be everyone's choice to win his bout and the match for the Indians. But what appeared to be the obvious did not happen. Frostburg's heavyweight outmuscled and outhustled Scott to win a 9-0 superior decision and thus ensured the win for the Bobcats, 24-18.

Earlier events in the match included Frostburg's Joe Wallace's second period pin of Bob Smith along with a second period pin by Frostburg's Ron Ginsburg over Juniata's Rich Brandt. Juniata got on the scoreboard in the third bout when sophomore Bob Thompson scored a takedown and reversal and then held on to a 1 point lead to decision his opponent. In the next match Juniata again got on the board when Brian Ashworth beat his tough opponent by a score of 4-2. In the next weight class, 150 pounds, Gary Moellers turned out a very gutsy performance only to be beaten 2-0. Again Juniata was unable to get on the board as Frostburg's Dave Macey "danced" his way to a win over Bill Bruner, 11-7. The next match, the 167 pound weight class, was marred by an injury to Frostburg's Mike Endler resulting in the bout being forfeited to Steve Harper. I'm sure Steve would have won in any event, because at the time of the injury he was leading 7-3. The next match, the most exciting of all, featured a 11-4 superior decision by Juniata's 190 pounder, Herk Perry. Herk's win made the score close and well, the rest is history. Talking to coach Berrier later he had these comments to say about the match, "We could have won the match. When it comes down to the heavyweight bout the percentages are in our favor." I couldn't hardly agree with you more coach.

On Friday evening, January 30th, the Indian grapplers traveled to Messiah College to try and take out a frustrating loss to Frostburg on the Falcon mat men. As things turned out though the Falcons were ready and waiting and crushed Juniata by a score of 41-5.

Only two people were able to score for the Kindians and they were Bob Thompson and Scott Simmons. Bob, the 134 pounder, scored a take-down, escape, neutral, and riding time to soundly defeat his opponent by a score of 5-3. Scott, representing the heavyweight division, scored two escapes and his opponent scored a takedown on Scott for a final bout score of 2-2. The Messiah grappler really surprised Scott with his ability and Scott had these words to day, "He was a real strong son of a — gun."

Recalling the other matches in order of weight told of Bob Smith being pinned in the first period, a forfeit at 126 pounds, and Brian Ashworth wrestling a full 8 minutes but being decisioned 6-0. In the next two matches Gary Moeller and Bill Bruner were pinned, respectively. The next two bouts were the most exciting of the match. The 167 pounder, Jay Zimmerman, ran out of gs too early and was decisioned 11-6 and 177 pounder, Jim Ruoss, was pinned at 40 seconds left in the third period. Just before Jim was pinned, the score of his bout was 14-10 with Jim on the lower end. The next match featured Herk Perry who was soundly defeated by a score of 9-2. At the conclusion of this match the record of the Juniata College wrestling team includes 1 win and 6 defeats. The team needs your — voice-terous — support in helping to win our next home match. Be there and let the guys know your behind them all the way. See you there.

Judo News

by Teddy Lyras

Juniata's judo team used to be number one in the East a number of years ago. Then the team sort of died out,but 3 years ago started up again and has been growing ever since under the coaching of Dr. Fisher. This year's team consists of about 14 members.

The team took first place at the Williamsport tournament which it attended earlier in the year. Two Juniatian medalists emerged from this tournament. Kevin Stahl earned two first place medals and Steve Winners got another 1st place medal after winning 4 matches.

Those of you who did not see the judo match against Slippery Rock last week on January 29 sure missed out on the match and a very interesting introduction by Dr. Fisher. Due to an hour delay of Slippery Rock's arrival, the team gave the audience an interesting demonstration of the major judo moves accompanied by Dr. Fisher's explanations.

Those who participate in judo wear a gi — a loose white pants and a shirt — held together by a colored belt which designates rank. One receives a white belt when first starting. Then comes a yellow and green one. There is really not much difference between these but a yellow is closer to the rank of a white one and a green closer to the next froup — the brown belts. There are 3 degrees of browns, then come the black belts of which There are 10 degrees.

The judo team lost a very close match to Slippery Rock, one of the top teams in Eastern United States, 35-29. Winning for the Indians were white belted Kevin Stahl (195), who beat his brown belted opponent by a wazari — giving the team 10 points. Steve Winters (160) also beat his opponent by a wazari as did Denny LaSorda (175), both giving their team 7 points each. 165 pounder Brian Kern beat his opponent by decision, and additional 5 points.

Wayne Sweltz (180) tied with his opponent. Others competing for the Indians were John Wetmore (139), Steve Russ (139), Bob Kwei (206), Brian Smith (175), Barb Frezza (135), and Hollie Kutkowski (115). Barry Epley did not compete due to a hurt shoulder incured during the demonstration.

The judo club is greatly looking forward to the Eastern's which will take place in March and the Nationals which begin in April.

Come out and support the team and wish it luck in its forthcoming competition!

Design Contest

by Residence Hall Assoc.

By now this time the word is out and artists all over campus are probing the inner most corners of their minds to come up with a creative centennial design. This design as everyone knows will be placed on tee-shirts; to be sold to the student body and alumni. Just image your design may be the one everyone is wearing this spring, and if that is not enough incentive the Residence Hall Assoc. has thrown in a $50.00 cash bonus to the winner (plus a free tee-shirt). If I have wet your appetite for instant fame and fortune then read the following entry instructions. Just a note the contest is open to all faculty, students, alumni and administration, with March 10 being the closing date.

Want To Win Hard Cold Cash? ? ? ?

Rules for Contest.....

1. Design is to be made in black and white
2. Draw the design on an 8½ by 11 piece of paper
3. Design should support the theme Juniata Centennial
4. Try to keep the design simple
5. Closing date on all entries is March 10
6. Drop designs off a Post Office on campus
7. There is 25¢ entry fee which which should accompany the design

Mountain Day A Celebration

"Mountain Day," an etching celebrating Juniata College's centennial year, was publicly unveiled Saturday afternoon, January 31, to a gathering of Juniata alumni, students, faculty and administration members. Two hundred impressions of the Steven Barbash work will be offered for sale by the college.

Chairman of Juniata's art department from 1960-70, Barbash has prints in the permanent collections of the Library of Congress, the Bobwin Collection of American Art, the Rochester Museum and the Pushkin Museum in Moscow. His work was recently included in a show at Washington's Jane Haslen Gallery, featuring works by 20 of the most distinguished printmakers in the United States.

Barbash is presently chairman of the art department of the College at Cortland, State University of New York.

According to Peter Marzio, a 1965 Juniata graduate and the youngest man ever to hold the position of curator of prints at the Smithsonian Institution, "For Juniata alumni, Mountain Day carries a special significance. If

A Most Difficult Requirement

by Steve Townsend

It is not mentioned in the PATHFINDER. The catalogue does not list it as a qualification for graduation. Professors largely ignore it. None the less, for some of us merely waking up for morning classes ranks as our most difficult acedemic requirement.

Those of you with the rare quality of being able to cope with early hours have no comprehension of how extremely hard this feat is for the rest of us. For the sleeper, getting up is not just a matter of tossing his feet over the side of the bed, it is an accomplishment of massive proportions. Consider, for example, that alarm clocks have no affect on his deafened ears. Morning sun doesn't blind his dimmed, slit-like eyes, and the fear of missing a required class finds no home within his dull and groggy consciousness. Thus possessed by the demon of the rack, the sleeper must win the grueling battle of exorcism or face the consequences of snoozing through the day.

In my case, those consequences occasionally mount to terribly intolerable levels. At one point this term, after having slept through lunch on three successive occasions, and after having missed two critical lectures and a test, I decided that something drastic must be done. Placing my alarm clock across the room, I reasoned that my arising was assured because I would at least have to get out of bed to shut the thing off. Not so. When Big Ben started to blare his shrill obnoxious song I simply shattered him by tossing a couple of size twelves his way.

That nite, feeling deeply ashamed of my slothful behavior, I took a Flair pen and wrote "Moral reform is the effort to throw off sleep." three-hundred times on the ceiling above my bunk. Yes, tomorrow's strategy would be a mindful one. If I could not be jolted awake I would shame myself into bright and perky awareness. When eight AM rolled around I found myself not only out of bed but sternly intent upon showering and being a contributing force at my early African Politics class. Unfortunately, the sleep demon had not yet been defeated and so I found myself coming to at 12:30 with my face in the drain's hair-pie and warm water splashing across my loins.

About this time I discovered that Elmo Z., a fellow sleeper on the second floor, was also having trouble throwing the sand bags from his chest. Getting together, we decided to attempt the Buddy System. With this arrangement both of the participating parties are given permission to pound the ever living pulp out of the other if he tries to squirm out of going to breakfast. The underlying theory here being that the masculine taste for force will overcome his desire for sleep. Sometimes theories have their soft spots.

On the morning after my deal with Elmo, I shot out of bed and began stumbling down the stairs to his room. Meeting him on the way up, my sleep polluted mind reverted to the old hackneyed hernia ploy.

"Look, I'm sorry big E, but I just can't make breakfast today. Last nite I suffered an inguinal hernia during the IM game."

"That's funny," he said as he turned and went back to his room, "so did I."

And so, as I write this, I am looking at the marks on my calendar which indicate that I have missed seventeen consecutive days of morning classes. But tomorrow it is going to be different. I know because i've just thrown my mattress out of the window vowing to stay awake the entire nite. And I know that won't be too difficult because I slept all day.

Goethe Institute—fascinating

from Agyei Frempong
Strasbourg, France

I found my stay in Germany last summer to be so full of interesting and rewarding experiences that I cannot prevent myself from sharing them with you, my fellow students at J.C., particularly German language students.

I arrived at Frankfurt, Hauptbanhof, on a nice Saturday morning after a tedious all night journey on the train from Paris. I got there with a lot of baggage like a refugee, and hoped a friend who was supposed to meet me would turn up. I wasn't used to hearing people speak so fast in German and I was quite apprehensive about trying the little German I knew. I needn't have worried. No longer was I down than he turned up; quite as prompt as a German train!

Frankfurt turned out to be a hige city with a famous international airport, a large zoo, and a Palmgarden where an ochestra was playing in the summer open sky. I also found the Flea Market and the boat rides on the Main river to be quite amusing.

Three days later, I was on my way to Blaubenren, south-west Germany, where I was to attend the Goethic Institute summer course. The Institution is situated about 12 miles from the University town of Ulm with the famous Ulmer Munster, the highest church steeple on Earth. Tubingen, another famous university town, and Stuttgart are 40 and 50 miles away respectively.

Blaubeuren is a small but very clean town with tennis, soccer and swimming pool facilities. Due to an ancient cathedral, and a beautiful river source, (the Blautopf) it is also a big tourist center; approxamately 50,000 tourists a year.

I found the Goethe Institute course to be one of the best organised language courses. The course participants (200 participants from 50 countries during our course period) were given written test the day after arrivel. The results of this test in addition to a disguised interview during the welcoming process upon arrival, enabled them to place the participants in their appropriate class standards. Classes range from beginners course to advance. Altogether, classes are held for 24 hours a week from Monday to Friday. The basic concentration is on language, however the advance classes treat some culture and civilizations topics. Film shows on German cities and some inductries as well as organized regular encounters with townsmen men an important feature of the course. Also there were organized tours to Lake Constance, Kiel, and Munich. In addition, funds were provided for each class to undertake a small excursion, under an instructors guidance. Most students were housed in German homes which turned out, in most cases, to be quite helpful towards the acquision of the language. The Goethe Institute course is not a simple classroom experience. There you learn and live the language, for hardly have you acquired a new word than you are likely to use it downtown; in the ships, restaurants, on the streets etc. Through newspapers, radio and TV and constant interaction with the people one soon develops a real feeling for the language, its culture and civilization. Although the course duration is short, the progress one makes is quite significnat/ But the greatest benefit of all the new acquaintances and experiences one makes, with its subsequent enhancement of ones outlook is something that goes far beyond what can appear on the transcript sheet.

Be it an excursion in the woods or to a neighboring village with our professor; learning to co-exist with a South African white couple; geting wine instead of source I had ordered for my rice because on "untaut" made all the difference in meaning; eating Zeiebel Luchen (onion pastry) while watching TV with the family I lived with; sightseeing at the Olympia Stadium and Dentches Museum or elbowing my way through one of the biggest beer crowds ever, the "Oktober Fest" in Munich; teaching a student on the train how to pronounce "the" in English—these and many others shall always be vivid images of a summer's experience.

A Serious Energy Problem

Most Americans think of the nation's energy problems — when they think of them at all — in terms of higher fuel prices, the 55-MPH speed limit and perhaps a lower setting on the thermostat. A far more serious and long-term consequence could be a crippled economy and soaring un-employment far beyond what has been experienced in the current recession.

An early warning of this bleak prospect, and the need for preventive measures now, was delivered by a diverse assortment of experts in Philadelphia last week at a Seminar on Energy and Jobs for Pennsylvania. Their message, directed to Pennsylvanians but applicable to others also, is that we are on a collision course with catastrophe in the 1980s and 1990s, if not sooner, unless effective steps are taken to conserve energy and develop alternatives to oil and gas.

The seminar was sponsored jointly by the Franklin Institute and the Pennsylvania Electric Association and thus had a build-in bias toward electric companies. But the objectivity of the Franklin Institute, a non-profit organization highly respected for its scientific research, hardly can be questioned. And many of the speakers could not be called spokesmen for the electric utility industry.

The picture that emerged from thousands of words and hundreds of statistics is essentially three-fold:

- Oil and gas, while they won't run out in this century, are going to become increasingly scarce and expensive and of necissity will be restricted to use for which there is no practical substitute.
- Coal, in great abundance in the world and especially in Pennsylvania, will grow tremendously in importance as an energy source —

PHEAA Receives $53 Million for Student Aid

Fifty-three million dollars in federal student aid money came into Pennsylvania this year, and most it was "captured" for the state's student grant population because of a special requirement mandated by the Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency (PHEAA).

PHEAA, beginning in June of 1975, had required that students applying for state funds under the Higher Education Grant Program also file a Basic Educational Opportunity Grant (BEOG) application. BEOG is a new federal student aid program.

PHEAA administers the state's student aid program, and had made the BEOG application mandatory to ease the pressure on state funds in the grant program. Last year state residents received $7 million in BEOG funds, but filling for BEOG was not mandatory then and the number of eligible students and the size of grants were not significant. Since it become a requirement it has netted $46 million more to Pennsylvania students enrolled in colleges, trade, business and nursing schools throughout the country.

About 50,000 students benefitted by using the combination of PHEAA aid and the BEOG program. Another 10,000 Pennsylvania students who are not participating in the state grant program received federal funds from BEOG, and these are about 70,000 state grant recipients who do not qualify for federal funds due to the rigid income and home ownership eligibility standards.

PHEAA's dual filing requirement became necessary to ease pressures on the state in provate institutions and from $50 to $140 a year in the state supported institutions for veterans and widows with children in postsecondary schools. The surge in the need for aid also arose due to unemployment of parents and difficulty experienced by many students in getting part-time jobs.

During the 1974-75 academic year the federal government had $171 million unspent in their BEOG program. Many students applying to PHEAA for state aid during that year could have met federal standards. When it became mandatory to do so this year, the results proved the need for the double-filing requirement.

Students were eligible for up to $1,400 in federal money per school year. To help state students get their share, PHEAA mailed BEOG applications to the homes of most students and informed the students and informed the students how to go about applying for federal money.

Because of the capturing of BEOG money—largely used for lower income groups—some state funds were able to be released to offer more aid to the middle income family and to those who sent their children to full-charge private institutions where tuition is higher. This ties in with Pennsylvania's philosophy of freedom of choice.

Grants to Pennsylvania students may be used for colleges, business schools, trade or technical institutions or hospital schools of nursing. Students may attend approved out-of-state institutions or in-state schools. About 124,000 Pennsylvanians received state grants for the 1975-76 academic year.

Band Concert—A Success

by Rob Lopresti

Still small, but still dedicated; the Juniata College band, conducted by Ibrook Tower, performed in concert last Sunday in Oller Hall. The program featured a variety of different band sounds and styles.

The opening number was a rousing assortment of tunes from the movie classic "How the West was Won", which the band performed well. The other highlights included "Days of Glory" by John Cacavas and "Festival Prelude" by Alfred Reed, which was probably the best effort of the evening. A difficult and dissonant piece by Charles Ives called "Variations on America" was among the most interesting songs.

The finale consisted of selections by the jazz band, including a beautiful arrangement of Loewe's "On the Street Where You Live" from My Fair Lady.

The thirty-five member band is in the second year of it's current incarnation under the leadership of Mr. Tower. Before this there was a period of several years in which Juniata College had no band. The institution's recovery is a welcomed pleasure. The musical artist's next scheduled performance will be in April.

by Saltz

In Insbruck, Austria the Winter Olympics are almost a week old, and have provided viewers thrills that few other athletic events can surpass. Even though I am a non-skier, the men's downhill race brought me to the edge of my seat as Franz Klammer smashed the hill record and his competition. Shelia Young, an American speed racer furthered the excitement as for the first time a person from the United States took three medals in the Games. Also on the screen we viewers saw the U.S. Hockey team hang on the shirt tails of the Russians and the Czechs giving both a run for their money despite the score.

It was at the moment I watched the Hockey games that the realization finally decended on me that the Czech team had a goalie in the nets that was 32 years old, while the Captain of the U.S. team was a whopping 21 years of age. The commentator of the event made the point that while many of the top players on the Olympic Hockey team from our nation would be offered Pro. Contracts, the Czechs and Russians would keep their amateur status until the day they were planted in the cold Siberean wastelands. Further while the American team would play teams like Harvard and Syacuse for practice, the Russian teams would be scrimmaging the Buffaloe Sabres, Philadelphia Flyers, and the Montreal Canadiens; all top teams in the reknowned N.H.L.

If it isn't the communist nations seeming to skirt the rules of Amateurism by the technicalities their society offers, we can look back to the home front for juicy gossip. The U.S. speedskating coach has stated that we are not as strong a team as we could be as there appears to be politics in the selecting of atheletes for the United States teams.

Really I see that little can be done for the United States dilema except what should be done across this nation, clean up the corruption that has so much power in our society. The aspect of the present day Olympic Contests that I do believe should recieve a great deal of attention is developing definitions of what we are going to consider eligible Olympic Atheletes to be. It would appear that any term that can be defined differently from culture to culture will simply not do in an event the magnitude of the Olympic games. It would also seem ridiculous to insist that an athlete only reach a certian proficiency in his sport or not be eligible for Olympic play, but when it appears that some countries athletes who are dubbed amateurs, can competitivly compete with a nation's top professionals, the one nation is either lacking in athletic prowess, or the terms of professional and amateur are of little meaning.

My suggestion to allieviate some of the discrepancy between the communist and capitalist athletes is to draft a plan such as many athletic conferences do in America today. That is to control the competition by placing age limits, or some other time critereon on the atheletes. One of our biggest gripes is that the Soviet Athlete has more time to train than the American, it may be a workable idea that so many training hours a week be levied on an amateur athlete, or place a limited time period for which an athlete can participate in a sport he is classified other than amateur.

Whatever is done, it would seem important that some new critereon must be found to save the Olympic Competition from suffering do to differences in definition of atheletes. Perhaps it is even more important that if these goals are accomplished, that the world will have taken one step toward finding classifications for human beings that are not bounded by a national interest, but rather are for the sake of the entire world.

Invitation To Sing

by Perry Habecker

In order to musically edify Juniata's centennial celebration, a commencement weekend performance of Giuseppe Verdi's "Messa da Requiem" will be given by the Juniata College Concedert Choir. This work is of such magnitude that the 60 member choir is soliciting the assistance of alumni, friends of the college, and Juniata students. If you enjoy singing and are willing to devote your time and enthusiasm to this production, contact Associate Professor of Music Bruce Hirsch before March 15. An audition will then be arranged.

This monumental romantic oratorio is a complete program in itself. It features a large chorus, four vocal soloists, and a substantial orchestra. A professional orchestra will be hired to play the demanding accompaniment.

A Requiem is a mass for the dead. Verdi wrote it as a tribute to a famous Italian author in 1873. But "Messa da Requiem" is an atypical Requiem. Most Requiems are designed for religious services and are therefore very serious pieces of music. Verdi's work, however, is a concert piece of seven movements, quasi-operatic, and not very adaptable to religious services.

It is difficult to understate the grandiose nature and emotional intensity of the "Requiem". The direction of this work has long been the dream of Professor Hirsch—a dream which will come true this Spring. The "Requiem" will, without a doubt, be the pinnacle of commencement and centennial activities.

Center Board

by David Corman

Well, this is the last weekend of the term to safely hang-up studing for a few hours and indulge in some nonacademic fun — and Center Board has the things to do and places to go:

Thursday, February 12. As part of the 75-76 Artist-Series, Center Board is presenting "Bob Greene's World of Jelly Roll Morton" in Oller Hall at 8:15 p.m. STudents tickets are free in advance at Ellis Information Desk. All tickets at the door will be $5.00.

Friday, February 13. The CB flick for this Friday night is "Johnny Got His Gun." (ONE show only at 8:00 p.m. in Oller Hall; 50¢ admission.) Then, beginning at 10:30 p.m. in the Main Dining Room in Ellis Hall, It's Casino Night, sponsored in conjunction with the J Club and Lady Luck (this Friday, especially!)

Saturday, February 14. In cooperation with Center Board, the Masque Club will present it's production "Enter Laughing" at 8:15 p.m. in the Ballroom.

Sunday, February 15. And in case you missed the Saturday night performance, "Enter Laughing" will be performed again at 2:00 p.m. in the Ballroom.

Dr. Hartman To Oppose "Off-Campus" Alternative

by A. E. Boomhower

It has been a policy of the college in past years to allow seniors to live off-campus if they wish to do so provided that they follow certain guidelines. It now appears that this option is in serious trouble. In speaking with Dr. Hartman this past week, I was informed that "a senior will not be able to live off-campus simply because he (or she) wants to." He also stated that veterans would not be forced to live on campus, and I would assume that off-campus lifestyle will still be available for married students and unwed mothers. However, for the average student, this option will soon be closed.

Granted, the impetus for this decision is largely economic, and the addition of seniors who would normally live off campus to the dormitories would help these economic problems; however, there is a larger issue at stake, and one which Dr. Hartman is more than willing to argue. He states, in particular, three reasons for keeping seniors on campus. The first is a catch-all statement that goes something like ". . .the college has social as well as educational goals to fulfill." Secondly, he stated that there is a need for a "homogeneous" mix of students in the dormitories, and Dr. Hartman feels that underclassmen, in particular, Freshmen, should be "socialized" by their only slightly older, but greatly more experienced peers, i.e. the upperclassmen. I would have to assume that in this case he means seniors since this is the group effected by the decision. Finally, Dr. Hartman states that "18 year-olds have not proven that they are adults, and able to be treated as such."

I would like to examine the arguments made by Dr. Hartman, and also add some of my own. Let me first admit my own biases. I am currently a senior and live off-campus. I feel that adults should be able to determine the lifestyles they wish to live without interference from other institutions, i.e. the college, government, or family. Secondly, I feel that the off-campus lifestyle is beneficial to some students for reasons of privacy, diet, or whatever. Since the college is unwilling to argue this point on purely monetary grounds, I have a foothold from which to argue my points.

The first argument is that the college has social as well as educational goals to fulfill. Without arguing as to what those goals might be, I would like to ask how those goals can be met in four years better than they can in three. I am not arguing that the dormitories do not provide a valuable social experience, they do. The question is one of time periods. By a student's junior year he or she has established friendships and social circles which will continue through the senior year. Off-campus students meet new people with which they establish relationships just as on-campus students do, and these relationships have equally as much social value, if not more, as relationships established in the dormitories.

The second argument by Dr. Hartman is probably the weakest in application. This says something about a "homogeneous" mix of students in the dorms and about upperclassmen socializing Freshmen. The idea is to have a random distribution of students, in this case by class, spread over the campus. Any ecologist will tell you that random distributions are seldom found in nature. Like species attract like, and clumping occurs. Barring sarcasm, we all know that this occurs. Classes clump together in groups of eight; in East Houses, and in the dining hall. The theory is just not practical. What about the off-campus students? Off-campus students tend not to clump on one street or in one area. They spread out. I currently live beside a young couple with a child, and on the other side, an elderly lady. What could be more "homogeneous" than that?

Concerning Dr. Hartman's third argument that 18 year-olds have not proven that they are adults, I would like to add some thoughts. The "New Curriculum" was devised with the notion that, with guidance, 18 year-olds could act as adults in determining their own futures. By the time students were seniors, they were thought to be adults, able to evaluate their own values, and the direction which their lives would take. I still feel that that is a safe premise. Few seniors have shown that they are unable to cope with this adult responsibility. This includes the choice of lifestyle. The "New Program", one which Dr. Hartman was instrumental in, is rapidly becoming old and stale. What Dr. Hartman is speaking of is in loco parentis. That died in the sixties, and the administration has no right to play God by resurrecting the dead.

B-Ball Team Suffers Defeat

by Evagelia "Teddy" Lyras

The Juniata Indians showed their bravery and strength against the deadly shooting of the Royals of the University of Scranton. Despite frantastic management of the ball and the boards, the team suffered very heartbreaking loss, 53-52.

Starting for the Indians were Tom Bickel, Roger Galo, Don Martin, Tim Tabor and Doug Waszo.

During th first half the offense had very good ball control and was continually looking for the good shot. We were getting the bounds at back ends and continually tagged along behind Scranton's deadly outside shooting. The players left the court at half time with the score 32-31 in their opponents favor.

Our Indians came back and played real aggression. We had good bounding positions and at the 13:50 mark the score was tied 40-40. At the 12:45 mark we took the lead 41-40 and by the 8:30 mark we had a 3 point lead. Right down to the last second we had a real good exciting game which ended in a tie 49-49.

We went into overtime (5 minutes) which proved to be very exciting and fast-moving. Scoring during over time for the Indians were Roger Galo and one foul shot from Tim Tabor, but somehow the Royals managed to outdo us by one point by the time the buzzard rang.

We may have lost, but as I heard a spectator comment that this was the best game our team ever pllayed and felt very proud of them. After all he continued, "Scranton is one of the top teams in the nation and they beat us by about 15-20 points at their place."

The top scored for the evening was Tabor with 16 points followed by Galo with 13 points, Flannery and Martin both with 8 points, and Bickel and Waszo both with 4 points.

Congratulations for a very well played game and good luck on Friday against York (home)!

Energy Problem

necessitating resolve of environmental problems in mining and burning it.

- And dependence on electric power will escalate at a phenomenal rate — especially for industrial purposes affecting plant location decisions and jobs.

Electric companies want — and should have — a rate structure that will enable them to attract the capital investment required to start building the generating plants that will be needed in the 1980s and beyond, and to complete plants under construction. But there are honest differences of opinion as to precisely what those rates should be for individual electric companies applying for increases.

Perhaps the core of the problem was best stated by John R. Bunting, chairman of the First Pennsylvania Corporation. Noting there are wide-spread doubts among the populace that there really is an energy problem, Mr. Bunting said: "It is remarkable how people persist in believing what they want to believe in the face of incontrovertible evidence to the contrary."

Wrestling Coach Bill Berrier looks on with a watchful eye as his wrestlers take to the mat.

Juniata Wrestlers Drop Two Matches Last Week

by "Crazy" Joe Kershishnik

On Wednesday, February 4th, the JC mat-men ended a 6 match losing streak by, would you believe it, tying the Penn State-Altoona campus 25 to 25.

Running over the events of the match were these outcomes. At 118 pound Bob Smith was delighted in finally having a match forfeited to him. The next two saw Rich Brandt of Juniata Being pinned in the first period and Bob Thompson was pinned at 1:22 left in the third period. In the next match we saw the Indians tie the score at 12 all when Brian Ashworth was somehow able to hurt his opponent, Mike Solomon. Mike couldn't continue so Brian won by default. The 150 pound bout saw Juniata's Gary Moellers being pinned in the third period. In the 158 pound class Bill Bruner lost an 8-4 decision. In the next match JC's Steve Harper put the clamps on Altoona's proviously unbeaten Mark Ivory. Steve completely dominated his opponent, 15-5, which earned him a superior decision. At this point JC was behind only by the score of 16 to 21. The next match featured Jay Zimmerman who fought bravely to keep off his back. His opponent scored a superior decision to up the score 25 to 16. By this time almost the only way JC could win was to have two consecutive falls. Herk Perry, the 190 pounder, tried his best to pin his opponent but was severely hampered by a deep gash over one eye sustained in the match. Herk hung in there, scored a few more points, and decisioned his opponent 13-7. At this point the score was 19 to 25 and Juniata's best hope was for a tie. Scott Simmons, our heavy heavyweight, came through and decked his opponent in the second period. Through Scott's efforts we were able to salvage a 25 to 25 tie.

Before the match officially was under way two preliminary bouts took place. The first exhibition saw Chris Miller being pinned in the third period and in the second exhibition Jim Ruoss decisioned his man, 9 to 5.

* * * *

Last Saturday evening the JC wrestlers made another valiant attempt to log a win but only to be frustrated once again in the end. The strategy to win was plain and simple. "If the light weights can stay off their backs then we got a shot at winning," as remarked by Coach Berrier. As it turned out the light weights did stay off their backs and we did have a shot at winning. Our 118 pounder, Bob Smith, was ridden very hard by his opponent but Bob did not break. He suffered a 14-0 bout score but most important to him is that he wasn't pinned. The same could be said of Rich Brandt, our 126 pound er, who suffered a 13-3 bout score Bob and Rich deserve all the credit in the world for their personal determination to gut it out and not be pinned! Bob Thompson got the tribe on the board by using 3 takedowns, a near fall, escape, and riding time to score a 10-2 superior decision. Brian Ashworth, our 142 pounder, also put on quite a show as displayed by two near-falls, a takedown, reversal, and riding time. Brian's 10-0 bout score gave him a superior decision, worth 4 team points. Our 150 pounder, Gary Moellers, was just beaten in the last two seconds of his bout and he came out on the shorter end of an 8-7 score. Not in one of the first 5 bouts was a JC wrestler pinned! Then came Bill Bruner's turn to wrestle and his luck was not so good. Bill was shown the lights in the second period. Juniata rebounded in the next match as Steve Harper decisioned his man 14-10. At this point the score was JC-11 and Scranton—17. With three matches to go the Indians were still in the running. The next match was very important as Coach Berrier sent Jim Ruoss to the circle. Jimmy gave ithis all but was really no match for the highly tounted Scranton wrestler, Joe Lawrence. Jim suffered a superior decision against him as the final bout score was 17-8. The strategy here on in for Scranton was to just stay off their backs, because Juniata could still win with two straight falls. Herk Perry's opponent followed those instructions right down to the end. Herk's opponent wrestled the entire match using defensive techniques and thus Herk was only able to decision his man, 2-1. Next to the grappling wars rambled Scott "Chicken" Simmons who wrestled very aggressively to win his bout, 7-1.

Before the main events of the evening there was one exhibition bout. Juniata's Joe Kershishnik found himself looking at the lights in the third period.

On Saturday the Indians will close out the regular season with a triple dual against Elizabethtown, Lycoming, and Lebanon Valley at Elizabethtown. To date the record of the JC grappling team is 1-7-1.

Girls B-Ball News

by "Crazy" Joe Kershishnik

The evening of February 4th proved to be disasterous for the JC womens' b-ball team. Our Indians played host to the Indians of Indiana University of Pa. The final score was JC 32 and IUP 74.

But all the game was not totally dominated by Indiana. Our girls were tough of defene and leading during the first ten minutes but from then on the tide was turned against us. The much taller Indianettes of Indiana took control of the boards at both ends and found that magic touch of how to put the ball through the hoop consistently. Add to this an aggressive defense which stifled JC and you have a half time score of JC 11 and IUP 32. During the second half IUP kept up their winning formula of crashing the boards and playing a real tough defense. As the game progressed, both teams started to play a run and shoot offense. The big punch for the home team came from Mardi Frye and Jan Edgar with 15 and 8 points, respectively. Others who made the scoring column were Kim Norris-4, Janet Bechtel-2, Kathy Dickey-2, and Sandy Shrey-1. The next home game for the Indianettes is February 18th against a tough St. Francis outfit.

represents the belief in tradition, in a tranquil past when scholarship human fellowship, and a love of nature formed a healthy triumvirate. Steve Barbash's etching captures this unity and interprets it as only one who was there could."

Marzio, one of the leading authorities in the country on printmaking, continues: "The true artist-etcher, such as Steven Barbash, does each step himself. Both the art and the techniques for producing 'Mountain Day' were his responsibility. In a sense, each impression printed by Barbash is a unique work of art, for the plate is never inked in exactly the same way, nor does the ink spread across the paper in a regular fashion."

"Impressions which didn't please him were destroyed, while each acceptable print is slightly different from the one before. Technically, Barbash's etching is as good as any beign made in America today."

"Rich in emotion and memory, the etching spins a subtle spell, reaching beyond any particular moment or place to a general feeling for nature. 'Mountain Day' is a forest memory, which for many Juniatians should be an important artistic memento."

Harvard Political Scientist Chosen As Juniata's Will Judy Lecturer

HUNTINGDON, PA. — Dr. Samuel H. Beer, Eaton Professor of the Science of Government at Harvard University, will be the 1976 Will Judy Lecturer at Juniata College.

President-elect of the American Political Science Association, Dr. Beer offered his general lecture, "Order and Disorder in Modern Society," Monday, Mar. 15, at 8:15 p.m. in Alumni Hall of the Brumbaugh Science Center.

Dr. Beer, whose special interest is comparative politics, will discuss the concept that modernization — not capitalism — is the root of both the order and disorder of our time.

His selection for the lectureship was announced by Dr. Martin Clark, assistant professor of sociology and religion and coordinator of the Will Judy Lectures this year.

In addition to offering the general lecture, Dr. Beer held an open forum at 3 p.m. Tuesday, Mar. 16, in the faculty lounge of the Ellis College Center. Political issues, including this year's elections, were the topics of discussion. Dr. Beer also addressed two political science classes Tuesday at 9 and 11 a.m.

A graduate of the University of Michigan, where he received the A.B. degree summa cum laude in 1932, Dr. Beer was selected as a Rhodes Scholar and earned the B.A. degree with first class honors in history at Balliol College, Oxford, England. He received his Ph.D. in political science from Harvard in 1943 and his dissertation earned both the Bowdoin and Toppan Prizes.

When discussing order and disorder, Dr. Beer sees an imbalance between the public and private sectors of the American political system. There has been, he believes, immense and continuing government growth and, on the other hand, a decline and decomposition of political parties. He cites as an example the numerous candidates for this year's Democratic presidential nomination.

Dr. Beer feels that the trouble today is not polarization of politics, as it was in the thirties, but fragmentation. Society, he holds, "has lost the capacity to act in concert," and the need for coherent, informed political action grows ever greater as the Review of the Educational Program at J.C.

By Tom Katz

At the beginning of the '70's Juniata College gave intensive study to the meaning of a liberally educated individual. From this work came the definition that such a person should be reflective and interpretive; capable of functioning as an autonomous being. Further, this reevaluation brought about the "new" educational program, designed to prepare the student to exercise mature judgment and accept responsibility for her or his thoughts and actions.

Recently it was felt that another look should be taken at the effectiveness of Juniata's system. I talked with Mr. Croce, a member of the Executive Committee in charge of this reevaluation, about what had transpired. He explained that it was felt that the members of the school were increasingly gearing to narrow vocational interests and, in the process, missing certain advantages of a liberal arts education. This view was backed by Mr. Croce citing the

College Center Director Post To Be Revised

By Sally Kalkenbaugh and A.E. Beamesderfer

Over the vacation period, while we were all gone, an administrative decision was made that directly affects student social life. The position of College Center Director has been eliminated and replaced with an as yet untitled job, which will involve similar but more extensive duties and supervising activities. This decision will suspend Sally Pennington's position, while giving her the option to reapply for the new job category.

There have been differences of opinion between the authors of this article and Dr. Hartman concerning this issue, however, we wish to impress upon the issue and the discussion of action are based on two different viewpoints: those of the students and the administration. They are not a reflection of Dr. Hartman's competence or dedication.

The new job description will be distributed at a later date, but a preference will be given here. "The individual will be expected to have counseling qualifications,

By "Saltz"

If you have been watching the six-o'clock news about two weeks ago, you would have heard Walter Cronkite talking about some of the problems the Air Carriers have been having lately with determining what is considered dangerous cargo. It seems that no one is able to define or enforce what types of cargo should be hauled in what type of aircraft.

You may at this point, after reading the opening paragraph, be saying to yourself what kind of screwed up article is this. The purpose here is to enlighten you folks, that the next time you sit down in your seat aboard a Boeing 707 that there may be a culmination of cargo in that aircraft's hold, that would turn you green around the gills. According to the news release, two passenger aircraft in the last year or so have crashed and burned due to either inappropriate cargo such as highly corrosive acids, military ammunitions, etc., or to improper loading of the aircraft.

As you may know, many of the commercial airlines fly their flights at fairly high altitudes such as 30 to 40 thousand feet above sea level. At this altitude a break in the aircraft's fuselage, for example if acid leaks occur in the cargo hold, causes rapid decompression, thusly inhibits the flight crew's ability to operate the aircraft. Of course it should be fairly easy for the reader to understand how explosives, if detonated in some manner, could seriously disturb the flight of a commercial passenger airliner. The point of this discussion here is that almost all passengers get on their flight, and know nothing about the potential hazards stored in that cargo hold, and perhaps would not make the flight if they had the knowledge that the airlines conveniently do not include in our information.

Another critical factor that affects how an aircraft will fly is how much cargo weightwise an airplane can hold, as well as its proper distribution in the airplane. This is called weight and balance data, and in some commercial aircraft is a very critical and tedious job. I have no documented data as to how many commercial aircraft have crashed due to this problem, but in my flight training, I have heard some hairy tales from instructors who used to be employed for airlines where the line crew seriously hindered the safe operation of a commercial flight because they were stuck with more baggage than the airplane would hold properly, and loaded it up anyway. One of my instructors related the following story to me. He was working in the loading of airplanes for a very prominent airline in this country.

The line crew had finished loading a passenger carrying airplane within the weight and balance specifications. The airplane could take 60 more pounds in the rear baggage compartment, the problem was that there was 600 pounds of baggage that they wanted to load on board. When they told their supervisor of the dilemma, he said to load all the baggage and to quit worrying. They did so, and when the pilot of the plane returned to the airport about a week later, he relayed the story to the line crew in quite an angry manner. It seems that he not only nearly crashed the plane during takeoff, as it wouldn't become airborne as it should have normally, but also almost didn't make it over the Appalachian Mountain Range. Also, while he was to fly his flight at 30,000 feet, his airplane, because it was overloaded, wouldn't climb higher than 12,500 feet. No doubt that the passengers on board that airplane on that flight had no idea how close they had come to becoming crash and burn statistics. Indeed the frightening aspect of this whole situation is there is no way the passengers of a commercial flight know anything of their hazardous situation until the Captain relays over the intercom, that the passengers should prepare themselves for a forced landing, or worse yet, when everyone on board is aware of the crash at the same time, when they hit the ground. So there we sit, fat, happy, drunk, and stupid until someone dies.

You are probably wondering, what is this guy trying to do, scare us with one incident so that we will never climb aboard another airliner to go to our vacation in Fort Lauderdale? Unfortunately I know of other incidents that are at least as frightening, and it would appear that overloading commercial airliners is not the exception but rather something closer to the rule. What I hope this article does do is make you the reader a little more aware of what you are subjecting yourself to when you fly commercially. Also I hope that at least some of you will raise a stink to the Federal Aviation Administration, as they feel that until there is a sufficient number of crashes due to improper loading techniques, there is no problem.

Humanities Day: New Effort to Recruit Students

By Rob Lopresti

This past Sunday and Monday Juniata College played host to a group of prospective students as part of the revitalized admissions program. "Humanities Day" gave more than twenty students from as far away as New Jersey and New York a chance to see what life s at the school is like.

According to Professor Betty Cherry, the program's purpose was to give prospective humanities students "a twenty-four hour emersion in campus life." Those involved have been accepted, but haven't decided whether or not to attend Juniata.

The Humanities Day theme called for the guests to see both everyday and special college events, and so they were invited both to Sunday's choir concert and Monday's Humanities classes. Other features were a reception for choir members, the Russian movie The Inspector General, a student art exhibit, and opportunities to talk to faculty and students.

The prospective Juniatians were put up in dorm rooms, as another opportunity to see what college life is like. Attempts had been made to match the host to the guest, so that a music major, for example, would be in a hall with some music majors.

The people mainly responsible for arranging rooms for the guests and hosting their stay at the college are the members of the Students Admissions Committee. This is a group of JC students who have volunteered to help the admissions program. Among the members most involved were Bob Orr, Karen Lotz, Rob Dintruff, Cindy Bennett, Dave Kraft, and Marilyn Fletcher.

According to Professor Cherry, the prospective Juniatians were invited by both letters and phone calls, and the concerted effort produced a better-than-average response. She describes the program as a "pilot experiment".

Letter to the Editors

The article "Goethe Institute — Fascinating" from Agyei Frempong, Strasbourg, France (The Juniatian Nr. 13, Feb. 12, 76) caused me to write the following article, which is not overflowing with the content and exuberant joy like that of our J.C. fellow student in Europe.

Being an exchange student from Europe (Brethren Colleges Abroad exchange program, 1 year) I am not satisfied with my stay here at J.C. There are different reasons. Regardless of the U.S. political, social and cultural value system and its corresponding way of life, which, of course, is different from what I have been used to know at home and which is worth to be learned to know and to be thought about whether it is the only way leading to spiritual and economic welfare, I dare to say, that this Juniata College may be interesting but not overwhelmingly rewarding. Actually this place is boring.

I am missing diverse things which made A. Frempong's stay in Europe so "fascinating" as he puts it. I am not looking for a 1 year vacation at J.C. Being a student (of English and Geography) I am willing to study. But as the purpose of my exchange program is not only simple classroom experience, and as the reality is as it should not be, I don't like the situation I am in right now.

Learning the language is one thing, however, how about getting to know the "Land und Leute," the common U.S. people in their particular culture and environment? When the extracurricular social life is completely concentrated on the campus, sooner or later there has to arise what soldiers call "barracks' tantrum," and many well planned possibilities of social activities on campus are doomed to turn out to be little appealing. The feeling to be a student for seven times 24 hours a week can hardly be promotive of a reasonable socialization.

If I hadn't undertaken some private, enormous efforts to see that the U.S.A. does not only consist of the isolated, private middle class Juniata College, which is a kind of lonely enclave in a more or less friendly vicinity of the village of Huntingdon, there would hardly be anything "that goes far beyond what can appear on the transcript sheet" (A. Frempong).

This one year at J.C. is an additional year to my normal studies at home, it doesn't count on the list of years I have to go

Juniata Graduate Goes On To Volunteer Service

Graduation from college brings with it a number of decisions with one major concern being "What's next?" For JoAnn Bowman, a 1975 Juniata graduate from New Carlisle, OH, the answer was a year of service through Brethren Volunteer Service (BVS). She stated, "Knowing several people who had completed BVS and had very positive experiences helped me to decide to join."

JoAnn's BVS experience began in November of 1975 with a five-week training unit which was shared by 27 volunteers. The training program was designed to focus on individual motivations for service, personal growth through group living and working, and awareness of social and world issues such as hunger, life styles, non-violence and human equality. The unit also had special emphasis on Christian Discipleship. During training, JoAnn accepted a one-year assignment with the Neighborhoods Uniting Project which is located outside of Washington, D.C., in Brentwood, Maryland.

"When I originally applied, I had several overseas positions relating to French in mind, but before entering BVS I had decided to remain in the States, serving in an area such as ethnic studies," Ms. Bowman recalled. At Neighborhood Uniting Project, JoAnn was assigned a post of community organizer. She is responsible for organizing people, who are mainly lower middle class blue collar workers, around such issues as new schools, low-cost loans, health clinics and rent rebates for senior citizens, protests against utility hikes and installation of foreign language books in public libraries. About the situation, JoAnn said, "The neighborhoods are greatly in need of organized development after several decades of bad planning and exploitation...it's rewarding to watch otherwise resigned and apathetic citizens come alive through their fights against injustice."

Ms. Bowman credits her liberal arts education (B.A. in French - Education) for preparing her to deal with many aspects of her job. She also feels she is acquiring many new skills through practical experience and is realizing the potential of community organization. After being on her project for four months, she said, "There's no doubt that at the end of my year's commitment, I, too, will be able to record a very positive BVS experience."

Juniata Grad helping turn apathy into an active fight against injustice for lower middle class.

Archeologist/Historian Visits Juniata Campus

HUNTINGDON — Roland W. Robbins, a professional consultant on American Heritage Landmarks and their preservation and restoration, will spend the next two weeks on the Juniata College campus as an artist in residence. His visit comes as part of the college's bicentennial course, "Founding a Nation."

During the past 30 years, Robbins has excavated many early American settlements, industries, colonial military fortifications and 17th, 18th and 19th-century tidal water docking sites. He unearthed the site of Thoreau's Walden Pond house near Concord, Mass.; the ruins of Pilgrim John Alden's 1627 home in Duxbury, Mass.; Shadwell, the birthplace of Thomas Jefferson, near Charlottesville, Va.; and the site of the Rev. Samuel Parris Parsonage, where the witchcraft hysteria originated in Salem Village in 1692.

All of Robbins' projects have been meticulously documented with "before, during and after" photo sequences. His personal collection exceeds 20,000 documented color slides, from which all of his illustrated lectures are prepared.

Robbins' first public lecture is scheduled for 8:15 p.m. this Thursday, March 18, in Alumni Hall on the Juniata campus. At that time he will present "Hidden America," a combination slide presentation — lecture which highlights his most important "digs," discoveries and restorations.

During Robbins' stay on the Juniata campus, he will also be available as a guest speaker to interested community organizations. He will speak at the Huntingdon Rotary Club at noon Tuesday. Additional arrangements can be made through Ralph B. Church, associate professor of English at Juniata.

Juniata College Receives Shell Foundation Grants

HUNTINGDON, PA — Juniata College has been awarded grants amounting to $2,000 by the Shell Companies Foundation of Houston, Texas, it was announced recently by Dr. Frederick M. Binder, Juniata president.

Known as the Shell Assists, the conribution is divided into four separate grants of $500 each. One of the four is unrestricted and can be used for any purpose designated by the president of the college. The other three grants provide support for financial aid, general faculty development and departmental assistance for science and mathematics faculty members.

This is the tenth consecutive year that Juniata has been selected for participation in the Shell Assist program. During the past academic year the unrestricted grant was used for partial support of the work of the college's Centennial Observances Committee. In addition to providing a $500 scholarship for an outstanding science major, the grants also aided faculty members in attending appropriate conferences and assisted in publication costs.

According to Dr. Binder, "The continuted support by the Shell Assists has been a valuable asset to our educational program."

The Shell Companies Foundation, Inc., was established in 1953 as a means of providing for consistent planning and coordination of philanthropic activities. The Foundation continues to make contributions designated to aid education and to help support organizations in other areas serving the general welfare.

A New Opportunity

SCHENECTADY, N.Y. — (I.P.) — The desire of many college students today for community and small-group living offers college fraternities "a new opportunity to renew their service to education," Union College President Thomas N. Bonner told delegates attending a two-day symposium on fraternities.

In what he termed a "manifesto of purpose," Dr. Bonner urged fraternities to:

be "open, objective and bold" in seeking an "intellectually varied and emotionally stable" membership;

play a leadership role in solving campus problems;

eliminate "sexist attitudes toward women" as part of fraternity life;

develop a better program of communications and public education on an off the campus "to highlight their purposes and overcome the images of the past."

"Recent years have been less than kind to fraternities," said Dr. Bonner, noting the controversy of the 1950's over fraternity classes excluding blacks and Jews. But fraternities can regain their prominence, he said.

"Might As Well Finish Signing Off Our Death Notices"

by Evagelia "Teddy" Lyras

In the process of trying to start a girls' spring track team, I have been out trying to round up some victims. Many great prospects have been found and some were completely converted or as some say "addicted" to running after the first few days, an amazingly short period. The "victims" or "prospects" reacted differently to the conversion process they underwent. Many psychological tricks were used, maybe even abused. But who cares, as long as they worked, as they did.

I started my recruiting in the fall, pressed harder during the winter term telling them all sorts of odds and ends, telling them all the benefits, etc. they would receive and other kinds of propaganda (truthful propaganda, though), then I finally gragged some out into the cold winter weather for a nice, little run.

We all had a good time, tiring, but still a good time. Plenty of jokes were cracked on the way, not by the victims of course, but anyway, some were appreciated and some were . . . oh well, not really . . . I guess one can say not really wanted, but they continued anyway.

I heard a lot of stuff in the beginning, like, "I don't know why I am doing this!" or "I really must be crazy!" or "Whoever heard of doing this in the middle of February? Boy is this world crazy! Really crazy!"

The question that pestered the prospects most was "How far? How far are we going to run?" And that was one question to which they never received a straight answer. Never. Oh, I would mumble some worthless comment something of the sort that we will go some ways over there then that way then this way. Naturally they had no idea where I was talking about and that's how I intended to let it remain. They were not supposed to know how far. All they were supposed to know was the impression I left them with that they would not be going too far. But then again, how far is far?

Our warm-up came next. Monkey see, monkey do took place. Stretching exercises were demonstrated and copied by the fabulous prospects. Remarks like, "Ugh, I can't do this. I'm too out of shape. I can't even do this easy thing, my rubber tires are in the way." After another try, they cut themselves up some more and added that they still couldn't believe they were this crazy! Some were pooped upon completing this first section and they still had two more sections left, their run, and warm-down. "Oh, well," they sighed, "might as well get it over and start now," in other words, "might as well finish signing off our death notices. What idiots we are!"

Next week's article will concentrate on the signing off of their so-called death notices.

Round-ballers End Home Season On Good Note

By Joseph R. Kershishnik Jr.

The Juniata Indians basketball team played their last home game of the 1975-76 season against the Falcons of Messiah College. In front of a rather light crowd the Indians and Falcons exchanged leads several times. Neither team could build any substantial lead and the half ended with a 30 to 28 ?score, the Falcons on top. Through most of the second half the game was very very close but near the closing minutes Messiah made a few mistakes of which Juniata took full advantage and successfully capitalized. With 7:57 left on the clock JC commanded a 5 point lead and never relinquished it. With very aggressive ball playing and wise use of the bench the Indians handed the Messiah Falcons a 63 to 56 loss. Two JC round-ballers hit double figures with Roger Galo canning 18 points and Tim Tabor, who has come on very strong in the point production department the last few games, hitting on 17 points. The rest of the scoring was by Jeff Flannery-8, Donny Martin-8, Bob McNelly-6, and 2 points apiece was scored by Doug Waszo, Tom Bickel, and Randy Roberty.

To round out the season basically I believe it can be called a dismal one when strictly looking at our record. The silver lining in this dark cloud is that a lot of freshmen gained varsity experience. An optimistic outlook can be guessed for next season.

But to me the more important issue is that a group of young adults were involved in a very competitive experience and I want to expand this thought to include all ages, both sexes, and at all levels of organized athletic activity. To win is the material goal of the specific activity but I feel for a person to have learned something in the process is the most beneficial achievement.

Baseball & Tennis: What's in Store This Spring

By Dward Farkward

Well it's spring term again, though you wouldn't know it from the weather, and time to think spring thoughts. They say that spring is when boys turn their minds to thoughts that girls have been thinking all winter. I'm not exactly sure of that, but I do know that spring means baseball, tennis, track, and golf to just about everyone. Throughout the years Juniata has always fielded tough teams in almost all spring sports and this year should prove to be no exception.

The tribe baseball team will be looking to reverse its disappointing record of last year. High hopes were held for the Indian sluggers in their 1975 season, but a defense that committed more errors than Ali Baba had thieves led to their downfall. This year coach Bill Berrier is looking for improvement over the entire ball club.

The pitching staff, which saw no graduations, should be improved by the addition of freshmen Mike Stone, Bill Turner, and Jeff Flannery. A new and improved infield will be backing up our hurlers. Coach Berrier gave me the impression that the shoddy defensive play of the '74 and '75 seasons will not be seen this year, I hope so.

A lot of raw power will be absent from the J.C. batting lineup this year. However, coach Berrier plans to make up for that by constructing a lineup of nine good steady hitters. Look for the tribe to combine a lot of hits with their overall fair speed to score a lot of runs.

This year's club, with its influx of good freshmen to compliment the ten returning lettermen could be a big winner for J.C. this spring.

The male tennis team will be opening their 1976 season with the hope of matching their nine and five record of last year. All hope of improving their record this year was abandoned with the loss of the number one and five seeded players. This has forced a drastic shake-up in the lineup that has resulted in some players being seeded over their playing ability. This problem combined with the team's overall inexperience leads me to feel that it will be a long and unprofitable season for the tennis team. I hope I'm wrong.

Next week I'll be taking a look at the track and golf team and later the girls spring sports. So long, until later.

It is estimated that the annual commercial catch of sharks off the California coast totals 400,000 pounds.

Juniata To Light Tennis Courts

Juniata College's Raffensperger Tennis Courts, located beside Ellis College Center, will soon have "club-caliber" lighting, it was announced by Dr. Frederick M. Binder, college president.

Contributions amounting to more than $15,000 have been donated by Juniata alumni and friends with special interests in tennis and in the improvement of the college's present tennis facilities.

According to Walter Nadzak, Jr., director of athletics, the college has ordered sixteen 1,000-watt metal halide lamps, six galvanized steel poles and other necessary equipment. Delivery is expected within a few weeks and the equipment will be installed shortly thereafter, weather permitting.

Lighted courts will provide increased recreational opportunities for Juniata students, faculty and staff and for the community in general.

The system will provide 22 foot-candles of light, which falls into the "club" category of outdoor lighting. The new lights will be superior to "recreational" lighting and just slightly below "tournament" quality.

Coin-operated meters will control the use of the system. According to Nadzak, meters will offset the operational costs of the system and will discourage indiscriminate use of the lights.

Nadzak also noted that the lights will be protected by unbreakable transparent lens coverings.

Juniata Women's Basketball Team Defeats Penn State-Altoona

On Tuesday, February 10, our Juniata Indians soundly defeated the Altoona Cougars to a score of 70-44. The Cougars' only hope was freshman Kelly Sparr who previously had been averaging over 30 points a game. However, at this second meeting between the two teams, the Indians played spectacular defense, and allowed Sparr only 10 points!

The Juniata women were easily able to break Altoona's press, and played with much poise and confidence. The half time score was JC-38, PSA-32, with Altoona being able to stay in the game up until then only by hitting the long shots. However, at the 12:13 mark in the second half, our Indians ran up the score to a 51-37 lead, and were working well inside the key. The final score was JC-70, PSA-44, with Jan Edgar making 22 points, Kim Norris - 12, Sandy Shrey - 9, and both Alison Reeves and Cathy Dickey scoring 8 points each. Also, Mardi Frye scored 4 points, Jacque Prentiss - 3, Karen Bantley - 2, and Jan Becktel - 2 points. Congratulations gals and good luck with the rest of your season!

A Shot To The Ivory Tower Theory

by A.E. Boombower

Faculty wives are probably the most discriminated against women in the academic community. These women are largely overeducated for their livelihoods, and particularly in a community such as Huntingdon with a limited job market, or are unable to find the type of work they are trained to do.

Fortunately, this college does not have an antinepotism rule which hampers many women in other academic settings. In particular, many colleges and universities prohibit two individuals in the same family from working together. This means that when one individual in the family is hired, most commonly the husband, the wife must follow along hoping to find work in the area that is not associated with the academic institution. The Blaisdells, the Masters, and the Lermans are all good examples that Juniata does not discriminate with these rules.

The fact still remains that the vast majority of Juniata's academic wives are not hired by the college, and most of them do not work, often not by choice. For those who wish to remain housewives, the community has only limited opportunities, and for those wives who do wish to work, the possibilities are even narrower. Most of Juniata's wives are educated, with college or professional degrees. Many met their husbands in undergraduate or graduate school, finishing degrees themselves, and then moving with their husbands.

For many faculty wives, the limited opportunities of the Huntingdon job market mean a big compromise. Because job opportunities in this area are so limited, the faculty wife may be forced to compromise for a job she is overtrained for, or one which is not really her speciality. This means that the faculty wife must have a flexible background in order to fit into a diverse number of job categories. For those women not willing to be this flexible, the possibilities are extremely narrow.

Here at Juniata, faculty wives hired by the college tend to be in lower paying, less prestigious and non-tenured positions. This is partially because these women are generally less educated than their husbands. However, it is also because the college tends to fill the better job categories with men, and allows their wives to compete for the lesser job categories. These women can make a valuable contribution to the academic community, and are probably the greatest untapped resource the college has to offer. Largely, they are waiting for the opportunity for career positions, and the college can aid this with utilization of these women.

Ed note: The stimulus for the above article was a book entitled "Women on Campus" by the editors of Change magazine. It is an anthology of articles written by women involved with the women's movement on various campuses across the country. I would highly recommend it.

Woodrow Wilson Fellow To Visit Juniata Campus

HUNTINGDON, PA — Junius J. Bleiman, a retired career army officer who has also served on several levels of government, will visit Juniata College as a Woodrow Wilson Visiting Fellow March 21-26.

While visiting Juniata, Bleiman will discuss the U.S. military establishment, foreign and domestic policy, and his own career in public administration with students and faculty in political science and history courses. He will also serve as a career counselor.

Dr. James J. Lakso, assistant professor of economics and business administration, will coordinate Bleimen's visit.

After 26 years in the U.S. Army, Bleiman retired in 1968 with the rank of Lt. Colonel. A member of the Princeton Township committee, he has also served as mayor of that New Jersey municipality since 1973.

Officials at Kalamazoo (Mich.) College, where Bleiman visited recently, referred to him as a "triple threat. His military career gives him incredible knowledge and perspective on the military establishment; a panel discussion on the defense budget was of enormous interest; and a panel on city planning, in which he was joined by several local officials, equally valuable."

Bleiman enlisted in the Army in 1942 after receiving his bachelor's degree in business administration from the City College of New York. He received the bachelor of science degree from the U.S. Military Academy in 1947 and the master's degree in public administration from Harvard University in 1957.

He held numerous positions in the Army, including duty in Latin America with the Inter-American Geodetic Survey, Korean duty as a political analyst with the Army's Current Intelligence Division, and engineering duty in Athens from 1962-65.

On the home front, Bleiman was an assistant professor in International Relations at West Point from 1957-61. During his final years in the Army, he served with the International Policy Division of the Army General Staff and the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense (International Security Affairs).

Since his retirement from the military, Bleiman has been associated with the Woodrow

Basic Grants Program

Need some cash to see you through the school year — with no strings attached?

Under the Basic Grants program sponsored by HEW's U.S. Office of Education, you may be eligible to receive anywhere from $200 to $1,400 a year to help pay for your education.

There are just a few requirements. You, and your family, must be in financial need; you must not have begun your undergraduate education before April 1, 1973; you must be enrolled at least half-time.

To find out if you qualify, complete and submit an "Application for Determination of Basic Grant Eligibility." This form is available from your school, public library, or by writing: Basic Grants, P.O. Box 84, Washington, D.C. 20044.

Within 4 to 6 weeks you receive a notice of your eligibility. Submit this to your financial aid officer, who will then calculate the amount of your Basic Grant award.

Remember, Basic Grants can never cover more than half of the total cost of your education. This includes tuition, fees, room and board, books, supplies, and miscellaneous expenses.

You may also be eligible to receive money through any one of the other financial aid programs sponsored by the Office of Education. Check for further details at your financial aid office.

Apply now for your Basic Grant. Don't get caught short.

Pitt Presents Fifth Annual Sports Medicine Symposium

PITTSBURGH — The Fifth Annual Sports Medicine Symposium will be held Saturday, April 3, 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the audi- torium of Scaife Hall of the Health Professions on the University of Pittsburgh campus.

The program is presented by the Allegheny County Medical Society and the Division of Continuing Education of the University's School of Medicine (University Health Center of Pittsburgh).

The morning program will include a discussion of a state-wide sports program for primary and secondary schools; "Liability Laws and Sports Medicine;" and "Sports Medicine: Interaction Between the University and the Community."

Registrants can select one of the following topics for the afternoon session: "Football," "Musculo - Skeletal Problems," "A Practical Guide to Female Athletics," or "General Medicine." These sessions will cover specific areas, such as the trainer's role in the rehabilitation of the injured athlete; common injuries related to athletic competition; beliefs about the causes of success and failure and morivations in female athletes; and heat stroke — prevention and treatment.

Course directors for the program are James H. McMaster, M.D., director of sports medicine, and Joseph C. Maroon, M.D., neurological surgery consultant in sports medicine, both of the Pitt School of Medicine. They will be joined by distinguished physicians from the Univeristy Health Center of Pittsburgh and other faculty from the University. Guest faculty are Annette Lynch, M.D., D.Ph., director, Bureau of Child Services and acting director, Division of School Health, Pennsylvania Department of Health; and Robert Stefanko, J.D., Pittsburgh Board of Education.

Tuition for the symposium is $20 for practicing physicians and $15 for nurses, coaches, athletic directors, and trainers.

The program meets the criteria for 4 hours of credit in Category One for the Physician's Recognition Award of the American Medical Association. Also .4 Continuing Education Units (CEU's).

For further information, contact the Division of Continuing Education, University of Pittsburgh School of Medicine, 1022-H Scaife Hall, Pittsburgh, PA 15261; (412) 624-2653.

Proposed Revision In Grading System

WASHINGTON, D.C. — (I.P.) — The American University Senate recently discussed a proposal to allow teachers to add pluses or minuses to final grades.

The proposed revision in the grading system would give 3.7 quality points for an A-minus, 3.3 for a B-plus, 2.7 for a B-minus, 2.3 for C-plus, and 1.7 for C-minus. There would be no D-plus.

In many AU departments, a student must receive at least a full C in a course if he plans to count it as part of his major. For this reason, several university Senators criticized the proposed revision, fearing that teachers would award C-minuses without sufficiently considering the grade impact on a student's record.

The senate also heard testimony from faculty members concerning the reinstitution of university-wide requirements. Dean Richard Berendzen of the College of Arts and Science urged the adoption of stricter guidelines governing course choices.

Faculty members, who wer involved in the elimination of distribution requirements five years ago, cautioned against hasty action in the matter, and questioned the ability of such a plan to significantly improve academic quality. Professor Lawrence Wadsworth pointed out that during the '60's, less than one out of four courses listed in the catalog were actually used by students, because of the need for departments to suggest courses for non-majors. In addition, he said, faculty members competed with each other to have their courses placed on the required list.

BVS Representative On Campus Tuesday

Willard Dulabaum, the Admissions Director for Brethren Volunteer Service (BVS), will be on campus Tuesday, March 28, to interview any persons who may be interested in working for a year or more through the BVS program.

Persons who are interested in information about BVS and/or project openings presently available are invited to schedule an appointment with Dulabaum by contacting: Andy Murrah at the Campus Minister's Office (ext. 51).

Transcendental Meditation Program And Enlightenment

On Thursday, March 18th at 7:30 pm in the Faculty Lounge, Ellis Hall, the Students International Meditation Society will present an introductory lecture on the Transcendental Meditation program. This lecture, open to all faculty and students, will examine "consciousness" as a field of all possibilities in life. As consciousness expands everything becomes possible and the purpose of the process of education — to produce enlightened individuals — is fulfilled. As part of the lecture there will also be a film entitled "Excellence In Action".

"The purpose of education is to culture the mind of a man so that he can accomplish all his aims in life. Education, to justify itself, should enable a man to use the full potential of his body, mind, and spirit. It should also develop in him the ability to make the best use of his personality, surroundings and circumstances so that he may accomplish the maximum in life for himself and for others. There are tremendous latent possibilities which are never unfolded by young people during their student life." — Maharishi Mahesh Yogi

Life is commonly lived as an uncomfortable compromise between one's aspirations and one's abilities. No one is satisfied with limitations. We want to be able to expand our capacity to accomplish, to know, and to experience. Without a means to develop this capacity, fulfillment will never be realized. The Trancendental Meditation program, as taught by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, systematically unfolds the full potential of the individual. It is practised for 15 - 20 minutes twice daily, during which time the mind experiences increasing quietness and the body simultaneously relaxes. Research indicates that the level of rest gained during TM is deeper that sleep. This prepares both body and mind to return to activity with more freshness, clarity, creativity, and awareness. Studies have indicated a wide range of benefits including improved health and interpersonal relationships, increased learning ability, and reduced tension, anxiety, and drpression.

The most significant aspect of the Trancendental Meditation program is on the most intimate level of the personality — the expansion of consciousness. Research clearly establishes that the TM technique produces a state of personal growth that was previously felt difficult, if not impossible to attain. This state, traditionally called enlightenment, results from the full development of consciousness, and depends upon the perfect and harmonious functioning of every aspect of the mind and body.

What is unique today is, first, that the most ancient system for the development of consciousness has been reestablished in its purest form by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi in the Trancendental Meditation program. Second, it is being expressed in a way that makes it fully accessible to moder scientific techniques of investigation. The result is that enlightenment is now being taken out of the realm of mysticism and uncertainty and is shown to be a specific reality that is verifiable, universally available, and of immense practical value.

The state of enlightenment represents the ultimate development of what we ordinarily consider to be the most valuable qualities of human life. It is something real, natural, and tangible and develops systematically in a continuous and progressive manner. The most immediate concern for students is the development of consciousness. Knowledge is structured in consciousness, because the entire process of learning depends upon the alertness or liveliness of the student's mind. Gaining knowledge involves a subject and an object — the knower and that which is known. Traditionally, education has been a process of presenting, receiving and assimilating "information", with no systematic means of developing the capacity to know: consciousness.

"Present systems of education only give students superficial knowledge. There is nothing in education today to develop the inner values of mind, body and spirit. Whatever education is received is simply on the surface level. In every subject certain information is given about that subject, and if a student is able to remember the information he passes the course. The current systems of education only prepare the student for a career geared primarily to earning a living .... TM is here; it has been tried and its value proved in every part of the world. Whether it is adopted may not rest entirely with the education authorities. It is more likely that a demand for it will come from the students themselves." —Maharishi Mahesh Yogi.

Concerned Alumni Voices An Opinion

In the February 12 edition of the Juniatian, the question of allowing seniors to live off campus has again become an issue. It is an issue which I feel strongly about. My senior year I lived off campus, and found it an experience which is still revealing its importance in my life. It seems Dr. Hartman, and surely many others, wants to eliminate an avenue for tremendous personal, social, and educational growth. I agree with Ms. Boomhower's arguments and would like to add further comments of my own.

My housemates and I (five of us, all roommates with at least one of the other women during our dorm years) felt a problem which, I think, the administration has created by not fully understanding why students wish to live off campus. Because the administration sees a move off campus as a divorce from the college by that student, they no longer think of he/she as a member of the college community. The move is not meant to be a divorce but an extension, a chance for growth, through which the student is enriched and can thus enhance his/her college experience and the college community. A move should not be regarded as a slap in the face or as rebellion, but as another responsibly chosen lifestyle.

One of Dr. Hartman's arguments is, as quoted from the Juniatian article, "the college has social as well as educational needs to fulfill." In fact the social growth — life learning — is probably greater than the academic growth. But Juniata College is a closed community. Although new students arrive each fall, the social backgrounds of all students are relatively homogenous. Chances for experienceing and/or becoming aware of other lifestyles, attitudes, and outlooks are not abundant. Stressing the importance of on campus living and excluding the opportunities of living off campus seems an ethnocentric stand. The attitude of much of the college toward the people of Huntingdon ("townies") is indicative of this. Living off campus serves to break down some of these barriers. Juniata College is a part of the Huntingdon community, not vice versa as it sometimes appears from the hillside. Huntingdon has a wide variety of people and attitudes. Living in the larger community is a more social move than isolationism within the protective acres of the college. A greater social awareness develops as more friends are made outside the college itself — more social growth.

A dormitory lifestyle is not a realistic preparation for life "on the outside." For those who want it, off campus living is a more realistic way to approach the independent lifestyle one must develop to cope after graduation.

"Freshmen should be 'socialized' by their only slightly older, but greatly more experienced peers, i.e. the upperclassmen." I completely disagree with this. By the time an individual reaches college — if he/she is ready for the experience — he/she should be able to approase and enter the situation on his/her own. You seldom know exactly who the seniors are, except they look slightly less confused. Upperclassmen should be able to help new students with some problems — lifestyles, where classes are located, best times to beat the dinner crowds — but as to socializing someone, no way. I would never be so presumptuous as to indoctrinate a student with my experiences and expectations for his/her college experience. College is a unique experience to which you bring your own expectations. If I'd listened to seniors around me I would have quit! It is an experience each person must make for him/herself.

Imagine being a freshman and discovering you and your roommate are on an all senior hall. The people around you have established a sense of being a group. They eat together, study together, party together, live together. That group has a history which any new comer knows nothing about. No matter how friendly and helpful they may be the new student is on the outside and can either try to break into that circle of friends (very difficult) or go out and find a new group. I lived on an almost totally freshmen hall. We helped each other, saved each other, and through each other established a social network which had our group as the nucleus and extended into all areas of the college, including upperclassmen. But, although we were friendly with upperclassmen, we had established our alliances among ourselves. We all had "big sisters" although we maybe saw them once. This was our experience and we did not need nor want outside help. It seems most people become closest with members of their class, especially Freshmen, and this is an integral part of the socialization process. Juniata College is not so huge and overpowering that one needs a guiding hand to make it through. I do not believe that eliminating off campus living will alter the contacts between students in any beneficial way.

Regarding whether 18 year olds are mature and responsible, I don't know if there is an across the board answer. Is the age of maturity and responsibility 21, 35, 30? The argument is easy to use but like the concept of instinct pretends to be an answer without providing any insight. The Supreme Court granted 18 year olds adult rights. I am not one to argue constitutional law. And since we are talking about an issue involving seniors, usually 21 years of age, the question seems irrelevant.

Maturity is not an age nor is it taught. It is developed. Developed through responsible action; through accepting the consequences of one's own actions. The less often an individual is allowed to make decisions affecting him/herself the longer it will take to mature. Juniata College strives to graduate responsible, creative, independent beings. The new curriculum is made up of choices. But the college can not have these choices on the academic side of life and a void on the social side of life. An individual who is expected to be able to analyze and isolate their values, put together a cohesive program, should also by the time he/she is 21 be able to have a choice in where and how he/she cares to live. A choice more enlightening than which dorm to choose. If the fear is that some will get lost in the "freedom" of off campus living — so what? They weren't ready. They were probably neither ready for the responsibilities of acquiring an education nor the responsibilities of directing their own life. A college can not afford to hold down the people ready to accept new challenges to save those who can not.

I do not mean to downgrade dorm life. I enjoyed all 3 years of dorm life. They were invaluable. But after 3 years it was confining. I did not feel in control of my own lifestyle and wanted, needed to have that control. It was up to me to develop a responsible system for living that would work for me. I do not feel that for me it would have been possible in a dorm. My senior year was my most creative and fulfilling year — socially, academically, personally — and it was off campus. I felt very much a part of the campus, was active on campus, but I had extended, broadened my boundaries. Also my housemates and I felt less apprehensive at graduation than many of our on-campus friends. Important too was that our friendships were deepened and I still see my friends in Huntingdon at least once a month.

I do not feel the arguments Dr. Hartman has used to defend his position are strong enough to warrant discontinuing the off campus option. If it is an economic issue then it should be argued as such. I'm sure a way could be found so that the choice is not obliterated. Maybe limit the number or have a requirement — justify it in writing like everything else. The very option of off campus living may be a way to draw the more creative and independent student who would also most likely benefit by using the new program to its fullest potential. But to stifle even one mind under the weight and confines of a lifestyle ill-suited is a waste we can not afford in these times.

Off campus living is not for everyone. But for those who responsibly choose it, it is a viable option for self-expansion.

through. So I am asking myself, whether J.C. is favorable to get to know from the source how the U.S. is like, how U.S. people live in their cultural and natural environment, and how the spoken American language is used in its native surroundings (and all that not only at a certain small college in its seclusion).

Consequently I don't know whether this very special, limited and in the long run dull J.C. experience is beneficial enough to be recommended within the BCA program.

public sector grows in complexity and scale.

This imbalance, according to Dr. Beer, "is what makes a Watergate possible in our society."

Dr. Beer has worked in numerous roles within the Democratic Party. In the FDR administration, he was a member of the Resettlement Administration and the Democratic National Committee. A member of the rules committee for the 1968 Democratic National Convention, he was also a member of the Committee on Delegate Selection and Party Structure (McGovern Commission) from 1969-72.

He first joined the Harvard faculty in 1936, having been a police reporter for the New York Post and written for Fortune magazine, and served as chairman of the department of government from 1954-58. He also served as a captain in the U.S. Army and received the Bronze and five campaign stars.

Among his numerous publications, Dr. Beer has authored five books including "The City of Reason," "British Politics in the Collectivist Era," and "Modern Political Development." He has also edited and contributed to several other major volumes, and has published articles in the American Political Science Review, World Politics, Social Research, Journal of Politics, and many other periodicals.

He has held Fulbright, Guggenheim and National Endowment for the Humanities Fellowships, been a member of the Harvard Arts and Sciences Faculty Council, and been a trustee of Radcliffe College.

The late Will Judy, who endowed the annual lectureship, was a 1911 Juniata graduate and valedictorian at the Hamilton School of Law. He practiced law briefly in Chicago and served in the Army during World War I, rising to the rank of captain and receiving the Silver Star.

Before retiring in the late 1950s, he operated a Chicago publishing business for 36 years. He authored eight books about dogs, made Dog World magazine the most widely-read pet periodical in the nation for a number of years, edited three editions of dog encyclopedias, lectured frequently, and judged thousands of dog shows and matches.

Mr. Judy made numerous financial contributions to Juniata and in 1958, 15 years before his death, provided a $30,000 stipend to establish a lecture series "to supplement and enrich the academic program of the college."

and take a major responsibility for (nonacademic) programming," Dr. Hartman states. This position will encompass a much wider scope of activities including programming within the Residence Hall Association, Center Board, individual dormitories, and other organizations. In addition a major portion of the individual's activities will be spent on counseling.

After questioning various students with experience in activities programming, the overriding opinion was that this decision would jeoparidze student social activities. Sam Sirrianni, Chairperson of Center Board, states, "this action is a clear indication of the administration's failure to understand student activities on campus."

We feel that this decision was made without consideration of several factors. (1) There was no consultation with student organizations which will be directly affected by this decision; in particula, Center Board, Student Government, or the Commission on the Quality of Campus Life. (2) There was no formal evaluation of the person involved (this has been substantiated by Dr. Hartman) and it would appear that she was given little or no indication of how her job should be revised. (3) Administrative staff should not be subjected to the coercion of questioning the security of their jobs on a day to day basis. (4) Nonacademic programming, we believe, is a full-time job, and the dilution of these priorities with the addition of counseling responsibilities may adversely affect social life on campus.

This action was only one of many in which student opinion has been ignored. Many times students are consulted on issues, but as an afterthought. Students dealt with subjects such as budgets, alcohol policy, quality of campus life, and the evaluation of the student affairs office. Since this decision affects student life so directly, consultation with the students is imperative. Students who work directly with the Director should have been conferred with concerning the feasibility of such a change in the status of College Center Director.

In hiring or firing an individual, be it a secretary or a vice-president, moral questions of responsibility are inevitable. The experience that an individual currently working in a position has is a valuable asset to that position. The evaluation of an individual's performance should be done before such rash measures as firing are taken. Probably, more importantly, the evaluation of the effectiveness of a particular job category should be formally appraised by all parties involved before changes are made.

Although, as Dr. Hartman points out, unlimited job security is detrimental to both the employee and the employer, some security is necessary for a satisfactory job to be done. That is, if an individual has no job security their work will suffer. This decision is a clear indication to other members of the staff that their jobs are on unstable ground. This could adversely affect the institution, resulting in the loss of excellent people. If good people feel their jobs are in jeopardy, they will readily look elsewhere for more secure employment.

Finally, and most importantly, we feel that the nonacademic activities will suffer as a result of this decision. Although some duties of the Director of the College Center have been deleted from the new job category, such as the responsibilities involved with Summer Conferences, the majority of these duties appear to be intact. This means that programming responsibilities which demand large amounts of time will be offset with the additional responsibilities of counseling. A good social program involves full-time dedication. Few will argue that there is no need for improvement in activities programming, but for this to be achieved, the Director of these programs must be unincumbered with other aspects of college life.

One final note would be that although it is true we need both improved counseling services and more creative programming, we feel that more efficient use of the existing counseling services and full-time direction in the area of programming at this time will be most responsive to student needs.

decreasing enrollment in the humanities. He explained this by saying that, while a person can see the vocational benefit of studying the natural and social sciences (getting a job), it is harder to find the practical significance of studying the arts.

To find a way out of this dilemma the committee has made several tentative proposals. One would be to include a requirement in the humanities. With such an idea, however, it would not simply mean a student would have to take "poetry I", but would provide a humanities unit that would demonstrate the relevance of poetry to a thinking individual. Another idea put forth would be to increase the number of interdisciplinary courses. Such classes would provide students with a more incompassing view of an area or topic. While hearing these ideas I couldn't help but wonder if this wasn't just back sliding on the part of the school. It sounded as if the powers that be were abandoning the concept of the student's right and responsibility to prepare her or his own educational program. Mr. Croce, however, reassured me that this was not the case. The students would still write their own Programs of Emphasis and not be forced into taking a four year package of courses. Also units such as modes, writing program, and HEA would be kept.

Another point repeatedly mentioned was that these ideas are still very open. It was brought out that nobody currently enrolled at JC would be affected by any of these changes.

Finally, Mr. Croce emphasized that these actions were being considered because of the concern about the quality of education at Juniata College. Juniata is committed to the ideal of providing its members with the highest quality degree possible. It was for this reason that the program of the early '70's was started, and for this same reason that it is now being reviewed.

U.S. Department Of Health, Education, and Welfare News Release

For the first time, States this year will receive special assistance in implementing broad-scale plans for preschool handicapped children, according to HEW's Office of Education.

The help will come from the Bureau of Education for the Handicapped through its Early Childhood Education Program. That program is designed to identify problems and provide programs for handicapped children in their early years, thus preventing or reducing some of the detrimental effects of handicaps. One of the ways the program does this is through classroom demonstration projects which will continue to be funded.

In addition, under proposed regulations published in today's Federal Register, money would be earmarked for technical assistance to State education agencies to implement Statewide plans for preschool and early education for handicapped children. State education agencies would receive one-time special financial assistance to enable them to assess their current programs for these handicapped children and set up a Statewide coordinated plan with all relevant agencies to spread special services to these children.

Persons wishing to comment on the proposed rule may write to Ms. Jane DeWeerd, Program Development Branch, Room 2036, Regional Office Building No. 3, Bureau of Education for the Handicapped, U.S. Office of Education, 7th and D Streets, S.W., Washington, D.C. 20202 within 30 days.

Replacements Installed

HALIFAX (AP) — Plastic surgeons here are installing artificial knuckles and finger joints using only local anesthetics. Plastic surgeon Dr. Winston Parkhill said five joints could be replaced within 90 minutes in the procedure.

The joint replacements are an "end-stage treatment" for sufferers of rheumatoid arthritis whose joints have become too distorted to respond to drugs or physiotherapy.

far to the left, is Fred Harris. The 45 years old Oklahoma Senator is considered the most liberal candidate, even more liberal than McGovern was in '72. "Too few people in this country have all the money and power" is the point he stresses, and to elevate this problem he poses to break up the big monopolies; stuff up the 94 billion dollars worth of tax holes used by the super rich and corporations; and to federalize welfare with benefits going up to $10,000 a year.

He is just as liberal when it comes to non-economic issues. He believes in unconditional amnesty for draft evaders and AWOL's; the right to abortion; the decriminalization of pot, strict gun control, and the Equal Rights Amendment. On the last he may be influenced by his wife, LaDonna, who is a Comanche Indian and a leader in Women's and Minority groups. Harris criticizes the "elitist and secretive foreign policy of Kissinger, and doubts the necessity of the CIA. He is also in favor of large cuts in the defense budget.

If Harris is a little too leftist for your tastes, you might be interested in a more diluted liberalism, that of Morris Udall. Less intense than Harris, the 53-year-old 6 ft. 5 in. Arizona Congressman has a more humorous personality. "Mo" believes in massive federal support in health, education, housing, mass transit, and what he calls the three "Es", energy, environment, and economy. His more moderate ideology might make him more palatable to more people, but puts him in the same ball field as Bayh, Carter, Shriver, Shapp, etc. For Harris, being an extreme might be a plus, for the middle men could end up nullifying each other. Unfortunately, that could be the "Jefferson Davis" candidate on the other end of the pole.

The mamba of Africa is a graceful but deadly snake that can glide rapidly through trees and along the ground.

"Bottle Bill" Controversy Throw Away or Return?

By Alice Boomhower

Many states in the past several years have considered and some have adopted what is commonly called the "Bottle Bill." These bills either encourage or force the use of returnable bottles for beverages such as beer, Coke, and Seven-Up. There has been both opposition and encouragement for the adoption of these bills.

Opposition to the bill sites two basic claims; that the bill will (1) eliminate jobs, and (2) reduce freedom of choice for consumers. As far as the elimination of jobs, it is true that fewer cans and disposable bottles will be produced, thus eliminating some jobs in these areas. However, new jobs will also be created in the areas of cleaning and sterilization of the returnables, and in increased need for transportation and collection of these bottles. The second argument, that the consumers freedom of choice is being reduced seems somewhat trivial. Consumers do not buy for the container, they buy the product which it holds. I see very little reduction in freedom of choice except for the small inconvienience encountered in having to return the bottles when purchasing more of the product.

Environmentalists avidly encourage the enactment of the bill in all states. They site (1) reduction to litter, and (2) conservation of important natural resources as their basic reasons. It has been found that litter is substantially reduced along highways and in public areas where the bill has been enacted,

Personal Freedom

Usually when personal liberty is discussed, the concern is with man's non-economic freedoms — freedom of speech, of religion, of the press, of personal behavior.

Frequently the most zealous guardians of these all-important freedoms are outspoken advocates of eliminating freedom in the economic area. When it comes to commerce, to the making and marketing of goods, they seem to be in favor of replacing freedom with rigid controls.

The question is, of course, how long these non-economic freedoms can be preserved in a society that has denied man his economic freedom.

Freedom of the press, for example, is well-nigh impossible if the State owns the newsprint, ink and printing presses; freedom of assembly is difficult if the State controls all meeting places; in truth, a free individual could not exist in a society in which the State controlled all means of employment and income, and hence the essentials of life: food, clothing and shelter.

"Give me control over a man's economic actions, and hence over his means of survival, and except for a few occasional heroes, I'll promise to deliver to you men who think and write and behave as you want them to."

"The inherent danger of socialism is that in establishing a social machinery for economic directions it creates a power of the state and the power of a focused economy — far beyond anything capitalism dreamed of and makes men far more dependent than free."

DR. METHOT -- DEFENDER OF OUR DOLLAR!

U.S. Dollar Sentenced To Death

LOS ANGELES: Incredible as it may seem, a California Chiropractor who has waged a six year fight for the preservation of the U.S. Dollar, was found guilty of obeying the law. Ah . . . that is, Constitutional Law which, like the Doctor, is at odds with Internal Revenue Service edict.

The chiropractor, Dr. Marcel Methot, a mild-mannered man of 41, has been quoting in court the U.S. Constitution, Article I Section 10, which quite clearly states "No State shall make any Thing but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts." This means that fiat or "funny money" (printing press money) is unconstitutional according to the letter of the law. And since the U.S. government has surrendered its constitutionally limited authority to a privately owned money monarchy — using the misleading name of "The Federal Reserve System — it has in actuality violated the rights of the citizen under the Constitution. Additionally, the legality of the dollar is very definitely defined as having "371.25 grains of pure silver, or 412.5 grains of standard silver (U.S. Coinage Act 1792, Revision 1834 — Chapter 16 Sec. 20).

What has happened in the case of Dr. Methot versus the U.S. Government, or vice versa since the government has now taken action against the doctor for his Constitutional stand? Simply, the IRS, which serves as a "Collection Agency" for the Fed's money monarchy; and the Federal judiciary (which has primarily been appointed by those in influence), are scrambling "to cover up" what could become a more explosive issue than the atomic bomb.

That explosive issue is simply this: "Will the courts declare the 'funny money' unconstitutional?" First, unbeknownst to most of our citizenry, the Federal Reserve is neither federal nor a reserve. Second, since its inception in 1913, it has never had an independent audit. Third, why was a select group of multi-millionaires given the right to print our currency and sell it back to us at face value, plus interest, for the life of the bill?

Shocking? I'll say, when you consider the fact that we pay somewhere around $43,000 a minute on the national debt to those multi-national banksters — and now, collectively, owe them 597 thousand MILLION Dollars. Just the interest alone is the third largest expenditure in the National Budget.

The judiciary is apparently in a quandry as to just what to do

Students To Lobby On Capitol Hill For Fifth Consecutive Year

WASHINGTON, D.C. — For the fifth consecutive year, students from around the country will lobby members of Congress during the National Student Lobby's (NSL) annual Lobbying Conference to be held April 2-6 in Washington, D.C.

Students will spend two days on Capitol Hill conferring with members of Congress and their staffs on economic and educational issues affecting students. Of significant concern is the issue of financial aid appropriations.

The Lobbying Conference comes at a crucial time because the Congress is presently considering a supplemental appropriations bill that could add as much as $792 million to the Basic Educational Opportunity Grants program for the coming school year. NSL is calling for a strong student turnout in order to demonstrate to Congress widespread concern about the need for the Basic Grants supplemental funds.

"Congress is constantly hearing from the lobbyists working in Washington, including the Student Lobby," remarked NSL Co-Director Steve Pressman. "The lobbying impact is greatest when the constituents speak on their own behalf. Students are their own best spokespersons."

In addition to the Basic Grants legislation, students will also be discussing legislation which will reauthorize the Higher Education Amendments, Fiscal Year 1977 financial aid appropriations, postcard voter

Letter to the Editors

The following brief poem was submitted by men now serving life sentences at the Huntingdon State Correction Institution to the editor of the Juniatian. It reads as follows:

People of society, hear our plea
Ever-lasting wanting-ness, to be set free . . .
Naturally we are here, accused of grave crimes
Now is the opportunity, to put a minimum on our time . . .
Society you have judged and placed us in chains
Year after year, it's just agony and pain . . .
Lord knows how long we must travel this road
Victory is needed to dispense with our load . . .
Americans we are, since the day of birth
Numbered by the hundreds, human beings of this earth . . .
Invest in us, let us know our fate
Amend a GOOD TIME BILL, give us a date . . .

Lengthy years of incarceration isn't the key
Implementing a minimum is what it should be . . .
Failure to generate the public eye
Explains clearly, why some would rather die . . .
Rehabilitation is a word of the past
Secure it to the LIFERS, they'll make it last . . .

Avoiding the issue is to give up in vain
Surrendering our feelings, I sincerely explain . . .
Somewhere out there is a place for us
Offer your help, render your trust . . .
Continuing the struggle for what is right
Identifying with society is our plight . . .
Awareness to the beauty in your reality
Transcends in us, those who want to be free . . .
Igniting a fire, that forever grows dim
Oh! People I implore, deliver him . . .
Nothing is so challenging as the unchallenged.

Center Board News

Now that Spring has officially arrived, book and study apathy (held over from fall term) can be recognized officially as "spring fever" — and all manners of distractions of the season open themselves to the college community. Although it is not our policy to create such "distractions", the Center Board hopes you will take advantage of our spring programming when the "fever" striles. Here are the opportunities available in the next few weeks:

Friday, March 26; Oller Hall. At 8:15 p.m. the flick of the week will be "CAT ON A HOT TIN ROOF" starring (ta da!) Paul Newman and Elizabeth Taylor. Admission will be 50¢.

Saturday, March 27; Oller Hall. It's ALL CLASS NIGHT!! Curtain time will be 8:15 p.m. Tickets are available at the Ellis Information Desk to all J.C. students, faculty, and alumni with proper ID. The supply is limited, so get yours soon! Cooperation and consideration by the patrons of this event will be greatly appreciated (i.e., if you must party, please do it before or after, but NOT during, the performance). Thank you.

Saturday, April 3; Ellis Ballroom. From 9:30 to 12:30 Center Board will be sponsoring a FIFTIES DANCE, so wash your argyles and your bobbies, and polish your dancin' shoes! Come and rock to your favorite platters. Admission will be 50¢.

Friday, April 9; Oller Hall. After cancellation earlier this month, NATIONAL LAMPOON has offered to present its EDITORS' REVUE SHOW on this date next month (at 8:15 p.m.). Admission will be $1.50 in advance and $2.00 at the door. Tickets will be available at the Ellis Information Desk on a date to be announced shortly.

Students will prepare for lobbying on the Hill by participating in a series of legislative briefings and workshops, and lobbying training sessions which will include role-playing with members of Congress and public-interest lobbyists.

Because of the election year, a special section of workshops will be devoted to campus voter registration. NSL has called voter registration and student voter turnout one of ints top priorities for 1976. NSL is participating in a nationwide survey which will report on student voting in the 1976 elections. The report is being coordinated by the University of California Student Lobby which has compiled similar voting studies in California elections.

"The fundamental philosophy of the National Student Lobby is 'students working for students'," said Pressman. "In line with that philosophy, the Lobbying Conference informs students about current federal legislation affedcting the, and then gets those students up on the Hill to present the issues to Congress. If students are going to be successful in getting legislation passed they have to be visible to Congress.

NSL has held Lobbying Conferences each spring beginning in 1972. In that year students focused on the 1972 Higher Education Amendments which are up for renewal this year. Last year, students were on the Hill the two days before the House passed a supplemental appropriations bill that contained $110 million for the Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants program.

The 1976 Lobbying Conference will be held at the Quality Inn on Capitol Hill. which is located two

The most phenomenal weekend that any Juniata College student will ever experience, is rapidly approaching. For the upperclassmen, we know this event as All Class night, and for you Freshmen reading this articale, prepare yourselves for one of the truly crazy and fun weekends you may ever experience in your college career. Every year, this memorable weekend, seems to get better and better, however, viewing how quiet this year the students have been on this campus I am becoming apprehensive.

The principle problem as I see the situation is no location for, what has become a four year tradition, the all school party that was held at the Huntingdon Fairgrounds. While all indications are that no such party will be held this year because of our inability to secure a location, this is no reason why the campus can't get it together, and have parties spread over the campus. I have already heard talk of a tower party located in East Houses, however, such a party won't be able to take the place of the one at the Huntingdon fairgrounds. What is important is that others also sponsor parties, and on top of that, publicize their intentions so that their affairs will be well responded to.

While the planning of a good party does entail a good bit of running around, taking care of some detail, it is publicizing the event that I want to stress as the important part to make this All Class Weekend one for all to remember.

I am not sure why, that so far this year Juniata has turned into a suit case college, but it is apparent to me that we can not expect someone else to make the arrangements any longer. For one reason or another, whoever is in charge of planning social activities, have their hands tied, and are unable to come through with what used to be. Or maybe it is the fact that we the students are not responding to the efforts that these people have made to plan an active social program. Or maybe still there are not enough social leaders among the general population of the campus to keep the year hopping.

Whatever the problem is, it is important to note that it is spring time, the weather is turning nice, and we can turn this socially apathetic campus into a good time if we are willing to move out from in front of the television set, and out side to meet some of the other bored people of Juniata College.

It's better than the cellblock, but this yard time is hard to take. I wish our team had won.

Juniata Ruggers form line out in an attempt to score on Gaelic.

J.C. Ruggers Dropped A Tough Game

The Rugby Club opened its spring season last Saturday on a rather negative note, dropping two games to Carlisle Gaelic.

The Juniata "A" team was thoroughly outplayed, especially by excellent ball control and unrelenting movement on the part of the Gaelic forwards. Except for one near-breakaway by Don Plummer, which eventually failed for lack of support, Juniata had no sustained rushed in the first half. Gaelic kept possession for a solid majority of the time, and led 12-0 at halftime.

The second period was somewhat closer. Tome "Mercury" Morris scored a try early for Juniata on a zigzagging run that went about 50 yards forward and 150 laterally. Charlie Lerman kicked the conversion, closing the gap to 12-6. As the game drew near the end, Gaelic's superior conditioning showed clearly, and they were able to put over two late tries. They missed one conversion and Juniata captain Rich Jager blocked the other, leaving the final score at 20-6.

The "B" team's game looked largely like a replay of the "A." Both clubs' "B" teams showed considerable lack of experience, but again Gaelic generally outhustled Juniata, scoring one try in each half to win 8-0.

The Juniata club needs much work on conditioning, positioning, and passing in order to improve its performance in the rest of the season. It is also hoped that the enentual return of injured veterans Todd Price and Tom Terndrup, plus the presence of regular scrum half Al Kulp, who was unavoidably out of town this past Saturday, will increase the club's sharpness in the coming weeks.

The club hosts Susquehanna next Saturday at 1:00. After taht, the rest of the season's schedule is:

April 3— Frostburg State — Home

April 10 — Lancaster — Away

May 1-2 — Indiana U. of PA. Tournament

All the coming games are expected to be difficult, because every opponent on the schedule lost its most recent clash with Juniata. In May, Juniata will be definding its 1975 first-place finish at the I.U.P. tourney, which was won by an Al Kulp dropped goal in the closing moments of the championship game.

Two Indians Take 4th Place Honors at MAC'S

The MAC Wrestling Championships were held at Lebanon Valley College over the weekend of February 20th and 21st with six Juniata grapplers participating in the competition. Our six grapplers were Bob Smith wrestling at 118 lb., Bob Thompson at 142, Steve Harper at 167, Jay Zimmerman at 177, Herk Perry at 190, and Scott "Chicken" Simmons wrestling heavyweight.

Bob Smith was the first Indian to take to the mats and in the two bouts he wrestled he was pinned both times in the second period. These two eliminated Bob of any further competition. Bob Thompson was the next grappler to set foot on the mats. Bob fought hard for two periods before succombing to a pinning combination in the third. By virtue of the way the MAC finals are organized this bout was Bob's only participation and was thus eliminated from any further competition.

Things were turned around a bit though as Steve Harper wrestled and and walked off the mats an 8-2 victor over Alan Fisher of Swathmore. Steve advanced to round two and saw the roof cave in on him as he was decisioned by Fran Campbell of Delaware Valley by a 1-24 score. That setback did not eliminate Steve and he decisioned his round three opponent by an 11-3 score. This win advanced Steve to another round of action and he convincingly defeated Don Zimmerman of E-town 14-2. By virtue of this victory Steve was now one of the four finalists. Wrestling one more match would decide if Steve took a third or fourth place. Steve lost his fifth and final bout and thus took fourth place in the 167 lb. division. Steve had a good wrestling year by winning 3 of 5 in the MAC finals and earning an overall wrestling record of 12-6-0.

Jay Zimmerman did his best to keep the Indians on the winning warpath as he won his first round bout 5-3. Jay advanced to second round action but lost, 3-16, and at this point was eliminated from any further competition. Herk Perry found the going rough in his first round of action and was eliminated from any further competition when he lost his first bout 3-9. Better luck next year Herk.

Like Steve, Scott Simmons also had a very good showing. Scott drew a bye in the first round, decisioned his opponent, 2-0, in the second round, lost to the eventual hvy. champion Steve Lawrence, 0-3, in the third round, and came back in the fourth round of action to pin his opponent in the third period. At this stage of the game Scott was one of the four finalists and the outcome of his next bout would determine his status of third or fourth place. Well, Scott lost to Steve Burak of Moravian and was named to fourth place in the hvy. division of the MAC's. Scott's overall record for this season was an impressive 11-4-1. Congratulations to our fourth place qualifiers Steve and Scott.

Wrestling fans of JC and opponents look out for next year. Practically everyone on the team this year will be back for the next season and yes there is even the possibility of Steve Harper wrestling next year. But upperclassmen beware! Coach Berrier has told me of a few incoming freshment who want to wrestle so just don't sit on your honches.

Pre-Season Track & Field Predictions

By Dward Farkward

This week I had promised to review both the track and golf teams. Well your buddy Dward will have to break his promise. I can't realistically review the golf team because they haven't practiced enough yet. Coach German hasn't had enough time to even crudely evaluate his talent. Look for the article on the golf team in a future issue of the Juniatian.

When the tribe track team opens their season on April 3, against Susquehanna they will be very young and inexperienced in several events. Look for the tribe to do heavy scoring in the distance events and the field events, barring the jumping events. These are the events where the proven upperclassmen are found. All in all the track team looks as though they e in for a big season.

The sprinting events will be handled by promising freshmen Dave Robinson and Scott Renneisens. Dave Yost, our only returning sprinter, has been sidelined with a toe injury. His return should help the team if it's not to late in the season for him to get himself into shape. In the quarter mile look for the Indians to be led by Bobby Thompson and Austin Robinson. Thompson who is coming off an injury is hoped to return to the form he exhibited as a freshmen when he finished high in the MAC. Freshmen Robert McNelly and Charles Koller will be handling the hurdling events. Both Koller and McNelly finished well in state competition last year and are expected to greatly help our team.

The half mile will be run by Dave Parker and a combination of the various other distance men. In the mile look for Paul Wilson to set the school record this hear. Last year his 4:21:8 was only a second or so off the record. Wilson will be backed up by Steve Hooper, also a 4:20 to 4:30 minute mile man, and Dave Quig. Those students who attended last years spring intramural track meet will remember Dave, he mopped up in the distance events. In the three mile, Jack McCullough, Paul Wilson, Steve Hooper, and Dave Quig will all be competing.

The field men will be led by Calvin Schoenberger. Calvin set the school discus record last year and MAC honors are hoped for him this year. Dan Bausher and Jon Loeliger combine to give us an extremely competitive pole vaulting event. In the javelin event, upperclassmen Rick Green and Robin Shean will be giving us a strong showing. Jim Kistler appears to be our number one man in the shot. Although Jim never threw theshot before last year, he is learning fast and should prove to be competitive. The triple jump and long jump events will be handled mostly by freshmen. Except for upperclassman Jan Gable there are no exclusive jumpers. Coach Rossi will be looking for help in these events from anyone on the team.

An examination of the track schedule reveals that the team's toughest competition will come in their two quadrangular meets. One of these meets features powerful Bucknell and Gettysburg. Gettyburg finised second in the MAC last year and lost no one to graduation. Bucknell, led by one of the nations top quarter milers, is extremely talanted in every event. The dual meet phase of the season looks as though it will be extremely profitable to the tribe. Only Lock Haven appears to pose any real threat. Our meets with Lock Haven are usually decide by ten points or less with the home team usually winning. This year Lock Haven travels to Huntingdon so we'll be looking for a victory. Also on the schedule are Albright, Dickinson, and Western Maryland, all not usually strong.

While I'm on the subject of track, I'll give you the story on the girls track team. They will be competing against other schools on our present track schedule who bring a girls team with them. Due to the late rise in interest in the team no formal schedule could be formed. However, the athletic office is calling all the schools on our track schedule and asking them if they have a girls team, to please bring them along. Just what events will be run will be determined by how many girls the opposition brings. These events will then be mixed in among the men's events of the day.

When asked to comment of the female teams strengths and weaknesses temporary coach Mitchell declined. He said that he hadn't had enough time to take a good look at the girls. In addition he felt that since many of the girls were running for the first time they probably would be a little slow in developing and he doesn't want to make any premature comments. He did say however, that they are working very hard and that the athletic department is looking for a full time coach for them.

We'll all be looking forward to a successful male and female track season. Remember, in coming weeks, the golf team review if the weather stays nice.

U.S. Dollar

about it, for if they decide in favor of Methot and the Constitution it will invalidate the fiat phoney money system and force a return to a sound money policy. This would 1) eliminate inflation; 2) put an end to the "Profit and Plunder" policy promoted by Keynesian economists, and 3) stop the big money moguls from controlling our currency.

It does seem to be in our interest (the public) and not theirs if the Methot case is won, by the people.

"The People's Case," as one journalist has described Methot's stand, will decide the life or death of the dollar. The first thing that Methot did to "open up the issue" was to file suit against the government for a redress of grievances, in accordance with our First Amendment rights. This was unconstitutionally "denied" by presiding Judge Irving Hill, in what amounted to a summary judgment.

When "THE DOLLAR DOCTOR," as he is often alluded to, filed his 1970 income tax form he listed only the "lawful (silver) money" earned, and challenged the IRS to bring him to court. Naturally, they did, in hopes that with a "little help" from the judiciary they could "Silence the Situation."

Obviously with the opinion that "the people's case" would get a fair hearing under a "qualified judge" rather than a jury unfamiliar with constitutional law, Dr. Methot waived the normal procedure of a trial by jury. His opinion soon changed as Federal District Judge Harry Pregerson summarily ignored the three days of detailed documentation substantiating the Constitutional issues. and ruled in favor of the IRS edict.

In essence, this means the Constitution, "according to Judge Pregerson," is subservient and secondary to the IRS Commissioner's rulings; or, in laymen's language, that "The Dollar is Dead!"

Attorney Larry Campbell, representing the government, prosecuted the doctor for daring to have "the audacity" to challenge the myriad of IRS "irregulations," stating that the doctor had "bad faith and purpose." Testifying in behalf of Dr. Methot was the nationally prominent Tax Attorney Jerome Daly — who added his expertise on Constitutional Law, verifying the doctor's position.

"Bottle Bill"

and we are all aware that there is a need not to waste our important natural resources.

One final argument against the bill is that the returnables are recycled on the average only two or three times, and this does not represent a substantial savings. This figure has been debated, but withoug going into the figures, I would argue that reducing the amount of waste by one-half to two-thirds, we are saving.

Although voluntary action is always preferred to governamental intervention, we all know that it does not work. One has only to look at the refuse in a dormitory after a weekend to see that we are a "throwaway society". We purchase cans and nonreturnable bottles, throw them away, and think nothing of it. I avidly encourage the enactment of this bill in the state of Pennsylvania; and suggest that others do likewise.

In the meantime, it would be wise for all of us to adopt the policy of purchasing only returnables. The waste which we see, in the dormitories, in the cafeteria, and in Tote is dangerous, and it is the responsibility of all of us to help reduce it.

Terms to Semester: Is It Worth the Change?

by Mark Wiener

You may have heard the rumor that they are thinking of changing from the three term calendar to two semesters. This would mean that a student, instead of carrying three daily courses for ten weeks, he would be taking five that meet twice a week for fifteen weeks. Well, it's more than just a rumor, in fact the faculty vote on the issue is coming up soon, and chances are that it will be passed.

Why the switch? I went to Dr. Binder to find out why, but since the final go-ahead rests with him, he did not want to make any comment that might bias the faculty vote. (Although he has stated in the past that he was in favor of the change.) His secretary said that he suggested I discuss the matter with the Provost. Dr. Norris stated that a main reason for the change lies in the belief of the administration that a student can "absorb" more from a course that meets only twice a week over an extended period of time. Even though a daily study is more intense, the student with semesters is given more out of class time to prepare.

Another reason in favor of the semester is that certain departments feel that they could cover material better for some courses if the term lasted fifteen weeks. (There are some departments however, like economics, which are happy with the present ten week system.

Just the thought of switching raises some immediate questions: 1. How would the new calendar be set up? As it is planned now, the fall semester would begin early September, and end just before Christmas break, including a shorter Thanksgiving Vacation. Xmas vacation would probably be extended a week or so, and then the second semester would start and end sometime early May, with one or two short vacations in between. 2. What about taking five finals the same week? The time for finals, and the time for early withdraw from a course would be extended with semesters.

Another big problem involves curriculum. Since Juniata originally changed from semesters to terms when the new P.O.E. program was initiated, the switch might involve shuffling of students individual programs. There would also be some major juggling in the credits-units department. If the conversion is approved, it would come into effect the year after next, thus affecting present Freshmen and Sophomore classes in their crucial junior and senior years.

The big question is is it worth it? Can a student really "absorb" all that more on semesters? Despite the fewer class hours per week, a student will still end up splitting up his time five ways instead of three.

There are other advantages to semesters which I haven't mentioned, such as it would be easier on faculty and administration, (what they now have to do three

All Class Night, 1976

by Steve Townsend

If it was intellectually styled Thesbianism you came for, All Class Nite '76 proved to be somewhat of a disappointment this past Saturday evening in Oller Hall. But, if you happen to be a member of the Junior Class, the event was most monumental.

By producing a hilarious parody of last years widely touted S.T.A.R.T. day, renamed "F.A.R.T.S." for the stage, the Juniors were able to stay closest to the evening's theme of Satire thus winning the favor of the judges and the 1976 All Class Night Trophy.

Revolving around the plight of the bored Juniata student, the skit ended with a crowd rousing chorus of "S-O-C-I-A-L L-I-F-E FARTS" sung by the entire cast to the tune of the "Mickey Mouse Club Theme." Other high points of the show included the attachment of puppet's strings to the limbs of administration and faculty actors along with humorous representations of the I.V.C.F., Scuba and Rugby clubs. Also deserving of mention are Steve Hale for his uncanny impersonation of Dr. Moser, Elaine Joyce for her role as the unsinkable Sam Sirianni, and Rob Dintriff for his "ball park" performance as Prof. Wise.

The evening's second place honors were awarded to the Sophomores for their laughable class room corruption of our nation's ounding. Complete with an urban school room scene, a staged Boston Tea Party and a convincing performance by Bill Kepner as Ben Franklin, the Sophs found that just getting old Ben and his kite "up" wasn't enough to match the satiric performance of the Juniors. Crowd pleasing moments during the Sophomore act included a quick but acute impersonation of line checker Evelyn Weld and a mock-patriotic rendering of "God Bless America".

The one-two combination of these two acts proved to be especially painful to the Seniors as their dismal third place finish awarded them the dubious distinction of being the first class to have never won an ALL Class Night competition. The Senior play, lashed together under savage deadline pressure, dealt with the heisting of the Bicentennial flag by Dean Very Heartless played by Meg Meyer. Bob Orr was cast in the role of Juniata's own "Rhinestone Cowboy", Dr. Finder.

The Freshmen act rounded out the award presentation with an embarrassing last notch placing.

Mary Hartman Syndrome A La Juniata College?

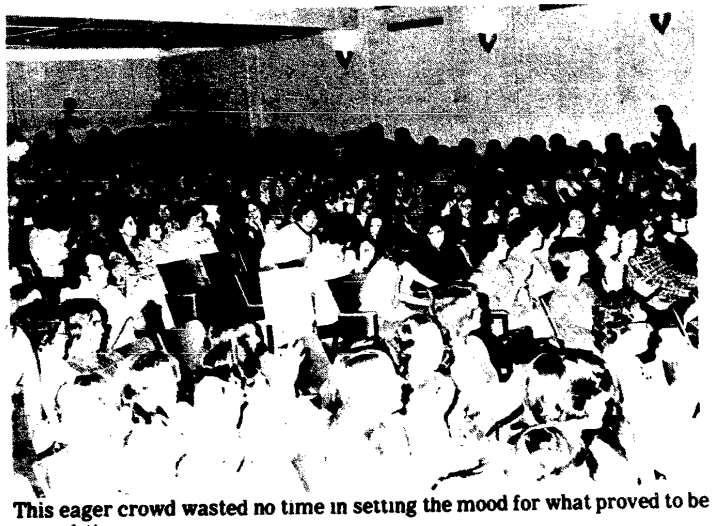
by A. E. Boomhower

One of the student's overriding complaints seems to be the lack of a so-called "social life" on this campus. Students blame Center Board for most of these ills, saying that the programs are not responsive to the needs of most students. Center Board schedules Disco dances. Students go in their straight-legged jeans, T-shirts, and cardigan sweaters and dance to records. When this becomes too repetitious, Center Board sponsors 50's dances which students go to in their straight-legged jeans, T-shirts, and cardigan sweaters, and dance to records. Students look to the weekend as their only time for a "social life". What most students don't realize is that they are complaining about the repetition in their lives; the TV on weeknights, the kegs on the weekend, not the Disco dances, because most students just don't go.

It has not always been this way. The seniors, riding on the tail of an outgoing "hippie era" can remember the days of social awareness, when social life meant not only dances, parties, and concerts, but active participation in social issues. It was, at that time, thought "fun" to work for social reform, and not only on the weekends. Students were aware and active in government, the war issue, women's problems, the acquisition of student rights, prison reform, and many other problems. This brought a certain novelty to the party-dance scene because students were no longer solely absorbed in their own entertainment. These students enjoyed the parties, dances, and concerts not because they were "better" than they are now, but because they were not the only "nonacademic" activities in the students' lives.

As a group, college students, and Americans in general have become more selfish. They have become less active and less reactionary. They have come to realize that the high ideals they once fought for, although still pertinent, are not attained easily. We have slipped into a selfish shell encased with largely economic problems.

I would suggest that activity such as went on in the late 60's is not relevant to our lives today. However, I also believe that part of the futility that is felt with regards to social life on this campus is based in students' fears of the type of selfishness which has been discussed. Probably the best approach would be awareness and acitvity in social problems with restraint. Then possibly the party-dance scene would seem a little less repetitive and tiresome. Instead of having something "done" to you, isn't it better to "do" something yourself?



This eager crowd wasted no time in setting the mood for what proved to be a good time.

By Steve Townsend

For all the teams that land in the upper rungs of their intramural division, there are others that serve to hold them there by coming in below. Its not that these teams wanted to be martyrs or anything so harsh, its just that they had no real conception of how fat and heavy they had gotten during the year long lay-off. I was on a team that had gotten fat and heavy.

In America that is not at all good. Here, everything of value is like Helium or rich milk cream — it always rises. The boys and myself were not rising. We had lost seven straight games and weren't showing a whole hell of a lot of upward potential. Fear of missing the skim was beginning to climb our spines.

"Youw know", I said as I threw the dregs of my beer into the toilet, "that here in America they tramp on ants."

"Don't get cute, Townsend! You think we don't feel the boot already? Yesterday, the intramural department changed the name of the team from 'Hole in the Head Gang' to just plain 'Hole'.

"Has it gotten that bad", I asked as I watched my beer foam swirl around the bowl a few times before finally getting sucked into the sewers.

"Worse! Twigs and myself got notices from our medical schools that a last place finish would constitute conduct unbecoming a professional candidate. Willy got notified that his GRE's would have to be adjusted downward in light of the fact that our poor performance could only be considered evidence of a greater personality flaw. Even the freshmen won't play anymore because the word got out among the faculty and now all their professors are requiring that they attend remedial sessions."

"Guess we better lighten up fast. You don't know Fred McMurry do you?"

"No, but I am distantly related to Ragged Dick the Match Boy. Lets ring him up. If we talk real earnest he might pull some strings for us."

We won four of our next five games. That moved us from 16th to 12th place and the rumor was spreading that we had become a late moving spoiler.

"That rumor your spreading is starting to have some effect at the top, Townsend."

"You ever doubted? Like they teach us over in Political Science — play down your weaknesses and take it to the opposition from an appearance of strength."

At that moment Twigs, our team captain, crashed through the front door bleeding from both ears. He seemed upset.

"They quit! They quit", he yelped! "Those four teams we beat all dropped out of the league! Our wins were dropped! We're in last place again!"

"They can't do that", I frantically screamed as I was rudely jerked out of my complacency. "This is the United States and I have my rights! They can't snivel out from beneath us! Who would be the dregs? Why, if everyone was allowed to quit the first teams wouldn't have anybody to be first in fron of!"

"I think you've got something there. Yes, you've got something God-damn-it!"

We never shoed up for our next game. Shortly thereafter, our professional school notices were recalled, Willy's GRE's were readjusted upward, and the freshmen were told that remedial tutoring was no longer necessary. We even got a letter from Ragged Dick telling us that he was retiring to play ball our way.

The pre-All Class Night Spectacular began with a variety of entertaining tunes from some talented J.C. students.

Consumers Saved $200 Million

PHILADELPHIA — Consumers in the Philadelphia area saved $200 million a year because of the use of less expensive nuclear fuel in the generation of electricity, a top utility executive said here today.

"Nuclear plants in the United States generated electricity at 44 percent less total cost than plants using oil, natural gas or coal — a net saving of $678 million or the equivalent of 115 million barrels of oil," said William B. Morlok, Vice President of the Philadelphia Electric Company.

Speaking before a seminar of architects and engineers, Morlok said that nuclear energy is the critical link in meeting future energy needs. Predicting an "electric society" in the world of tommorrow, Morlok said that even without economic growth, the need for electricity will grow because high-priced oil and increasingly scarce natural gas are becoming less attractive.

And if we add economic growth to the equation, the need for electricity will grow even further, Morlock said. For Pennsylvania coal and nuclear power, he said, are the mainstays of our energy future.

One of the key advantages to nuclear is the cost saving, he daid.

Nuclear fuel costs one-eighth that of oil, he said, and a kilowatt of electricity generated in a nuclear plant cost 1.2¢, compared with 2.5¢ in an oil-fired station. These lower costs are reflected in consumers' bills because there is no fuel adjustment charge when nuclear power is used, he noted.

And he pointed to the operating record of over 20 years of experience with nuclear power as evidence of its safety.

Unfortunately, he said, cutbacks in the construction of nuclear plants due to financial problems or opposition from critics are hurting the nation's energy timetable.

"In view of the long lead-time needed to bring a generating plant on line, it will be particularly important for the electric utility industry to regain its lost momentum if energy independence is to be achieved on a reasonable timetable," he said.

Morlok asked the help of the media, and others in the business community to help the public understand "the hard facts of the electric energy economy which we think is vital if we are to have a reasonable supply of energy for future growth and construction."

Morlok addressed the Architects and Engineers Conference sponsored by the Pennsylvania Electric Association.

Three National Sorority Chapters

Bethlem, Pa.-(I.P.)-Lehigh University has officially recognized its first three national sorority chapters. These colonies of undergraduate women officially recognized as chapters of national sororities represent Alpha Gamma Delta, Alpha Phi, and Gamma Phi Beta, national Greek-letter social organizations for college women, and are now functioning sisterhoods here.

According to Dean of Students William L. Quay, the three chapters have been selected for recognition on a three year trial basis on the merit of: the strength of affiliated chapters at colleges and universities comparable to Lehigh; a national policy of non-discrimination in the selection of members; the financial strength of the national organizations; and the ability of each national sorority to provide advice and assistance to the chapters.

Over the three year probationary period, the new sororities will be observed to determine how well they meet up to Lehigh standards, and to evaluate what contributios sorority chapter lend to this campus. Lehigh first admitted women to the undergraduate level of study in the fall of 1971. There are currently 797 undergraduate women enrolled here. The process of sorority recognition was initiated in the spring of 1975. At that time, representatives of the office of the dean of students met with the Philadelphia (Pa.) sub-section of the National Panhellenic organization.

Faculty Members Awarded

Towson, Md. — (I.P.) — In an unprecedented act Towson State College's Student Government Association has awarded 10 top faculty members $250, the first time student activity fees have ever been used for non-student activities. The awards were given in recognition of outstanding teaching abilities. The presentation of the awards was made at S.G.A.'s First Annual Faculty Award Reception.

The Faculty Grants Award Program had its beginning in 1974 when the S.G.A. Senate authorized $3,000 for the program. Nominations for the top faculty members were accepted from the student body during the Spring Semester of 1975. The first response from the student body was good and a total of 57 different teachers were nominated. It was not until the Fall Semester, 1975, that a selection committee of honor students was chosen and given the difficult task of elimination.

Specific criteria was formulated in order to make a thorough and fair overall evaluation. Instructors were also judged on their availability and approachability.

Administrators in Cleveland, Ohio, in the early days of the automobile ruled it was illegal to drive while you had someone on your lap.

Seduction

Seduce: to tempt, persuade, entice, beguile, win over.

"Although advertising may seduce, it cannot rape. Seduction, unlike rape, is influence not coercion.

"The right of entrepreneurs to offer and persuade makes sure that we get what we wish – though perhaps not what we need. This, however, is preferable to getting what planners think we need."[1]

Freedom of commerce makes it possible for the consumer to buy one quart of milk at a time–even though a government economist may think gallon containers are more efficient and quarts should be abolished. This is the freedom that enables the consumer to buy rye bread if he prefers the taste–although someone in Washington may feel that wholewheat is more nutritious and rye should be outlawed. This is the freedom that allows the consumer to buy a refrigerator in avocado green despite some planner's desire to have all refrigerators made in white because it might be more economical that way.

In a free economy, the consumer–through his pocketbook–determines what is made and what is sold. The consumer dictates the size, the shape, the quality, the color, even the price.

But no one gets it if there isn't any . . .

Profit must precede allocation. All living things must profit to exist. Bears, squirrels and trees must make a profit in the summer to survive the winter and start producing again next spring. Life survives unprofitable periods only if production exceeded consumption during an earlier period.

Profit should not be confused with savings. Living things must save, if only in the form of fat, to survive profitless periods. But before they can save they must profit.

All systems of society must profit to exist. The contentious issues are: who produces it? who gets it? how is it used? how are these decisions reached? Opinion on these questions should be developed and evaluated in the light of one glaring fact: no one gets it if there isn't any.

It is pointless to give food stamps to poor people if farmers don't produce more food than farmers eat. Persons in government can't "give" a subsidy to an unprofitable activity unless they are first able to take a profit from some other enterprise.[2] seduction results in more . . .

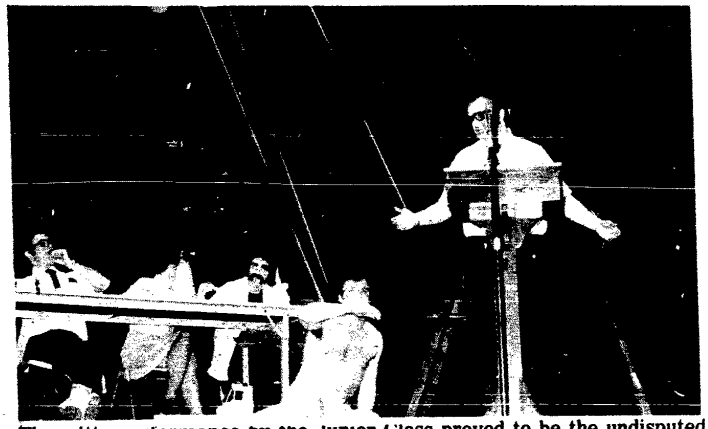
for everybody



The witty performance by the Junior Class proved to be the undisputed winner of this year's All Class Night.

Plan of Education to be Initiated for Health Professions

ROCHESTER, N.Y.-(I.P.)-The University of Rochester will initiate a plan of education for the health professions, including medicine. With support of a grant of $2,058,000 from The Commonwealth Fund, the University "proposes to use the resources of every academic unit in the planning, implementation, and evaluation of what we hope will become a model for pre-professional and professional education in the health sciences, and, eventually, in other fields as well," said President Robert L. Sproull.

Noting the "widely recognized need for a fresh approach to pre-medical and medical education," Sproull said that the greatly increased number of students seeking medical careers "has produced a nationwide imbalance in many students' educational goals. Not surprisingly, much student interest and enthusiasm for learning has been lost in the grim struggle for acceptance at medical school.

"At the same time, some faculty members realize that the pattern of courses taken by most premedical students does not necessarily prepare today's students well for careers in medicine or other health professions, that many able students who are not accepted by medical schools are ill-prepared for alternative careers, and that, unfortunately, many of the latter group settle for careers far below their capabilities. This is a nationwide problem for which the solution must begin on a scale that is manageable in size and in academic content."

The M.D. degree under the new program will require eight years of study, as now, but instead of two four-year units, one in college and one in medical school, it will have three units, of two, four, and two years. The first two years will be general education, during which students will be counseled about health careers and the ways in which they may be pursued.

The next four years will concentrate on the biomedical sciences, but include study of the behavioral and social sciences and the humanities. The last two years will be in clinical medicine. Thus, the major change occurs in the middle four years, which will integrate work that now is divided between the medical school and the College of Arts and Science.

Some of the important health careers, in addition to medicine, for which participants in the Rochester Plan will be prepared are biomedical engineering, genetics and genetics counselling, public health, medical computing, biomedical mathematics, medical administration, nursing, medical economics, and specialties in the basic medical sciences and their applications.

More than 100 faculty members from all parts of the University, particularly the College of Arts and Science, have been involved in developing the program over the past year, according to Dean Kenneth E. Clark. He said the plan will provide more flexible timing of undergraduate and graduate courses. "We want to expose students to course work when they are most likely to benefit from it rather than in predetermined sequence," Dean Clark explained.

"For example, there is no reason why a course in Shakespeare of Chaucer must be taken during the first four years of college or why a course in

Values To Live By In 1976

The fate of men and nations is determined by the values which govern their decisions.

1976 is a year of significance for the peoples of the United States. It should be a time of re-evaluation. A value is the relative worth we assign to some aspect of daily life, or a recognised intrinsic excellence or usefulness. These may be matters of opinion and, therefore, debatable. But many values in human life are basic to the "general welfare of all the people" lying above the daily round and the common task. They serve to establish the principles set out in the Articles of the Constitution of the United States as a constant reminder of fundamental goals and purity of motive.

In the course of two centuries, points of emphasis in national life change. Today in 1976, in a changing world, we see a basic confrontation between the old and new, the conservative and the progressive, self-interest and human welfare, nationalism and a planetary consciousness, or — material values and spiritual values.

Material values confine an individual, a group or a nation within limits determined by the forms of life created to serve its own interests. Forms may change; but if motives of narrow

Bedford County Native To Exhibit Watercolors

HUNTINGDON — A Bedford County native, artist Michael Barkman of Palatine, Illinois, will exhibit his watercolor paintings at the Shoemaker Galleries on the campus of Juniata College.

The opening of the exhibit and a reception for Barkman was held Sunday, March 28, at 3:30 p.m. at the galleries. His work will be on display through April 11.

Barkman, who was raised in Clearville, has painted numerous local landscapes and many of these will be on display. All of his watercolors represent subject matter with a permanence about them. According to the artist, each of his paintings has a certain mood that reflects the "roots" of his past, and to many in the area, their own.

Barkman was graduated from Carnegie Mellon University, Pittsburgh, with a degree in fine arts. He worked for several years as an art director in New York City and later moved to upstate New York and then to Northern California.

A recipient of the Tyrus Wong Award for New Member-California National Watercolor Society in 1971, Barkman has exhibited his work on both the East and West Coasts. His work was shown at the American Watercolor Society (AWS) annual exhibition in New York twice, and in 1967, his painting was among 49 selected for AWS traveling nationwide exhibit to commemorate 100 years of watercolor painting in America.

Barkman received the People's Choice Award as well as first prize in the Rochester Curbstone Art Show in 1969. He also won a first prize there in 1968.

In 1971, he captured second prize in the San Jose Art Show and his work was also selected for the California National Watercolor Society traveling show that year.

Shoemaker Galleries are located in the Carnegie Building on the corner of 17th and Moore Streets. The Galleries are open weekdays from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Saturdays and Sundays from 2 to 5 p.m.

Juniata Rugby Club Falls To Susquehanna

The Rugby Club continued its losing streak last Saturday by dropping two closely contested games to Susquehanna.

Juniata's "A" side was in the game almost all the way, despite starting withoug injured veterans Todd Price and Don Plummer, and in the absence of experienced wing forward Steve Shultis. Al Kulp opened the scoring with a penalty goal, but Susquehanna managed a try and conversion out of the disorderly but hard-played first half. The halftime score was Susquehanna 6, Juniata 3.

Near the end of the first half, senior prop Lee Flinner tore a muscle in the sole of his foot, and was unable to continue. Since no substitutions are allowed in rugby, the team had to play one man short, a deficiency which can usually be compensated for to a large extent, but which in this case may have made the eventual difference in the game.

Susquehanna got another try early in the second half to increase their lead to 10-3. Clayton "Woody" Woodward came right back to score for Juniata, and Al Kulp coverted to make it 10-9.

The game settled into a long, tense struggle, but Susquehanna drew the next blood when their scrum scored a pushover try from five yards out. It was here that Flinner was most obviously missed.

With the score 14-9, Juniata had some breaks go the wrong way, especially a referee's decision on a play by Woodward. He had fielded a short kick in the Susquehanna in-goal in the midst of several defenders, but the referee judged that he had not touched the ball on the ground, as is required to score.

Juniata also had two penalty kicks only five yards from the Susquehanna goal line. Both times, the team elected to give the ball to Vince Yaniga to attempt to score the try that would put them ahead (if converted), but both rushes failed.

Susquehanna added what proved to be an insurance try in the last few minutes, to make the final score 18-9.

The "B" game was perhaps most notable for the windy downpour that the players and spectators had to endure, not to mention the thunder and lightning. It also featured the return of visiting rugby alumni Chuck Barr and Milt Knouse.

Juniata scored early when Tom Terndrup, chasing a loose ball in the Susquehanna in-goal, was clearly obstructed by a Susquehanna player. The referee awarded a penalty try, which he may do if he feels that a try "probably" would have been scored had the obstruction not occurred. Charlie Lerman attempted what should have been an easy conversion, but kicked poorly, leaving the score at 4-0.

As field conditions deteriorated in the rain, the teams slogged on into the second half, playing a game with somewhat understandably poor control of the wet ball and frequent kicking. Susquehanna finally got a try about 15 minutes into the half on a sustained rush, a rarity for the day. The conversion was successful, providing the 6-4 margin of victory.

Juniata looks now to its matches with a tough Frostburg State club, at home next Saturday at 1:00, the last home games of the season. Injuries have taken a large toll of the relatively small roster: Plummer's ankle strain is probably not serious, but Flinner will likely miss at least two weeks, and Price faces knee surgery. Utility player Mike Busch may also be sidelined with a foot injury. The club must work in practice on giving some of its promising new players valuable experience in the basic skills, and also on improving team positioning and coordination for the matches to come, if it is to regain its winning ways this season.

Juniata Netmen Face Largest Schedule Ever

HUNTINGDON, PA — The tennis team at Juniata College, severely struck by a wide assortment of losses from last year's line-up, opened its largest schedule ever today.

The Indians, with Dr. Ernest Post at the helm for the 16th year, will play host to Lebanon Valley in the first of their 14 matches. They will open their slate in the Middle Atlantic Conference Northern Division West Section one week later at Susquehanna.

The Indian losses, which include four of last year's six singles players and all established doubles teams, have come through graduation, the return of number-two singles player Bertram Hell to Grance, and through academic difficulties.

The largest loss is Gavin Ford, the Indians' number-one singles man for the last three years, whose overall record (including tournaments and exhibition trips) was 28-12. Ford, whose exit comes by the academic route, was 8-2 for the regular season last spring, when the Tribe went 6-4, and reached the quarterfinals of the conference tournament.

Andy Vonderheyde (third) and Gil Landis (fifth) have further thinned the singles ranks through graduation. Vonderheyde was 6-3 last season, Landis 8-2, and Hell

"We have a lot of bodies despite the losses," says Post. "What we need to find are the players. Team spirit is good, and I'm not pessimistic, but I'd be a little more optimistic with Ford."

Senior Mont Rice (Connellsville) and sophomore Gary VanHartogh (Pompton Plains, N.J.), who played at fourth and sixth singles last year, will be joined by junior Mike Sencindiver (Merion) in the battle for the top positions. Rice was 6-4 last spring, VanHartogh 5-3, while Sencindiver wound up 5-3 at number three doubles.

The remaining singles spots are up for grabs among several younger prospects, including top freshman Greg Norton (Bloomsburg), sophs Dave Wallin (Lancaster) and Dave Shober (Ephrata), and junior John Wetmore (Malvern).

The doubles teams, says Post, are still very much up in the air.

Two new opponents appear on the Indian schedule for the year, both to be played on a four-day term-break road trip. Bloomsburg is set for Apr. 22 and Kings, a previous exhibition foe, for Apr. 23. The trip will open at St. Francis Apr. 21 and conclude at Scranton Apr. 24.

The complete Indian schedule:

Apr. 1, Lebanon Valley; 3, Lock Haven; 6, at Dickinson; 8, at Susquehanna; 10, at Wilkes; 13, Lycoming; 15, Elezabethtown; 21, at St. Francis; 22, at Bloomsburg; 23, at Kings; 24, at Scranton; 26, Gettysburg; 28, at Albright.

May 5, at Penn State-Altoona; 7-8, MAC Individual Championships.

Juniata Sets Cinder Slate

HUNTINGDON, PA — With five of last year's top six scorers gone, the track and field team at Juniata College will open perhaps its toughest schedule ever Apr. 3 at Susquehanna University.

Under fourth-year head coach Dean Rossi, the Indians face a 12-team slate, their largest since 1969. Their dozen foes will include Lycoming twice — once in a triangular meeting with Western Maryland and once in a quadrangular meeting with Gettysburg and Bucknell.

Western Maryland is one of four new opponents on the Indian slate. The others — Shepherd, Frostburg State and Davis & Elkins — will appear in another quadrangular meet Apr. 12 at Shepherd in Shepherdstown, W. Va.

Rossi rates Bucknell, the defending East Coast Conference champ, and Gettysburg, runner-up last year in the Indians' own Middle Atlantic Conference, as the best of the competition. Given the Indians' personnel losses, however, he sees very little breathing room anywhere on the schedule.

For the first time since moving to Juniata, Rossi will lack a

Track Events

Juniata's track and field competitors had a little taste of the action before the actual opening date as the Frankies of St. Francis College came to JC for a pretrial track meet. The meet was held Tuesday afternoon the 25th. in a very informal atmosphere as there was no official score kept, no brilliant colored uniforms displayed by either contestants, and the athletes joking around and having a good 'ole time. Even such an informal affair as this did have a purpose which I believe it to be getting the athletes accustomed to competition so that JC will be as prepared as possible to take on our first opponent.

St. Francis brought about 15 competitors and although not all track and field events were run most events in a meet were. The highpoint of the scrimmage was Jack McCullough's 3 mile run. Jack, although running with no one to actually "push" him, crossed the finish line at the 14 minute and 56 second mark. This time was Jack's personal best and also was only 5 seconds away from tying the school record. Personally, I look for Jack to do a lot of great things in his specialty event of long distance running. Paul Wilson, who's specialty is the mile, ran the ½ mile for the

"How Does Anyone Know A Good Teacher"

GREENCASTLE, IND. — (I.P.) — "How does anyone know a good teacher?" DePauw University history department head Dr. John Baughman asks. "For all practical purposed, one is not trained in the first place to become a college teacher," Dr. James Cooper, another DePauw historian contends. "One is trained to be a professional historian or biologist or linguist. Is is assumed that through trial and error or by imitating teachers you've observed that a person learns how to become a good teacher," says Cooper.

Last summer Cooper, Baughman and three more colleagues plunged into a rigorous faculty development program that focused on the learning process. They joined 30 college teachers from 10 other private liberal arts colleges in the Great Lakes Colleges Association for a two-part workshop.

The teachers were selected competitively. Each was chosen because he had offered a promising educational experiment that presumably could lead to better teaching. But that was only a part of the equation. "One of the first things we did was to assess and recognize the kinds of problems we have in teaching," Baughman siad. "What are our own personal hangups in being effective classroom teachers? What physical disabilities or psychological hangups do we have? Are we timid teachers, passive, neurotic or eccentric?

"If a teacher has just gone through a divorce, suffers the loneliness of celibacy, or has a nagging wife or husband, it can affect your teaching." Spouses of many of the 35 teachers attended part of the summer workshop. They provided another, occasionally amusing, perspective on personality as a factor in teaching. Questioned one wife, puzzled, about how to deal with her omniscient husband, "How do you live with someone who plays Jesus Christ all day, and then has to come home in the evening and take out the garbage?".

"This was the first time I've heard of spouses sitting in on a session of this type, and it was most stimulating for everyone," said observer Dr. Ann Heiss, former professor at the University of California (Berkeley) Division of Higher Education. Dr. Heiss is an external review team member for the Lilly Endowment supported project.

Some workshop sessions were devoted to role-playing. One professor from another college was uptight; he confessed he didn't know how to act around his peers who would be deciding whether he received tenure. Four of the workshop professors formed a simulated "tenure committee." With him they thrashed over the things bothering the young professor.

"This role playing showed to him a little more clearly te nature of his own relationship with the kinds of people who would make judgements on him," Cooper said. "It was a very revealing thing. In sessions of this kind people let their hair down. You can bring things like this to the surface at a workshop like this that you can't back on your own campus." Baughman called it a "gentlemanly unbearing."

Recently Approved Guidelines

AKRON, OHIO — (I.P.) —The University of Akron Board of Trustees recently approved the following guidelines recommended by the board's educational policy committee on academic retrenchment resulting from financial exigency:

Data and documentation: Among other consulting and communication efforts, the university administration "shall provide specific documentation of the evidence supporting a faculty reduction recommendation. Except for financial material of a personal nature, this information shall be widely shared among the university community."

Faculty Advisory Committee: Elected members of the University Council will act as the faculty advisory committee in dealing with matters of financial exigency relating to faculty reductions.

Administrative recommendation: Before any action is taken on retrenchment, the university administration will report its recommendation to the faculty advisory committee in "open meetings accessible to the entire university community."

Academic due process: Special care will be taken to protect and honor accepted and existing procedures and rights appropriate to a faculty member's tenured or probationary status. The eduational policy committee recommended and the board has approved that, "Termination because of financial exigency must be distinguished from a proceeding that might lead to dismissal for cause."

Procedures for faculty reduction in force: The board has approved that release of any faculty in a financial exigency shall, whenever possible, be treated as a lay-off, not as a termination. Under this guideline the released faculty member's place will not be filled by a replacement for three years, unless that person has been offered reappointment within 60 days to accept or decline the offer.

Granting of Honors

HANOVER, N.H. — (I.P.) — A sliding scale for the granting of geheral honors and for attaining annual honors lists has been established by the faculty of arts and sciences at Dartmouth College in an attempt to tighten these requirements. In addition, more stringent requirements were also voted for the awarding of departmental distinctions.

The new bench-marks for honors are all based upon the academic achievement of those graduating the preceding academic year. For the rank of summa cum laude, a student must achieve a standing for the entire college course no lower than that achieved by the top five percent of the preceding graduating class.

Grade average floors were established for the achieving of the three levels of distinction in major subjects.

singular, "do-it-all" performer. Having started with Joe Coradetti, he finished last year with Mike Slough. The Tribe's leading point-producer for the last two seasons, Slough had taken firsts in six events and powered both Tribe relay teams.

To pick up form Slough's and his other losses, Rossi will first turn to his distance men. Last spring's top three one and two-milers return, all for senior years. Jack McCullough (Willow Grove) set the Indian two-mile record last year at 9:30, also logging a 4:27.6 for the mile. Paul Wilson (Glenside) topped the milers at 4:24.7, also going 9:52 for the two. Steve Hooper (Altoona) ranked third in both at 4:34 and 9:54.

An additional strength will be the discus, where sophomre Calvin Shoenberger (Bellwood) returns after setting the Indian mark at 147-2 last year. He will be joined by Rick Terrizzi, a standout at nearby Huntingdon High School last spring, and by Don Stone, a transfer student from Clemson. Shoenberger and Stone could also help in the shot, where soph Jim Kistler (Allentown) is the leading veteran.

In the javelin, the Indians' top two hurlers return — senior Robin Shean (Derry) at 192-7 and junior Rick Green (Johnstown) at 185-5.

A final strength could be the hurdles, where frosh Bob McNelly (Somerset), fourth in the state IH last year, must replace the Indians' second-leading scorer, Rick Nedimyer, and sixth-leading scorer, Chuck Yarnall. Given time, feels Rossi, NcNelly can become another Coradetti or Slough.

Rossi also looks for consistent points in the pole vault, where both senior Dan Bausher (Wyomissing) and junior Rick Loeliger (Irwin) go 13 feet, and the high jump, where soph Rick Bloser (Enola) goes six.

The complete Indian schedule: Apr. 3, at Susquehanna; Apr. 7, Lock Haven; Apr. 10, Lycoming and Western Maryland; Apr. 12, at Shepherd with Frostburg and Davis & Elkins; Apr. 14, at Dickinson; Apr. 24, Albright; Apr. 26, Bucknell, Gettysburg and Lycoming; Apr. 30-May 1, MAC Championships at Dickinson.

heck of it and turned in a good time of 2:06. Casey Koller, a promising young freshman, also showed some of his stuff as he turned in a good performance in the quarter mile with a clocking of 53.6 seconds.

In the sprinting department of a couple of freshman, Dave Robisson and Bob McNelly, drew praise from Coach Mitchell. According to the coach, both Dave and Bob "looked good" in their events in the mile relay and 220 yard dash, respectively. Coach Mitchell was also pleased to say that he saw signs of improvement over last seasons in the performance of Dave Yost who had respectable times in the 100 and 220 yard dashes.

Even though track and field practice is only 3 ½ weeks gone, and JC actually hasn't been put to any test, there are a few areas the team need to develop. These specific events are the quarter mile, on-half mile, and jumping events. The field events should be able to hold their own among all comers this season. So gang when you find yourself in a lazy afternoon mood why not make an appearance at a tennis match, baseball game, or a track meet and sit back, relax, and enjoy the action.

Essay Contest Offers A Prize Money Can't Buy

Which is the more attractive prize — $1,000 or a chance to be a guest at a week-long meeting of such intellectuals as Milton Friedman, F.A. Hayek and William F. Buckley, Jr.?

How about both — plus a trip to Scotland? That is what the National Federation of Indipendent Business is offering the top winners of its ADAM SMITH BICENTENNIAL ESSAY CONTEST.

The contest, sponsored by NFIB in cooperation with the Intercollegiate Studies Institute, offers a total of $7,000 in scholarships and other prizes to winners in high school and college/university divisions.

First place winners in each division will receive $1,000 scholarships and will be sponsored as guests at the August, 1976, meeting of the Mont Pelerin Society at St. Andrew's University, Scotland. Second place winners in each division will receive $500 scholarships, and a total of 20 runners-up will each receive $100.

The Mont Pelerin Society, founded in 1947 by Nobel Prize-winning economist F.A. Hayek, annually brings together some of the world's most distinguished intellectuals. Buckley and Professor Friedman, a past-president, are but two of its prominent members.

Students from all levels of higher education, from junior college to graduate school, are eligible to compete in the college/university division of the writing competition.

The theme is "The Future of Capitalism: The Market Economy vs. The Planned Economy in America's Third Century." The contest commemorates the 200the anniversary of the publication of "The Wealth of Nations."

Scotsman Adam Smith published his monumental work on March 9, 1776, about four months before the signing of the Declaration of Independence. Many believe that Smith's statement of the principles of free market economics was as revolutionary — and as important for freedom — as the great political document written in Philadelphis by Thomas Jefferson and John Adams. The latter, incidentally, had his own copy of "The Wealth of Nations."

Smith's argument that free enterprise, not government activity, makes a nation prosperous has been hotly debated from the day his book was published. It is under attack today in America, the nation generally considered to be the most capitalistic — and most prosperous and free — on the globe.

Senators Hubert Humphrey and Jacob Javits, for example, recently introduced legislation calling for the establishment of a government board to carry out "economic planning" for the entire United States. No debate on the merits of this proposed "Balanced Growth and Economic Planning Act" can fail to take into account the principles advanced by Adam Smith 200 years ago.

Judges in the college/university division of the essay contest are Dr. Arthur Shenfield, noted British economist, barrister and past-president of the Mont Pelerin Society; Dr. Israel Kirzner, professor of economics at New York University; and Dr. Richard F. Staar, associate director of the Hoover Institution at Stanford University.

Among the judges in the high school division is William E. Simon, U.S. Secretary of the Treasury.

Deadline for entering the contest is June 15. Entry forms are available from the Intercollegiate Studies Institute, 14 South Bryn Mawr Avenue, Bryn Mawr, PA 19010.

Condition of Education

Expenditures on education during the current academic year will reach a recore $120 billion according to the second annual report on "The Condition of Education," Assistant Secretary for Education Virginia Y. Trotter announced today.

The report, prepared by HEW's National Center for Education Statistics (NCES) and just delivered to Congress, is expanded in scope and perspective from the first edition. Demographic trends and political and social events are more closely tied to education trends. Statistics on achievment are related to information on the population, the schools, and the instructional staff.

Costs for elementary and secondary education for the current 1975-76 school year are estimated at $75.1 billion, up from $18.0 billion in 1960. The report notes, however, in spite of rising expenditures, recent assessments have shown that the writing skills of 13 and 17-year-olds have declined slightly since 1969 and only 46.6 percent of 17-year-olds can interpret a traffic ticket.

"The report identifies both positive and negative aspects of American education," said Marie D. Eldridge, Administrator of NCES. "While it describes a population with increasing levels of education attainment, the record of formal accomplishments must be considered together with statistics on achievement and occupations."

Other findings of the report include:

— the elementary and secondary school age population will drop from 50.4 million in 1975 to a projected 44.8 million in 1985. Yet, as the student population declines, many administrative costs will remain fixed;

— the decline in elementary/secondary enrollments coupled with the current economic situation are resulting in a more stable teaching force with greater seniority and higher average salaries;

— public confidence in education leaders, as measured by public opinion polls of the National Opinion Research Corporation, has fallen from 49.0 percent in 1974 to 30.9 percent in 1975; — higher education expenditures rose from $6.7 billion in 1959-60 to an estimated $44.9 billion in the current 1975-76 school year;

— enrollment in higher education institutions continued to climb, from 3.8 million in 1960 to over 10.6 million in fall 1975, reflecting the increase in the young adult population. There is uncertainty as to the size of future enrollments when the baby boom passes the traditional age of college attendance;

— real progress seems to have been made in access to higher education. Participation of minority students now exceeds that of white students from families of dimilar income levels.

The report also examines education trends over sufficiently long time periods to provide a perspective for examining current problems. Historical data on American education since 1635 is included. But immediate problems are highlighted using data assembled from governmental and non-governmental sources to probe the successes and failure of the education system.

One section, new to this year's edition, reviews the concerns facing elementary and secondary education, drawing from public opinion and data on functional skills of young persons, dropouts, and groups with special education needs.

Copies of the report are available from the Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Purpose of Liberal Education

SOUTH HADLEY, MASS.-(I.P.)-President Dayid Bt... Truman of Mount Holyoke College notes that "a purpose of genuine liberal education must be to provide the student with skills that, whether they immediately fit a first-job opening or not are likely over time to prove valuable in any calling and in a wide variety of circumstances."

An he specified what those skills were: "the ability to recognize and to define a problem, the understanding to place it in its appropriate intellectual and temporal context, the competence to recognize and to weigh evidence, the capacity to assess and to articulate with precision a propositions's implications for personal and social values, and the ability to act with compassions and an awareness of one's own fallibility.

"Such skills, painfully acquired are the monopoly of no one field, no one discipline, but they are the concern of a leveral arts college."

President Truman cited two sources of the current discontent about liberal arts education, the first "th implication that the principal reason for attending college is and should be monetary gain for the individual," and "everyone-should-go maxim (which) inevitably encourages the view that education, including higher education, is something that is received rather than axquired, that it is an essentially passive and preferably painless experience for the students."

He spoke of the skills "that are the objective of a genuine liberal education" being "a collegial, not a disciplinary, property." Although warning against being "dogmatic or inflexible in our pursuit of those skills," President Truman continued, "flexibility and an avoidance of dogma can readily translate into an aimless eclecticism unless they are guided and tested by shared and conscious purpose."

"When told I had cancer of the larynx, my reaction was: what good is a lawyer without a voice?"

Frank Purcell, Attorney

"That was nine years ago. In less than two months after the operation, I was back at work and talking. Today, I do everything I did before. Even try cases in court.

"All of this is thanks to early detection, effective treatment, and the extremely beneficial voice training program offered by the American Cancer Society.

"I've won my battle. But the battle against cancer goes on. So, please, have regular checkups. And give to the American Cancer Society. We want to wipe out cancer in your lifetime."

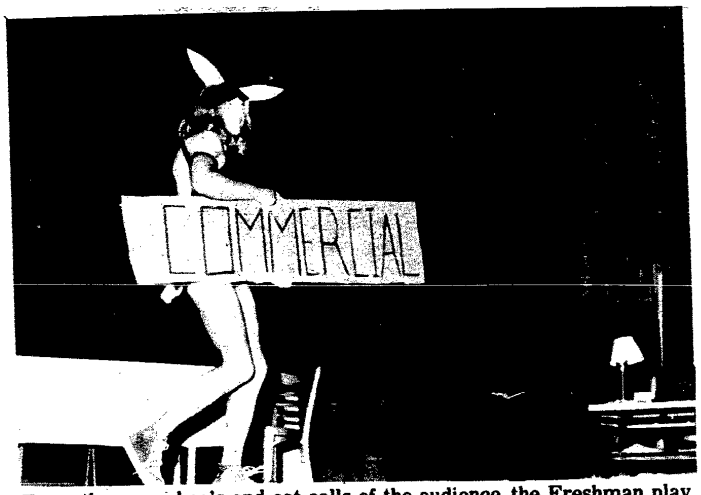
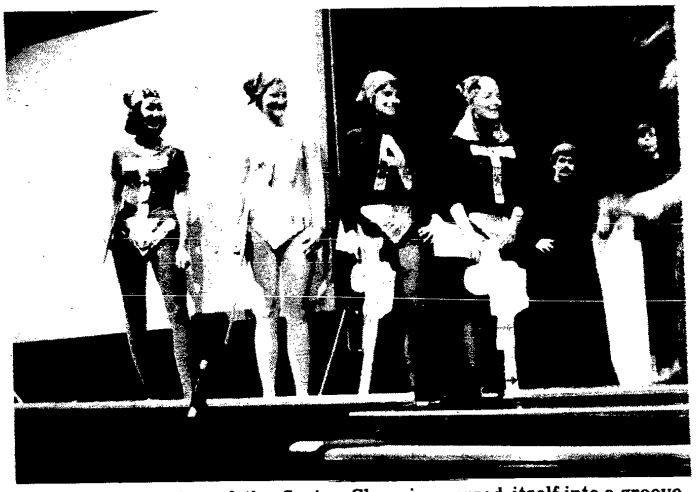
Salt Lake Has Saltier Spots

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The Great Salt Lake is getting saltier in spots, less salty in others. Ever since an earthen railroad causeway was built across the northern part of the lake in 1959, the north end has been saltier and the south end fresher.

The resound chance of our campus's many problems prove to be an effectively entertaining highlight.



From the many boo's and cat calls of the audience the Freshman play proved to be shakey.



The ludicrous play of the Senior Class immersed itself into a groove from which there was no reward.

Subsidize Electric Bills by Working Middle Class

PHILADELPHIS — The working middle class may soon be forced to subsidize the electric bills of those on welfare or other public assistance programs, the state's top electric utility executive warned here today.

"Preferential rates virtually assure that those who built and now maintain the Commonwealth are going to have to pay more for power," said Earl J. Miller, president of the Pennsylvania Electric Association.

Preferential rates are designed to give a customer a special discount on the first few hundred kilowatt hours of power that he uses. The idea is now being considered as a new part of the rate-making process in Pennsylvania.

"We're not for subsidies like preferential rates," said Miller.

Citing the post office and governmental self-help programs, Miller said, "it doesn't seem to us that the idea of subsidies ever worked well in American society."

"Someone is going to have to pay for the subsidy," he said. "The money can't just materialize like manna from heaven," he added.

"As long as we can obtain sufficient monies to attract capital that will help build needed power plants, the method of setting rates is not of primary concern," Miller said. For the poor disadvantaged there are already programs designed to provide economic help.

While it is critical to make sure that consumers have all the power they need it is just as important in these times of hard money to make certain "everyone pays fairly for the energy he receives," the PEA executive said.

Miller also took issue with those who would halt technology and industrial development in the name of preserving our "quality of life."

They're like the 19th century Luddites in England who smashed textile machinery because they thought technology meant lower wages and few jobs, Miller said. But they attacked the very force that made possible the elimination of cruel injustices, the widening of reforms, and a better paycheck for all concerned.

"The neo-Luddites enjoy an affluence and freedom — thanks to industrialism — that many an ancient prince would envy," said Miller. Their philosophy threatens to keep those same fruits of success from the rest of society.

Pointing out that Pennsylvania consumers will need 50 percent more power by 1985 than they are using today, Miller said "we must act today" to build coal and nuclear-fueled power plants.

It takes from six to seven years to build a coal-fired power plant and up to ten years to build a nuclear plant, he pointed out.

"We need new plants desperately because the current generating capacity in the state is not sufficient to meet future needs," he added.

Miller addressed the Architects and Engineers Conference sponsored by the Pennsylvania Electric Association.

There will be a position open for coordination and direction of summer conferences on the Juniata Campus. The position will be three months in duration, and the renumeration will be $800. Room and board.

Music Festival Features Premier of New Work at Pitt

PITTSBURGH — The University of Pittsburgh will play host to the Stephen Foster Bicentennial Music Festival Friday and Saturday, April 2 and 3, in Oakland. The concerts, honoring the 150th anniversary of Stephen Foster's birth as well as America's 200th birthday, will include student singers from Pitt and other schools, and will feature the premier of a new work.

The Stephen Foster Bicentennial Mucis Festival is made possible by grants from the A.W. Mellon Educational and Charitable Trust Fund and the Eli Lilly Foundation.

Friday, April 2, the Pitt Men's Glee Club and the Pitt Women's Choral will present a joing concert featuring the songs of Stephen Collins Foster. The concert will be directed by A. Thomas Caruso of the Glee Club and Patricia Crosby of the Women's Choral, both faculty members at Pitt. The Friday concert will begin at 8:30 p.m. at Stephen Foster Memorial Hall. Admission is $2 for adults, $1 for those 16 and under, and free to students with Pitt ID.

The Saturday, April 3, concert will conclude with a first performance of "The Chambered Nautilus," an original composition based on Oliver Wendell Holmes' poem and written by Thomas Canning of West Virginia University. The Pitt Men's Glee Club will be joined by the University of Cincinnati Men's Glee Club (John Lehman, director) and the Indiana University of Pennsylvania Men's Glee Club (Robert Lloyd, director). This concert will be held at 8:30 p.m. in Carnegie Music Hall, Oakland. Admission is $2.50 for adults, $1 for those 16 and under, and free for students with any college ID.

Host group for the event is the Pitt Men's Glee Club, the oldest student group on the University of Pittsburgh campus, founded in 1890 as the Banjo and Mandolin Club. During the Foster Festival, the Pitt club will feature performances by the Pitt Tunes, a barbershop quartet, and the Banjo and Mandolin Club, a 13-member group based on the original organization. The Men's Glee Club has been performing in the Pittsburgh area and is currently raising funds for a spring concert tour in Europe.

Tickets for the April 2 and 3 concerts can be purchased at the Pitt Student Union Ticket Office or from the Pitt Men's Glee Club (624-5956, noon-4 p.m. Monday through Friday) or at the door the evenings of the performances.

Variety at WJC

by Kathy Jacobs

Are you looking for some change and diversity in your life? We at WJC may have just what you want. Every Sunday morning for the rest of the school year WJC presents two special programs.

From nine to eleven AM listen to "Sunday Morning Classics with Chris Fowler. Ranging from Baroque to Twentieth Century, this special programming is part of WJC's effort to present a greater variety of musical styles.

From eleven to twelve AM on Sundays, you can listen to "New Tunes" with Dave Darkoch "Tree". This also is a weekly series presenting new artists and new releases. The programming reflects your desires to play what you want to hear. Tree tells me that due to recent agreements with record companies, WJC has received full service from Atlantic, Capitol, Polydor, A&M, MCA, and United Artists. So the newest tunes will be available.

Tuesday nights from nine to twelve you can hear three hours of Jazz and Neil Berg or Chris Fowler. Neil has had much experience in presenting this type of music before. They are doing the show together to promote even greater variety.

Be sure to stay in tune with Music Radio WJC, 620 AM 108 FM, for these special shows, and for good listening all the time.

Their performance drew many loud and vigorous rounds of "Boooo" from the mostly older audience. A Freshmen class spokesman later announced that this years presentation was meant only to serve as "an exploration, a study of this All Class Night thing".

Other activities included a warm-up concert by RIVERSIDE featuring Terry Glunt, Bill Walters and Frank Richards. Dewayne Rideout hosted the evening's entertainment and provided the audience with a comic monologue while it awaited the judge's verdict. Professors Cherry, Wagoner, Davis and Lewis also entertained with ludicrous readings of the history of Juniata College and surrounding Huntingdon.

self-interest remain, nothing of value to human culture and civilization results.

Spiritual values relate to the enlightenment, the freedom and the creative growth of the human race. They promote the innate human tendency toward synthesis and wholeness. They expand rather than limit the horizons of human vision and capacity. They can be symbolised as an upward spiral of infinite potentiality.

The spiritual values of greatest importance to us in the United States in 1976 may well be those that lift us out of our self-centred, self-created treadmill. Self-interest benefits no one, including oneself, so interdependent and interrelated has human society become.

The "sacrifice or selfishness" would release new values into national and international life. It could end the arms race, now perpetuated by the power and profit motive, and lead the way towards world disarmament and world peace, visioned and provided for in the Charter of the United Nations.

The sacrifice of selfishness provides for the sharing and contribution of all parts of society in the growth and prosperity of the whole. It provides for responsibility, concern and commitment, for wholeness in attitudes and actions, for a new perspective on life and its true values.

The true values of the peoples of the United States, visioned and stated by its Founders two hundred years ago, lie in these few principles or qualities: unity, tranquility — social harmony, security, freedom, and a general wellbeing — "for all the people". In such a framework, a sense of responsibility develops side by side with the rights and freedoms to which all are entitled; mutual trust and respect provide the safeguard.

The United States can light the way into a better future for mankind as a whole, fulfilling a true "leadership" role in world affairs, by the self-discipline of renounced selfishness and materialism.

times a year they'd only have to do twice); plus it would be financially cheaper, (although not enough to effect tuition, unless to counter balance inflation.)

Of course the greatest problem that will have to be faced will be adjusting to five courses that last fifteen weeks. One suggestion might be before changing the calendar, trying to redesign those courses that are not in tune with the ten week system. (How many times have you taken a course that seemed like fifteen weeks worth of material jammed into ten weeks?)

If you have any opinion of your own, pro or con, it would be wise to make it known to student government and/or the administration, for they need student feedback. Freshmen and Sophomores should especially be concerned, since they'd be the ones who will be getting either the grain or the shaft.

anatomy can be taken only during the first year of medical school. The time should vary according to the individual need. Under the Rochester Plan all components of the University will become available to all students as they plan academic programs."

Present System

DeKalb, Ill. — (I.P.) — Emphasis has shifted to demands for academic rigor and traditionalism in an attempt to prepare a student for the present system — a system formerly referred to as "establishment," says Dr. Harry Canon, vice-president for student affairs at Northern Illinois University.

But he is quick to point out that today's student should not be characterized as apathetic. "Their energies are focused on different approaches to life. In the sixties, the key to a better life was social reform and now it seems to be in a determined effort to cope with the present system," Canon continued. "In any event, they are certainly not unconcerned and the level of personal concern for society is as high now as it has ever been."

Dr. Ronald Jackson, dean of student life at the University of Rochester recently completed a study on contemporary students and their values and attitudes. His report contrasted the belief in the sixties that education had almost replaced religion as the new salvation with students' beliefs in the seventies that much less faith is placed in education as a means of social change.

Canon agrees with Jackson and adds that there is more rationality shown by students involved in student government and other aspects of the decision-making process. Canon contends that there are as many students today working for a variety of causes as there were in the sixties but that they are less evident to the general public and the media.

"Join the College Republicans? You're kidding!"

No joke.

We're serious.

The College Republican movement is an exciting, dynamic group of students committed to political action in the Republican Party. We're involved in political activities at all levels--national, state, local, and campus. Voter registration, canvassing, headquarters work, debates, literature distribution, research, speaking--these are just a few of the ways College Republicans make their voices heard.

But the College Republican movement is more than campaigning. It's meeting with local and national office holders and exchanging views on current issues. It's social and community action programs. It's conventions and rallies. It's picnics and dinners and dances and parties. It's getting to know other students from all over the United States. It's whatever you want it to be.

Can you change the world by joining the College Republicans? Probably not, but you can try. You'll have the opportunity to make things happen in the Republican Party and in politics. And have a great time doing it.

Over 150,000 college students are now participating in the College Republican movement through their membership in CR clubs on more than a thousand campuses.

Get Involved. Join the College Republicans. It's about time that you...

Get Serious.

Lampoon Editor's Revue To Be "Erotic Evening"

by A.E. Boombower

The timing is perfect for tomorrow's "National Lampoon Editor's Review". For the seniors, Program Reviews will finally be done; for the working student population, it is payday; and for everyone it's a TGIF. So, prepare yourself for laughs and fun.

Chris Miller will be speaking under the topic of "Toe Sucking in Albania, or, An Evening of Erotic Laughter" at 8:15 in Oller Hall. Miller is best known for his "Telejester" story in the Lampoon, with other essays and stories such as "Caked Joy Rag", "The Toilet Papers", and "Stacked Like Me". The "Review" has received wide acclaim on campuses across the nation.

The National Lampoon originated at Harvard University as the Harvard Lampoon, a campus humor magazine. It first went national with its life-sized parodies of Time, Playboy, and Cosmopolitain magazines. The national version of the Lampoon began in 1970 when three ex-editors of the Harvard Lampoon concluded that the idea could be popular nationally. The New York Times states, "... the National Lampoon isn't especially trying to devastate, improve or suggest social change — it finds all that rather boring. There is very little anger, blackness or bitter sickery in its humor. Nor does it proselytize or stand for anything, is zeroes in on everything, willy-nilly, across the board."

Over the past five years, the Lampoon has changed greatly. Largely comprised of political satire and parody on the American lifestyle in its early days, it has reached new decadence in the past several years with its sexual grossness and "death" essays. Lampoon has become a parody of itself, reworking old material in recent months on sex and death. It has become an institution, much like Johnny Carson — you can tell the punch line from the beginning of the joke. The magazine is highly visual, relying heavily upon pictures, sketches, and cartooning.

Miller should prove to accentuate the trend toward sexual grossness in Lampoon, and from the promotional material, he will be relying heavily on visual effects. Price is $1,50 in advance, $2.00 at the door.

Students To Act As Counselors

Bethany, W. Va.-(I.P.)-The new Student-to-Student Counseling Program at Bethany College, designed to train students as academic counselors, will begin next month, according to John S. Cunningham, acting dean of students and coordinator of counseling services here. The program itself gets underway Sept. 1, 1976, and should be fully operational by the following September.

"The concept of the Bethany program is based on" the program originally developed by William F. Brown, professor of educational psychology at Southwest Texas State University, explained Dean Cunningham. "But Brown's approach deals primarily with study and reading skills, and this is really only a segment of the peer counseling effort we envision."

The new program, sponsored by a grant of $5,990 from the Exxon Education Foundation, will be the first adaptation of Brown's work to deal with the student's total development — his life in and out of the classroom. To accomplish this, residence hall advisors will be trained to work in close association with those faculty leaders responsible for the academic and personal advisement of the freshman class.

Once trained, these students will be qualified to counsel effectively on study and career-choice skills, time management, and social-personal adjustment as well as orient the new student to all aspects of the college community. In order to develop the abilities of student advisors, two college courses will be created. Both will be taught by personnel from the Education, English, Sociology, Psychology, and Religious Studies Departments and the Student Personnel Office.

These courses will be devoted chiefly to familiarization with human development theories; in-depth orientation to Bethany's academic, administrative, and co-curricular programs; and development of interpersonal and problem-solving skills. Approximately 36 student advisors will live and work with the incoming freshman class during the fall semester. Twelve of them will remain in the residence halls during the spring

Juniata College Plans Centennial Celebration

An all-day celebration honoring Juniata College's first 100 years has been scheduled for Saturday, May 1, on the Juniata campus.

The focus of the day's activities will be the Centennial Convocation, which will take place at 2:30 that afternoon in Memorial Gymnasium. During the convocation, Dr. Frederick M. Binder will be formally invested as the college's eighth president.

Dr. James Berton Rhoads, archivist of the United States, will deliver the main address. Dr. Rhoads received the bachelor's and master's degrees from the University of California, Berkeley, in 1950 and 1952, respectively. He earned the Ph. D. degree at American University in 1965.

Associated with the the National Archives and Records Service since 1952, Dr. Rhoads has served as U.S. archivist since 1968. He is chairman of the Archives Advisory Council, the National Archives Trust Fund Board, the administrative committee of the Federal Register and the National Historical Publications Commission.

Other activities planned for the May 1 celebration include the traditional May Day Breakfast (for women only), departmental open houses, several showings of "Season of Good Favor," a special Centennial desplay in Shoemaker Galleries and a presidential reception.

"A Festival in Drama and Music," presented by faculty and administration members, is planned for 8:15 p.m. in Oller Auditorium.

The May 1st weekent has also been designated as a spring Parents Weekend.

It's too bad that the athletic fields are always so soggy around this place.

Juniata Students Participate In Internship Program

HUNTINGDON — It may be no more classes spring term for 12 Juniata College students, but they are still studying and learning — as business interns.

Through the business internship program, senior business majors are placed in full-time positions at nine area organizations. The objective of the program, according to Charles W. Wise, assistant professor of economics and business administration, is to give the students an opportunity to become familiar with the many aspects of decision-making in business.

"The student should observe and analyze the sources of data and the methodology for decision-making, the constraints upon the process and the types of decisions," Wise said.

The students, who receive three units of credit for their work, meet with Wise weekly to discuss their progress and share experiences. The students were chosen for the program by departmental faculty on the basis of ability and general performance.

Basically the program is divided into three areas of concern: general observation of the business, collecting data for decision-making and examination of decision-making in specific operations.

"A general observation, which will allow the student to acquire a broad perspective of the organization and its operations, is gained through an examination of historical materials concerning the evolution of the organization," Wise said.

Examining the data for decision-making, according to Wise, involves analyzing how communications move from one level of the organization to another and studying the types of information which flow into and out of the decision centers.

"The principle emphasis of the program falls on the last five weeks of the program when the student studies decision-making in several functional areas: production, planning, finance-accounting, marketing-sales, and personnel," Wise said.

The participating organizations are Huntingdon Area High School, C.H. Miller Hardware Co., Gerbo Footwear Corp., Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., Mead Products, J.C. Blair Memorial Hospital, Elco-Huntingdon Corp., J.B. Kunz Co. and Pittsburgh Plate Glass Industries, Inc.

April Fool's Joke

HARRISBURG, Apr. 1 — A sad April Fool's joke is being played on Pennsylvania consumers and it may cost many of them millions of dollars in increased electric bills, the President of the Pennsylvania Electric Association said here today.

"Some people are trying to use Pennsylvania as a test tube for a social experiment called preferential rates," said Earl J. Miller, PEA President.

Miller was addressing the Harrisburg Chamber of Commerce.

Preferential rates provide a special low rate for the first several hundred kilowatt hours of power used and "are being talked about as a way to relieve the poor, the disadvantaged and those on welfare from the burdent of higher electric bills," said Miller.

"As such they are a subsidy because someone must pay the cost not picked up," he said.

Claiming that the working middle class would have to pay more Miller said, "we're against preferential rates."

"Let some other state dip its finger into the water and see if it comes out," said Miller.

"But let's not have Pennsylvania jump in with another political welfare scheme when we don't even know if it will be successful," he added.

We're not against helping the poor, said Miller. "We're against the idea of using electric rates to accomplish a social purpose."

Miller emphasized the importance of planned growth to the businessmen. "The only way the poor will get a larger piece of the economic pie is to bake a bigger pie," he said.

More people and households, an expanding work force, grow-

JC Honor Society Currently Accepting Applications

In concordance with the 1975-76 constitution of the Juniata College Honor Society, students are hereby publicly notified of the candidacy requirements for the Juniata College Honor Society:

The initial criterion for candidacy is the overall cummulative grade point average (GPA). Juniors must have at least a 2.50 GPA (on a 3 point scale); seniors, a GPA of 2.25. Juniors and seniors who have attained a GPA requirement and who have not already received formal notification should notify the society president before Monday, April 12.

The selection procedure is based on the quality and content of a self-prepared resume. This eliminates the mandatory interview although, interviews will be granted upon special request. The resume should provide supportive evidence of broad cultural interests and academic achievement. (Recipients of the formal candidacy announcement are, as determined by the Dean of Academic Affairs, assumed to possess moral integrity.) The resume is then judged by resident student and faculty members of the Honor Society and is awarded points according to an established scale. The candidates remain anonymous until the actual acceptances are made.

The Honor Society hopes that these procedures will eliminate many of the injustices that have occurred in the past.

Respectfully,
Thomas O'Brien

Although All Class weekend has passed almost two weeks ago, and it is not my desire to whip a dead horse, some of the plots of those plays had recurring themes in them that deserve further scrutiny. Perhaps the whole evening was summed up in the Juniors' little song, "Juniata what's the matter." That of course, was the most civilized the student discontent was worded that night, other scripts revealed more graphic portrayals of students attitudes towards different factions of the Juniata College community.

My personal feeling while watching the plays was that they were hard to laugh at as a whole, (although some individuals were humorous) as the struck a little too close to home. There is something wrong with this whole college, and while many of the problems are difficult to adequatly define, it seems we went out on stage this year to point the finger, and not only the index finger, at the administration of this college.

I do not feel that I am qualified to make a determination in this column as to whether the administrative body of Juniata College is at fault for the apathy and generally unhappy attitude of the students on this campus, because quite simply I have almost no idea as to what they are doing. I do not know whether they view campus life as unusually dull, and I don't know if they are even considering the possibility of the one line in the sophomores play, " — the Dean of Students office," (expletive deleted) as being a relatively widespread sentiment among the student community.

The only thing that I do consider as important is some communication between administration and the other factions of this campus to give us at least an idea what to expect from them. It is also possible that administrative staff feel that they do not, owe us, the student, an explanation of their goals and objectives of their offices. While I do not know this as a fact, nor can I say that it is a reasonable assumption, I would welcome a statement from someone on the first floor of Founders Hall to clarify what they as administration are working for.

So far this year, we have heard articles about the administration's decisions from other responsible, informed people such as Alice Boomhower and Shelly Kaltenbaugh. This however, cannot replace the direct contact that we received last year from faculty and administration during the S.T.A.R.T. program. If such a day was ever needed, it is certainly this year.

Again, just to sum up what I hope every person has understood the major, and only point that I desire to put before every person connected with Juniata, is that I feel, as I'm sure others do, that we are interested in knowing some of the why's and wherefore's of Administrative decisions, for the simple reasons that 1. these decisions effect our lives on Campus, and 2. If we are not told, we are more subject to the wild rumor that prevails on this campus, and this situation usually only antagonizes our attempts to understand.

Crouch Attends ASCD Conference

HUNTINGDON — Dr. Howard H. Crouch, professor of education at Juniata College, was among the more than 7,000 educators who attended the 31st annual conference of the Association for Supervision and Curriculum Development (ASCD), held March 13-17 in Miami Beach, Fla.

ASCD — shose membership inlcudes both public and private school administrators and educators and ranges from college presidents to graduate students — is the largest curriculum-oriented organization and one of the three largest educational associations in the country.

The theme for this year's gathering was "Independence and Interdependence: Spirit of '76." The three major foci of educational concern emphasized during the conference were "Cultural Pluralsim: Melting Pot or Mosaic?", "Democracy and Education: Who Owns the Curriculum?" and "Humanism: Self-Determination and Social Responsibility."

The conference featured 198 special topic sessions and 55 action laboratory programs, in addition to five general sessions and a variety of assemblies.

The Humanistic Education Action Group, for which Dr. Crouch serves as national convener, conducted a special four-hour workshop on humanistic education during the Sunday afternoon session of the conference. The group, composed of ASCD members from across the country is attempting to bring supportive aid to classroom teachers through a national network of consultants in humanistic education.

The action group also sponsored one of the assembly speakers, Alan M. Dahms, Dean of Community Services at Metropolitan State College, Denver, Colo., who spoke on "Stratagies for Humanizing the Classroom."

Dr. Crouch, along with some 15 other humanistic educators took part in conducting a three-day action laboratory, "Freeing Human Potential: An Experience in Humanism." The lab, organized by the Center for Humanistic Education at the University of Florida and the Humanistic Education Action Group, encouraged participants to examine their own roles in the process of humanizing and dehumanizing education. Each day's session began with a sensitivity warm-up followed by small group discussions of ways to facilitate the humanizing process in education.

Juniata Receives Research Grant From National Science Foundation

HUNTINGDON, PA — Juniata College has been awarded a grant of $9,050 by the National Science Foundation (NSF) to continue its undergraduate research program this summer. The award was announced by Dr. Frederick M. Binder, college president.

The NSF grant will support the work of five undergraduate students chosen on the basis of their aptitude in physical science, imagination and perserverance.

According to Dr. Paul D. Schettler, associate professor of chemistry, Juniata's summer program provides physical science majors with an opportunity to be engaged in a full-time independent research experience.

"The summer research program at Juniata is student-oriented," Dr. Schettler said. "It is characterized by a term approach wherein important problem areas are identified and all available expertise focused upon soutions. There are also applied, rather than theoretical objectives," he said.

The main thrust of the program is energy research. Students participate in on-going projects in shale gasification, coal liquefaction, solar energy, and other established projects or they may initiate their own projects.

The researchers will be studying the properties of shale in order to discover the quickest and most efficient methods for extracating natural gas. Deep layers of shale lie under large portions of Pennsylvania and several surrounding states.

According to Dr. Schettler, the approach is to discover how the gas is bound in shale. Once that is known scientists can then determine better ways to "get the gas out." This work has tremendous importance in the area of energy exploration and also holds potential for a new industry and sources of revenue for the state.

Coal liquefaction deals with the conversion of coal to liquid fuels. The researchers will be investigating the properties of "synthoil," an unusual oil-like product which is being produced on an experimental basis at a U.S. Bureau of Mines coal research station near Pittsburgh.

In addition to analyzing the make-up of the synthoil in regards to overall safety and precautions for use, the researchers are also examining the mechanism by which synthoil is made.

According to Dr. Schettler, the solar energy project is oriented at building a cheap and efficient solar cell that will convert solar energy directly into electricity.

Movie Review: The King of Hearts

by Rob Lopresti

Two years ago I went to San Diego to visit my sister, and almost as soon as I got off the plane she said that there was one thing I had to see. The pacific ocean, I guessed. Tijuana? The San Diego Zoo?

None of the above. It was a movie called The King of Hearts, which had been playing in the same San Diego theatre for many months. King of Hearts happens to be a rare kind of movie. Like Walking Tall, Harold and Maude, and Billy Jack, it is a "cult film" which bombed in the cities ruled by big-name critics, while playing for years to devoted followings in other parts of the country.

On April 30th, the Friday after Spring vacation, King of Hearts will be presented on campus by Center Board. Then you'll have the chance to see if the people like my sister who go back again and again to see it, bringing aloneg everyone they can find, are justified in their dedication.

I think they are: its a marvelous little movie. The events take place in World War, as the Germans retreat from a small French village. Before the Scottish troops move in they sent one man to dismantle the bomb the Germans left behind to blow up the town.

With typical efficiency, the army sends, not a bomb expert, but the man in charge of carrier pigeons, played by Alan Bates. Irony becomes hilarity when he arrives in the village. Its been deserted and the residents of the insane asylum have taken over, turning it into a playground for their crazy fantasy lives.

While Bates searches feverishly for the bomb, the delightful madpeople declare him their King of Hearts and carry him off to a lunatic coronation parade. Slapstick tangles with suspense as Bates learns to care about these innocents, whose demented loyalty to him keeps frustrating his efforts to save them by finding the bomb.

The movie ranges from broad comedy (soldiers whose book of tactics must have been written by the Three Stooges) to lines of maniacal subtlety (the mad "Madam" discussing one of her girls: "her? Why, she's innocent as an apple"). Alan Bates is good as the confused soldier turned ludicrous king. Genevieve Bujold brings her rare combination of first-rate acting and fine beauty to the role of Bates' "Queen".

The theme that the insane are more reasonable then those who think war is sane has been a popular one in this century. Director Philippe de Broca did a delightful job of presenting his version of the idea in this 1967 comedy.

I must warn you, though. If you go to see The King of Hearts on April 30, you'll have a good time, but you may become addicted. There are people all around this country who insist that this a movie you can't see only once.

Judo Club Compete At Eastern Nationals

"Crazy" Joe Kershishnik

Over the weekend of February 12th and 13th, the Juniata College Judo Club traveled to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland to compete in the Eastern Regional National Judo finals. The geographic area of the final is located all along the eastern seaboard from north to south. There were a total of 180 contestants from 33 colleges and universities. The competition was divided into two categories which were team competition and individual competition.

Concerning the team competition first, Juniata faced the judo team from South Carolina University. In team competition the five best from each team face each other. In the first match Dennis LaSorda won by applying a choke hold which thus enable JC to score 10 team points. The second match featured the experienced Steve Winters who used two throws and a pin to defeat his opponent and score 10 team points. Brian Kerr was the third Indian to take to the mats. Brian also scored points by throws and then finally pinned his man to score 10 more team points. Steve Rust next came out to compete and immediately followed the example set by his teammates. Steve scored 10 points by pinning his opponent. The fifth and final match also went to the Indians as Wayne Sweltz choked out his opponent to add 10 more to the total. Juniata won all five matches by a total of 50-0. This victory enable Juniata to advance and our next opponent turned out to be the powerful MIT judo team.

The first match was led off by Dennis LaSorda who lost to the eventual super-heavyweight champion who stood 6 feet and 5 inches and weighed 370 pounds. This champion's name was Defuter and actually Dennis more than stood his ground against Defuter. With less than a minute left in the match and no score Dennis inadvertantly stepped out of bounds thus awarding 5 points and the match to Defuter. What a way to go down. More bad luck followed as Steve Winters lost basically the same way. Steve was leading his opponent by one-quarter throw point but with less than one minute remaining Steve stepped out of bounds which was a penalty point against him and Steve lost 0-5.

The next match was no nail biter as Brian Kerr's opponent soundly defeated him with throws and counter throws. The only win for JC against MIT was through the efforts of Steve Rust as he used a combination of throws and finally a pin to score 10 points. Wayne Sweltz competed in the last match and lost to a black belt who was the eventual first place winner at 165 pounds. Juniata lost by a total score of 30-10 and really did a repectable job against MIT. If events in those first two close matches were turned in our favor then we would of had MIT up a tree. The final results of the team competition was first place — Temple, second place — West Point, third place — shared by Mayaguez and Navy, and fourth place finisher was MIT.

Next I will run down what each competitor for JC did in his individual matches. Wayne Sweltz competed twice, losing the first one by a decision and the second match by a combination of throws from his able opponent. Steve Winters took to the mats on four occassions and when he could no longer advance still he placed in the top 10 of his weight class out of 50 competitors. Steve won his first match be a decision, was disqualified for using an illegal choke hold in the second match, pinned his man in match 3, and in his last match lost by his opponent applying an arm bar. Dennis LaSorda had a good day as he competed five times and wound up tied for fifth place out of a class of 33 competitors. In match 1 Dennis won by a pin but the tables were turned in match 2 as he was pinned by a person who turned out to be the grand national champion for the second straight year. In the third match Dennis won by a decision, the fourth match won by throwing and choking his opponent out, and in his final appearance lost by a decision.

Brian Kerr had 3 chances to show his stuff and in match 1 he lost by a penalty point, won match 2 by a throw, and lost his last match when his opponent dished out a combination of throws. Jack Conlan lost both his matches, the first by a decision and the second by a pin. John Wetmore competed 3 times and probably faced some of the best competition in the east. John didn't have it real hard in the first match as he won by a decision throw. But then the fun began for John! In match 2 John lost by a full point throw to the guy who beat Defuter, the 6 foot 5 inch, 370 pound monster from MIT. The avalanche of experience and superiority was not to end yet. In match 3 John faced a second degree blackbelt from West Point who promptly pinned John. Poor John.

Bob Knavel, whose only been with the club for 5 weeks competed twice. For a guy with so very little experience Bob stuck his nose right in there and unfortunately lost his first match in the last 30 seconds to a much more able and experienced person. In match 2 Bob lost by a full

Juniata Loses to Frostburg 14-10

The Juniata Rugby Club lost a surprise game to Frostburg State College last Saturday, 14-10.

An electrical blackout had forced the closing of the Frostburg campus on Wednesday, March 31, and Mike Russell, the Frostburg club secretary, called Juniata to cancel the previously scheduled match. However, he failed to notify the members of his own club of the cancellation, and nineteen of them showed up at an empty field in Huntingdon on Saturday afternoon.

Some hasty phone calls rounded up enough Juniata ruggers for a game. Several regulars had decided to leave campus for the weekend, but the players who were found got together to play quite a good game, even though they had never practiced together as a unit.

Juniate pressured Frostburg immediately from the opening kickoff, playing almost the entire first ten minutes within 25 yards of the Frostburg goal line. The Bobcats' defense held against the running attack, however, and three attempted dropped goals were also missed by Juniata.

The game then opened up, and Frostburg scored first on a try by a back movement from a scrum. They added a second try soon after on a rush by their forwards, and the conversion made the score 10-0.

Juniata was then able to get the ball into the Frostburg in-goal several times, but not with enough open space to get a clear touch-down for a try that the referee could see and award.

Nearing the end of the first half, Juniata finally got a break when a Frostburg defender barely tipped a Rich Jager punt. The tip allowed Juniata players upfield to play the ball, and the punt was caught by Charlie Lerman behind most of the Frostburg defense. Fortunately for the aging and overweight player-coach, some support developed quickly, and the rush resulted in a try by George Kourakin. Al Kulp converted to close the gap to 10-6.

Just before halftime, however, Frostburg got a "garbage" try by alertly breaking through from a lineout near the Juniata goal line and falling on the loose ball.

Down by 14-6, Juniata fought back more efficiently in the second half, but couldn't culminate any movement with a score. Right at the closing whistle, Steve Shultis broke from a lineout with the ball and chose to fight his own way the 10 yards to the Frostburg goal line, despite the presence of close support. He crossed the line, dropping the ball, but Charlie Lerman touched it down to make the effort worthwhile. The final score was 14-10.

No "B" side match was played, due to the shortage of personnel.

Next Saturday, the club goes on the road to play the Lancaster Rugby Club in Lancaster. Still looking for their first victory of the season, the Juniata ruggers may take some heart from the improved teamwork shown against Frostburg. For a club with a small roster, it was also heartening to have no new serious injuries from the Frostburg match.

Letter To The Editor

Contribution to the "Term to Semester" discussion
by Burkhard Richard Franetzki, 406 Long, P.O. Box 1457

After 3 years of studying at Philipps University Marburg-Lahn in W. Germany and after 2.5 trimesters here at J.C. I agree with Provost Dr. Nossis that semesters with class meetings twice a week over a 4 months' period are more favourable for a reasonable way of studying.

The main point in this case is that the student is given a chance to be a student and not a pupil. In Europe (incl. Great Britain) a "pupil" is a young person in a "school" (primary and secondary school, high school) and a "student" is an older, advanced person in the tertiary sector of education, which comprises any "college" and "university."

The differentiation between "pupil" and "student" implies age and maturity. In other words a student is able and expected to behave and work more maturely, independently and reflecting on his process of becoming an educated and skilled member of society.

18 year old people cannot be treated like 8 year old dumb kids. And that's what a trimester system with daily meetings and the old way of "school" education with its characteristic numerous checks and tests (incl. the corresponding immediate grades does). Have the children read (read doesn't mean necessarily study or comprehend) their daily text-books' lessons?

Some time a pupil has to learn to be able to stand on his or her own feet. Being 18 years old one is old enough to protect one's fellow citizens by serving in the armed forces. On the other hand in an educational institution with a regulating and restricting trimester system one is still a dependent, under age child.

I see the danger of the freedom of less classroom work and more "voluntary," independent studies at home or in the library. However, if an 18 year old person cannot make up his mind and study because of interest and insight in his educational process instead of the forced learning for the teacher and the obligatory test on the next day, . . . when is this person going to learn to form his own opinion and to become an adult person? The step of being exposed individually and directly to the demanding society need not be a jump into deep, dark waters. And the "breeding of brainless parrots" is hardly the task of an institution of "higher education."

My plead for the semester system implies less quantity and more quality in the process of studying (= extensive dealing with unknown things) and excludes the superfluous numerous quizzes and tests which cause a hectic and superficial learning-by-heart of not reflected facts.

A human being is not a roboter and has good and bad days and should be granted days off as well as 10 hour days if necessary, too.

Studying around the clock on days before tests serves only the and less the sound physical and mental development of the particular student.

As far as I can see a semester system provides more chances of a reasonable effective process of education and socialization for the student and less bureaucratic, administrational working hours. The input of time on the faculty's side probably remains the same, because if tests are eliminated there has to be another fair means of judgment of the students' levels of knowledge.

These means could be oral or written minutes or reports of extra class room group sessions or individual studies which can be and have to be checked by the teacher, be the reports oral class room reports or papers. The latter form naturally is more suitable for longer, more fastidious elaborations.

One should not underestimate the fact that shorter oral reports can be valued by the student's class mates, too, and can prevent some teachers (human beings) from superficial or prejudiced judgments.

To summerize this semester model:

— in no case more quantity of work for anybody

— probably more effectivity and quality if the old schedule is re-organized — plus if the social consciousness of all envolved persons

— plus the way and nature of the studying itself is re-arranged.

"Urban Semester Program"

by Cindy Harner

Would you like to get away from Juniata for a while? Would you like to get a taste of the "real world," live in a city on your own, and get college credit for it? Would you like to see if your Program of Emphasis is really applicable to a job situation? Would you like to do your student teaching in a city?

If your answer was "yes" to any or all of the above, maybe you should look up Dr. Post (426 Founders) and ask him about the "Urban Semester Program," or look up one of the students at JC who has gone on this program to get their opinion of the program.

Job placements under the Urban Semester Program vary greatly, from city planning to student teaching to probation work to abortion counseling to . . . . whatever you're interested in.

My placement was with Hahnemann Hospital in their outreach program to the Puerto Rican community. Through the courses I took here at JC, I realized I was interested in the areas of Spanish and Biology, but just couldn't get them together for a job possibility. The counselors for the Urban Semester Program found me five possible job placements. I went and looked over them and found one that seemed to appeal to me.

I took the job, had ten great weeks working there, and now have the offer of a permanent job there after graduation. (If you take a job and find out it's not what you really wanted, you can change jobs.)

I'm not trying to oversell the Urban Semester Program. There were bad times of course: trying to find an apartment that you liked at a price you liked that would lease for ten weeks, getting lost in the city, hasseling with public transportation, etc. On the whole, however, from everyone I have talked with who has gone, and from my own experience, this term off-campus under the Urban Semester Program is really worth while.

If this program interests you, come talk with me, Dr. Post, or any of the other JC students who have been on the Urban Semester Program. The door is there, all you have to do is open it. This is one of those learning experiences Juniata offers that you just can't read about and underline.

Juniata College Plans Centennial Celebration

HUNTINGDON, PA. — An all-day celebration honoring Juniata College's first 100 years has been scheduled for Saturday, May 1, on the Juniata Campus.

The focus of the day's activities will be the Centennial Convocation, set for 2:30 p.m. in Memorial Gymnasium. During the convocation, Dr. Frederick M. Binder will be formally invested as the college's eighth president.

Dr. Binder, who assumed the Juniata presidency last September, will be presented with the first struck bronze Juniata presidential medallion, specially designed for the college's centennial year. The medallion will be worn for all special college ceremonies.

Dr. James B. Rhoads, archivist of the United States, will deliver the main convocation address. Associated with the National Archives and Records Service for some 24 years, Dr. Rhoads has served as U.S. archivist since 1968.

Centennial anniversary greetings will be delivered by representatives of the college's Student Government, faculty and Church Relations Council and the Huntingdon community. The college will also award three honorary doctoral degrees.

In addition to the traditional procession of seniors, faculty and administration members and trustees, numerous representatives of Eastern colleges and universities, learned societies and the Church of the Brethren will join the convocation's entry march.

Other special events planned for the May 1 celebration will include the May Day Breakfast, traditionally for women, at 8:15 a.m. in the Baker Refectory of Ellis College Center; departmental open houses for alumni, parents, students and other guests; several showings of "Season of Good Favor," a sight and sound presentation of Juniata's centennial history; and a presidential reception in the L.A. Beeghly Library.

A special Centennial Display of photographs, artifacts and other memorabilia of the college's 100-year history will be exhibited in the Shoemaker Galleries.

An evening program, "1876! A Festival in Drama and Music," will be presented by faculty and administration members and students at 8:15 in Oller Auditorium. This review of the year 1876 will include a variety of readings from literature of the time, political commentaries, playlets and music.

The May 1st weekend has also been designated as a spring Parents Weekend and as Brethren Heritage Day. Juniata, an independent liberal arts institution, was founded on April 17, 1876, by three members of the Church of the Brethren.

Juniata College To Plant 100 Trees For 100 Years

HUNTINGDON — Juniata is celebrating Arbor Day in a unique way this spring. During the next four weeks, the college will plant 100 trees, one tree for each of its first 100 years.

Planned in observance of the college's centennial anniversary, the actual planting began yesterday, April 5, with assistance from Juniata students, faculty and administration members. Also on hand to view early plantings were representatives of three Huntingdon organizations which have contributed to the project — Union National Bank, Standing Stone Garden Club and the Kiwanis Club of Huntingdon.

The $8,000 centennial tree project is being supported by various graduating classes and friends of the college, in addition to a number of local clubs and organizations.

Juniata officials have been working on the project for more than a year as part of a master landscaping plan for the entire campus area. Initial work on the project also included an aerial survey of the campus.

In addition to beautifying the campus, the planting will help replace trees lost by Dutch elm disease. According to Kenneth G.

Raystown Idea Bank

Raystown is a reality. Within a short drive of our campus their exists what may well become one of the largest recreation-vacation areas in the eastern United States. What we need now are ideas, lots of ideas, suggesting how Juniata can make the best use of its proximity to Lake Raystown.

Students, faculty, and staff alike . . . what are your ideas? What do you suggest? Let your imagination loose. Fall, Winter, Spring, or Summer . . . Juniata and Raystown should be of benefit to each other.

Send or give your ideas-suggestions to one of the members of R.I.B. (Raystown Idea Bank). Howard Crouch, Bruce Davis, Doris Goehring, Robert Fisher (Bio), Peter Trexler, Paul Heberling, or Harold Brumbaugh.

One final remark. There is a real need for summer theatre in this area. Especially as the summer tourist trade develops. How many students would be interested in returning to the campus for Summer Theatre? This could be for experience and-or credit. Respond if interested.

Centers for the Handicapped

Undecided about a career, but sure you'd like it to be a worthwhile area?

Perhaps you'd like to have the chance to explore your own objectives through practical experience without losing out on a year of school.

Wondering How?

Spend the 1976-77 school year as an Intern in the work-study program of the Centers for the Handicapped in suburban Washington, D.C. You'll be testing the limits of your capacity for responsibility and growth while at the same time learning how a long-neglected segment of our society gets along. You'll get really involved in working with the handicapped for what might prove to be the most challenging and interesting year of your life.

The Association is presently accepting applications for the one-year Intern Program for 1976-77. That group will include up to 18 students from colleges in the eastern United States.

The Interns are fully maintained by the Association. They live cooperatively in housing provided by the Association, sharing the responsibility of cooking, cleaning, and shopping and establishing their own regulations.

Lines on Wine

THE CUISINE QUIZ SCENE—I or Part One of What Wine with Which Food When, and Why

If the great purpose of wine is enhancement of other pleasures, then the highest destiny of a table wine is surely a happy marriage with food.

To one seeking pleasure from the senses of taste and smell, the myriad flavors of food are rather like the notes of a scale or colors on a palate; how they combine is as important as their individual qualities. Wine adds a whole new spectrum of possible combinations, but the range of choice may seem a bit bewildering at first.

It is often said that white wines go with white meats, red wines with red meats and pink wines with everything. That really isn't very far off the mark, and with a little information about the reasons behind it you can confidently follow or depart from the general principle as circumstances dictate.

In general, strongly flavored foods call for wines of more pronounced character. Most seafood and some fowl are more delicately flavored than meats like beef and lamb, and therefore call for a more delicate wine. With some important exceptions, white wines are more delicate than red. Hence, most red wines are better matched to most red meats and white wines to most white meats than vice-versa. One doesn't want either partner to a marriage to overwhelm the other.

In general, pink wine (most of which is labeled with the French word for pink, "rosé") accompanies the same food as white. American winemakers tend to make pink wines a bit sweeter than whites, but that has nothing directly to do with the color. There are plenty of dry rosés. Pink wines do seem to accompany ham better than white or red. Also, some people like rosé with organ meats such as calf's liver. Rosé can be a delightful wine, and by all means experiment with it, but don't expect it to match everything.

Other departures from the basic rule are numerous, as you will find with a little experimentation. Chicken is a good place to start. If roasted or simply fried (and properly done that is one of the very best ways ever devised to prepare chicken) it is a succulent and relatively full-flavored meat, but one which can profit by a little subliminal bitterness and perhaps a touch of acidity. That is why many chicken recipes call for paprika or lemon juice, and that is why dry red wine (say, a Zinfandel) goes beautifully with chicken. I drink white with chicken only if it is accompanied by a sauce that is too sweet for a dry wine or delicate enough to want a less robust accompaniment.

Some meats that are red in color nevertheless seem to want white wine. Meat prepared in kosher style can be subtle enough to go well with white, as can luncheon meats, including cold rare roast beef. A Riesling or a fairly high-acid champagne is a good choice.

Veal is properly a white meat, but even the pale red meat commonly sold as veal may want a white wine, depending on the method of cooking. White wines with a somewhat appleish flavor, like a dry Chenin Blanc, mate well with veal.

A good delicatessen liverwurst or seasoned chopped chicken liver is neither red nor white. Its interaction with wine is quite similar to that of classic French pate; it can take a young, light-bodied red, but a rhine-type or rosé seems better to me.

I'll have some additional recommendations next column. Meanwhile, if you'd like specific suggestions on what wine to have with your favorite foods or vice-versa, just write me at P.O. Box 1130, Modesto, California 95353.

Juniata College Was Host To High School Thespians

HUNTINGDON — High school drama students from throughout the area were invited to attend a day-long "High School One-Act Play Festival," Friday, April 2, hosted by Juniata College.

Special guest for the first-time event was Gretchen Wyler, who has performed as a singer, dancer and actress in virtually every kind of show business — theatre, television, motion pictures, nightclubs, radio and recordings.

In addition to sharing her expertise with the visiting high school thespians, Miss Wyler presented "Broadway Greats and the Songs That Made Them Famous" at 8:15 Friday evening in Oller Auditorium on the Juniata campus.

"Silk Stockings," Cole Porter's final Broadway show, provided Miss Wyler with her "lucky break." Just prior to the New York City opening, she was called out of the chorus to fill the role of the singing and dancing lead. She later replaced Gwen Verdon in "Damn Yankees," toured the country in "Destry Rides Again," and returned to Broadway as the star of "Bye, Bye, Birdie."

Her other musical credits include "Mame," "Applause," "Company," "Anything Goes," "Dames at Sea," "They Boy Friend," and "110 in the Shade."

In London, Miss Wyler appeared as "Sweet Charity," and her success there led to a Royal Command Performance before Queen Elizabeth. Television viewers have most recently seen Miss Wyler as a regular member of the "Somerset" daytime serial.

According to D. Bruce Davis, assistant professor of English and festival coordinator, the day's activities began at 11 a.m. in Oller Auditorium with the presentation of one-act plays by participating drama groups. High schools which performed selections were those of Altoona, Bellefonte, Clearfield and Grier School.

Each of the performances was reviewed and criticized by Miss Wyler and a group of Juniata faculty members. Among the faculty reviewers will be Prof. Davis, Doris P. Goehring and Clayton E. Briggs of the speech and theatre department, Dr. Esther M. Doyle, Ralph B. Church and William L. Hofelt, Jr. of the English department and Dr. Howard H. Crouch of the education department.

Although the festival is not a competition, individual awards will be presented for distinguished performances by the high school actors and actresses.

The drama festival is being sponsored by the college's department of speech and theatre and it is hoped that the program can be expanded into a two-day affair next year.

Judo

point throw. Both Bob's opponents were huge dudes so I got to give credit for giving it a good try.

John VanHorn, in a situation very much like Bob's, gave it the good ole' college try too but lost in Match 1 by a pin and lost match 2 by a throw. Steve Rust participated in three matches. He lost all three matches by decision throws. Bob Perks lost his first match, which was very hard fought and went down to the wire, by a decision throw and also lost match 2 by being pinned. Kevin Stahl also had a very good day as he participated in 4 matches. In match 1 Kevin threw and then pinned his opponent. In match 2, another very hard fought one, Keven finally was able to subdue his man with a combination of throws Kevin lost his third match in the last minute and in match 4 he was choked which is a loss.

Eventhough JC did not place in the top 4, the club did a very respectable job and its presence was known. Also the judo members extend the invitation to all students to come out and be a part of this wild and fascinating sport called judo. You'll get a kick out of it. If interested, even just to find out what goes on, chat with any member at any time.

United Farm Workers, AFL-CIO Boycott 75-76

The United Farm Workers is holding the "Second East Coast Mobilization for the Farmworkers" in New York City on the evening of Thursday, April 29th to Friday April 30th. The UFW urges people to attend the Mobilization to show that they are opposed to the growers actions that sabatoged the farm labor elections law in California. The UFW had won an overwhelming majority of the elections when the growers cut the funds off. The UFW depends upon the conscience of people who believe in justice. Migrant workers need help to end the injustice in the fields.

On Thursday, 7:30 pm, April 29th, the participants will attend the UFW benefit Concert/Rally with MELANIE at the Felt Forum of Madison Square Garden.

On Friday, speakers will discuss the nature of the United Farm Workers Union and participants will be part of workshops with Boycott leaders from New England to Washington D.C. On Friday evening, the participants will see the film, "FIGHTING FOR OUR LIVES" and Academy Award Nominee for Best Documentary.

The Conference will conclude with an address by DOLORES HUERTA, UFW VICE-PRESIDENT, who began organizing farmworkers with Cesar Chavez in 1962. She will present the latest news on the UFW organizing drive.

Registration for the Conference is $10, this includes an $8 ticket to the benefit Concert/Rally, meals on Friday and sleeping accomodations at St. John the Divine (110th St., and Amsterdam Ave. in New York City). Send check or money order to the United Farm Workers, c/o Irv Hershenbaum, 331 W. 84th St., N.Y., N.Y. 10024, or call 212-799-5800.

The UFW is continuing its boycott of Sunmaid and Sunsweet products and intensigying the boycotts of non-UFW grapes, lettuce and Gallo Wines (Gallo Wines include any wine made in Modesto, Calif.).

Juniata Receives Grant From Bethlehem Steel

HUNTINGDON, PA — Juniata College has received a $5,000 grant from the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, it was announced by Dr. Frederick M. Binder, Juniata president.

The grant comes as part of a Bethlehem Steel program under which privately-endowed colleges and universities are awarded $5,000 on behalf of each graduate who joins Bethlehem's Loop Course and who remains with the corporation for at least four months.

Juniata's gift came through Carol A. McFate, a 1975 graduate.

The Loop Course, initiated in 1922, is one of industry's oldest and best-known management training programs. Participants receive formal training designed to acquaint them with the scope of Bethlehem's activities and to begin equipping them for advancement.

Funds from the Juniata gift will be used to enrich the intern program conducted by the college's Department of Economics and Business Administration and to strengthen the college's placement and career counseling program.

Rabenstein, superintendent of buildings and grounds at Juniata, 101 elm trees have been lost due to the disease since 1973 — 83 of which died in one year alone. Trees will also be placed in certain areas where the existing stand is particularly old, thus providing a new growth to replace the older trees as they die.

According to Rabenstein, it will probably take eight to ten working days to complete the planting process. It is hoped that student volunteers will be hand to help each day from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Juniata's Circle K C;ib is coordinating student participation.

The trees were purchased from Louis Heller of Mount Aetna Nurseries, Williamsburg, R.D. Heller, along with Rabenstein, will supervise the planting.

Good luck to the track men and women on Wednesday against Lock Haven and on Saturday against Lycoming and Maryland!

Juniata Appoints Placement Officer

HUNTINGDON, PA. — The appointment of William B. Martin as director of career counseling and placement at Juniata College was announced by Dr. Frederick Mr. Binder, president.

In his new position, which he will assume May 1, Martin will be reqponsible for developing a program of career counseling which begins with entering freshmen and follows through graduation and placement in jobs or graduate schools. Working with students throughout their four years, he will offer guidance in determining vocational interests and abilities, counsel in the selection of courses to meet occupational goals and develop contacts with appropriate employment recruiters. He will also serve as an assistant dean of students.

Martin is a 1959 graduate of Juniata, where he received the bachelor of science degree in economics. He has also done graduate work in personnel administration and counseling at Hofstra University.

Prior to assuming his Juniata post, Martin was employed by Coopers and Lybrand, certified public accountants, for seven years. He began as director of recruiting in the company's New York office and became Northeast regional director of recruiting.

In 1972, he was named national director of recruiting for the firm, working out of its Chicago office. While in the post, he developed the company's first national recruiting manual and planned and implemented the firm's first national recruiters' workshop.

Martin spent three years as director of placement at Hofstra University, and before that served four years as director of alumni relations and placement at Juniata.

Active in both professional and civic organizations, Martin currently serves as regional governor for the College Placement Council and is a member of the executive committee of the Middle Atlantic Placement Association. He is a charter member and former director of the Huntingdon Jaycees and has served as district commissioner for the Juniata Valley Council, Boy Scouts of America. Martin is a member of Rotary and has participated in United Fund and "Hire the Handicapped" projects.

The striking resemblance of senior Bobby Orr to our college president Dr. Binder made a definite attribute to the Senior All-Class Night Play.

Letter to the Editors

by Jim Whittaker

A.E. Boomhower says that students are less reactionary today. Perhaps she should look up the word. It means "tendency toward an outmoded political or social order", not reduced activism. Once the proper definition has been established, we can see that this college's provincial students are as reactionary as ever as evidenced by the College Republicans ad on the last page of the same paper and the Reagan supporters who are politically just a pubic hair width higher than the John Birchers.

The All Class Night article also deserves comment. It is toothless. Townsend whould have used his critical abilities to nail Janet Lewis to the wall for her insipid performance. Dewayne Rideout's presentation as M.C. was credible except for the last monologue which failed to reach a large portion of the audience. The freshmen play was not bad, for a freshmen play which is usually much worse. Jeer's are standard fare for the rookies. The Limper failed to mention these items and others.

And on WJC . . . . I couldn't give a hoot in hell what they're up to if I can't receive the signal.

The Nation's Energy Needs

HERSHEY, Mar. 31 — By the year 2000 the U.S. will need 550 percent more electric power than it is using today, a West Coast research expert predicted here.

The nation's energy needs will call for an increase in coal production five and one half times above today's level — not a small fact for Pennsylvania — said Walter H. Esselman, Manager of R & D Planning and Assessment at the Electric Power Research Institute in Palo Alto, California.

Even with the most optomistic assumptions solar power and geothermal energy will supply only five percent of our energy needs, said Esselman.

Approximately 90 percent of our energy will come from coal and nuclear power, he predicted.

Esselman, who was speaking at the Pennsylvania Power Conference, based his assumptions on an exhaustive study of the nation's energy needs that was done by his organization.

"The cautious approach will be to plan for a 6.5 percent yearly growth to the year 2000," the researcher said.

Esselman called for the nation to reduce its power requirements by increasing efficiency with which energy is used in work, lighting and space conditioning. "Straightout conservation isn't enough," he said. "We need better resource management."

The government should give "serious consideration to intermittent controls" on power plants as a way to achieve clean air rather than forcing utilities to use expensive and unproven equipment, said Esselman.

"Intermittent controls place the responsibility on the utility to quickly adjust its operations to meet meteorological conditions" and insure clean air, said Esselman.

Esselman also called for more sophisticated ways to use nuclear power for generating electricity. Since the 1950's the United Kingdom, France and the U.S.S.R. have been successfully using the Liquid Metal Fast Breeder Reactor to generate power, Esselman said. Japan and Germany have been using the "breeder" since the 1960's, he added.

"We should learn from their successes," Esselman said.

Solar power and other exotic energy sources will require major engineering and scientific breakthroughs and it's unlikely that these will occur in time to satisfy the nation's energy needs by the end of the century, Esselman said.

He emphasized that a considerable amount of research is now underway on developing energy storage systems, increasing the efficiency of generating plants, creating metering and control systmes to spread the need for power, and finding new ways to transmit power over long distances.

"A two percent increase in power plant efficiency could decrease the demand for oil by about 36 million barrels a year," he said.

ing industry and services such as mass transit, and better environmental clean-up all means a growing need for electric power in Pennsylvania, said Miller.

Most of that power will come from unclear and coal fired power plants, he said.

"While nuclear costs more to build it is cheaper to operate than a coal plant," he said. "Last year nuclear plants in the U.S. generated power at 44 percent less total cost than fossil plants" for a net consumer savings of $670 million, Miller added.

The common pigeon was brought to the United States from Europe.

"Bear" Thompson led the charge to the gallant second place of the Sophomore class.

"Privacy Rights of Parents and Students"

Ithaca, N.Y.-(I.P.)-Cornell's policy on access to and release of student records maintained by University offices, amended to conform to the requirements of the new federal law on "Privacy Rights of Parents and Students," includes the following text:

A. Directory information may be released unless the student indicates otherwise at the time of registration.

B. Restricted information may be released only at the student's specific written request at which time the reasons for the release, and the party to whom the records are sent must be indicated. A student is permitted to inspect the information contained in the restricted record. Letters of recommendation will be available to the student unless the student has waived rights of access.

C. Confidential information may be kept confidential and may be released only upon the written request of the student and with the consent of the University office in custody of such information. Where students have waived their right of access, letters of recommendation will be considered confidential and not disclosed to the student.

General Instruction

A. When students request letters of recommendation, they must indicate to the writer and for the record whether or not they have waived their right of access. University offices may not require that a student waive rights of access as a condition of receiving the services of that office.

B. A record must be maintained by University offices of the identity of all who inquire for directory information, restrictive information, and/or confidential information, irrespective of whether that request is honored. The legitimacy of the inquiry must be determined before any information is released.

C. Any form of restricted information should be released only in person or in writing to the inquirer; such information should not be released by telephone without reliable indentification as to the person and authority.

D. Restricted information shall normally not be made available to researchers unless the project is judged to contribute to the University's function as an educational institution. In those circumstances, permission to use student record information may be granted by the Privacy-Security of Student Records Committee and with the specifications as to how the confidentiality of the information can be protected.

Special Cases

A. In the event of service of 'subpoena duces tecum; requiring an individual to appear and/or produce records, consult the Office of the University Counsel as to proper procedures.

B. If a question arises which cannot be answered by the application of the foregoing principles, consult the Provost's Office or the Office of the University Counsel.

C. Information contained in Law School records and files concerning the character and fitness . . of students shall be made available as required by law and the regulations of the courts.

Privacy-Security of Student Records Committee: There shall be a standing committee, the Privacy-Security of Student Records Committee, appointed by the Provost to evaluate requests for research data and to advise on the interpretation and implementation of this University policy on access to and release of student records.

Correction Procedures: Students who are or who have been in attendance at the University may challenge the content of the records maintained. They must be provided an opportunity for the correction or deletion of any inaccurate, misleading, or otherwise inappropriate data contained, and to insert into such records a written explanation respecting the content of such records.

The techniques of the program will be presented at a student-advising workshop to be held in April, 1978. The workshop will be open to tri-state area colleges as well as member institutions of the East Central College Consortium. In additon to Bethany, the Consortium is made up of Heidelberg, Hiram, Marietta, Mount Union, and Muskingum colleges in Ohio and Westminister in Pennsylvania.

"In essence, the grant will enable us to do a better job of giving our freshmen the necessary tools, knowledge, and information to be of maximum effectiveness at Bethany," Cunningham said. "Our goal is to help each freshman realize early in his college career his needs, abilities, and potential."

New Opportunities in Europe

INTERCHANGE, a nonprofit Foundation located in Amsterdam, Holland, has opened its doors to students and teachers from North America who want to see Europe on a low budget. As a result of years of research and planning, and further years of trials and observing young Europeans, exciting new opportunities are now abailable in Europe.

Back-packing itineraries, 50% off on train tickets, free travel on river barges through Europe, how to bicycle independently through Europe, where the campers are, living with European families in cities and on farms, and a new Traveling Companion Service are only a few of the Foundation's independent activities.

Another interesting innovation is a destination and identity board for hitchhikers. The I.D. board helps keep the traveler moving while other thumbers are left standing because a destination card is shown to traffic, and both parties are covered with insurance.

Foundation subscribers are entitles to low cost flights to Europe and a wide scope of other benefits in Europe that until now have been available only to European students. As a nonprofit structure the Foundation is able to advise travelers and provide services for its subscribers either free or at much lower cost than normal.

Nationwide Contest

College and universtiy students all over the country are invited by Inventors Workshop International to enter a nationwide competition for the most creative and innovative idea/design/product/invention that a student (or team of students) has to offer. The entries may fall into any discipline desired — art, music, science, invention, architecture, design, etc.

The winning items from each school will be displayed in the Youth Building of the Ventura County Fairgrounds, Ventura, CA during the Inventors Bicentennial Expo 3, which will be held from May 13 through May 16, 1976, and to which over 100,000 visitors are expected.

Inventors Workshop International, a nonprofit, membership organization, will furnish at no cost display space of the dimensions required for the entries. Judging will take place Wednesday evening, May 12, and awards totalling over $15,000 will be made at ceremonies to be held at 8:00 P.M. Sunday, May 16, 1976, to the three winning students. On hand to make the presentations will be astronaut Edwin E. "Buzz" Aldrin, Congressman Robert J. Lagomarsino, actor James Stacy. Judges will be comprised of the sponsors of the contest and experts in the disciplines in which entries have been submitted.

Students should, as soon as possible, notify Inventors Workshop International Expo Committee, P.O. Box 251, Tarzana, CA 91356 (213/344-3375) of their desire to participate so space can be reserved.

The Workshop will endeavor to obtain lodgings for all out-of-town competing students.

Job Market Bleak But Are We Forgetting Something?

by A.E. Boomhower

As graduation stares seniors in the face, some of us face jobless futures with the calm of the sea before an impending storm. Last week's Newsweek confronted us with the chilling facts. Graduating seniors do not have the opportunities for a job that could be hoped for, and the money put into a college education doesn't seem to be paying off in the job market.

The liberal arts colleges have claimed from their inception that they are not set up to guarantee graduates a profession. They originate in the school which goes something like, "We will create an effect upon our student's lives which will carry through till death." Loosely translated, I imagine this means that the liberal arts curriculum proposes to create an intellectual world for the student which will be broadened upon in the "outside world." A secondary claim is that the liberal arts curriculum will make the student somehow better and happier.

Granted that in our society part of being happy is fulfilling the biological needs of the organism, and that this requires money, most commonly gleamed from a job; the liberal arts curriculum does have the responsibility in helping its students find careers. However, probably the most important part of the curriculum is not the factual knowledge of a particular field, but the ability to use the knowledge one does have as a background to build on.

Once a person obtains a job, the objective is then to grow in that position, and hopefully advance in it. This is most easily done by making oneself invaluable to the employer. The liberal arts graduate hopefully has this ability. Although his/her education may not have taught him/her particular facts, it is hoped he/she will be able to find the facts and utilize them.

In conclusion, I believe that it is the responsibility of the liberal arts college to give a background in a particular area of concentration, but most importantly it is necessary for the student upon graduation to utilize his/her own mind to gain the knowledge needed in an unfamiliar field. Although the liberal arts curriculum may not prepare its graduates for particular vocation as well as a more technical education, I feel that it may help graduates to utilize their own minds and increase their chances for advancement.

Colleges and Universities Delivering Higher Education

NOTRE DAME, IND. — The nation's independent colleges and universities are delivering higher education for the public at much less cost to the government and to the taxpayers than state-supported according to the provost of the University of Notre Dame.

The Rev. James T. Burtchaell, C.S.C., argues that "a comparison of price between independent and state schools is wrongly confused with a comparison of costs." Using an unidentified midwestern state as an example, Father Burtchaell compared the true taxpayer outlay to support a student with need at an independent university and at a state university.

Student aid at the state school is an additional cost to the taxpayer, he pointed out, and the only recovery of total costs is in tuition, which is deliberately kept low. At the independent school, on the other hand, the basic educational cost is carried by the institution and its supporters, and the only taxpayer outlay is student aid which comes from government sources, Father Burtchaell.

"The taxpayers may indeed hesitate to subsidize the education of those members of the public who attend independent colleges and universities, but they could never do so on grounds of economy, for it saves the taxpayers money to help them attend these schools," he concluded. Supporters of independent institutions are, in effect, "subsidizing the federal budget, which is no mean public service."

Baker Stepping Down As Chairman Of Juniata Trustees

HUNTINGTON — Dr. John C. Baker, chairman of the board of trustees at Juniata College, announced he is stepping down after 13 years in the position.

First named to the board in 1936 and elected chairman in 1963, Dr. Baker will remain a trustee. Jewett Henry, a lawyer in Huntington was named Dr. Baker's successor at the college's Centennial Convocation, which will highlight day-long 100th anniversary observances.

In addition, Dr. Baker will be honored twice this weekend while the board also meets on campus. Recognition will come at this evening's Trustee-Faculty Dinner and the 2:30 Convocation.

President-emeritus of Ohio University, the retiring board chairman is a 1917 Juniata graduate. He received the M.B.A. degree from Harvard University in 1923 and holds nine honorary doctoral degrees. Among the latter is the Doctors of Laws from Juniata, awarded in 1943.

A native of nearby Everett (Pa.) now living in Essex Fells, N.J., Dr. Baker served in France after college graduation with the American Friends Reconstruction Unit. His interest in peace and human conflict has been a continued concern, as reflected in the John and Elizabeth E. Baker Peace Fund at Juniata, one of the couple's many benefactions to the college.

Dr. Baker served at Harvard for 22 years upon completing his studies there, first in a number of Business School positions and, beginning in 1941, as associate dean of the university. In 1940-41, he was acting dean of the university.

From 1945-61, he was the 14th president of Ohio University, which experienced its period of greatest growth since its founding in 1804. Enrollment more than quintupled, a branch college program was begun, and 32 major buildings were added to the campus.

In 1953 and 1955-56, Dr. Baker received a presidential appointment as chief U.S. representative to UNESCO, the United Nation Economic and Social Council. He later conducted State Department studies of education needs in Cambodia and Columbia, and he last year served as an advisor to the government of Iran.

In addition, he has served on the boards of many major corporations and civic groups.

During his tenure as chairman of the Juniata board, Dr. Baker has worked with three college presidents, all of whom paid him tribute today.

"Without John Baker, Juniata would not be what it is today," said president emeritus Dr. Calvert N. Ellis. "We owe both him and Mrs. Baker much. He has been an aggressive innovator in education and has given outstanding leadership. I am Juniatas' Centennial Convocation proved to be one of the major events not only of the year but our college's history.

Dr. Gibbons, alumnus of J.C., served as guest speaker at the May Day breakfast celebration.

National Archivist Addressed Juniata Centennial Convocation

HUNTINGTON — Dr. James B. Rhoads, archivist of the United States, delivered the main address at Juniata College's Centennial Convocation, May 1.

The convocation, set for 2:30 p.m. in Memorial Gymnasium, was the focus of an all-day celebration honoring Juniata's first 100 years. As part of the convocation ceremonies, Dr. Frederick M. Binder was formally invested as Juniata's eighth president.

"History as Harbinger" was the topic of Dr. Rhoads' speech, which discussed the uses — both proper and improper — to which history is put. Dr. Rhoads also touched upon what can be learned about the future from the past.

Associated with the National Archives and Records Service for some 24 years, Dr. Rhoads served as U.S. archivist since 1968. He was chairman of the Archives Advisory Council, the National Archives Trust Fund Board, the administrative committee of the Federal Register and the National Historial Publications Commission.

In addition, he holds memberships on the American Revolution Bicentennial Administration, the Federal Fire Council, and the Federal Council on Arts and Humanities. He also serves as a trustee of the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars.

Born in Sioux City, Iowa, in 1928, Dr. Rhoads was a student at Southwestern Junior College, Lincoln, Neb., before receiving both the B.A. and M.A. degrees in history from the University of California, Berkeley, in 1950 and 1952, respectively. Dr. Rhoads earned the Ph.D. from American University in 1965.

Dr. Rhoads earned the General Service Administration's Meritorious and Distinguished Service awards in 1966-68 while serving in the department of the U.S. archivist.

His other affiliations include the Society of American Archivists, the American Historical Association, the International Council of Archives, the American Antiquarian Society, the Organization of American Historians, the Massachusetts Historical Society, Phi Alpha Theta and Phi Kappa Phi Question: What is it that most underclassmen wish for with unreserved intensity? Answer: Graduation.

Question number two: What is it that most seniors recognize as marking an end to the good-times on Daddy's dole role? Answer number two: Graduation.

Yes, graduation brings more to its unfortunate victims than a mere diploma. It brings the entire savage universe screaming down on one's head like a half-starved banshee bent on blood lust and destruction. And, if you have happened to take a serious gander at an Alumnus' diploma, you probably didn't fail to notice that, as a shield, it's fairly worthless.

This is very frightening. In fact, it is so frightening that its enough to cause a senior's wet dream to go dry. I know because, in my dream, just before it reaches the BIG CONQUEST, my luscious partner breaks off the embrace, leaps to her feet and begins spewing out verbal abuse about how my social status is stunted and my earning potential, emaciated. Moreover, as if that is not torture enough, the dream is becoming recurrent and my close acquaintances are starting to notice that I've grown about as useless as a gun shy hunting hound.

Why just this afternoon one was saying, "Pull that trigger!" "Oh come on now Steve, fire that gun off,now!" But no, I was afraid to hear anything else. I only put my fingers in my ears and waited for her to bolt up and away as if she suddenly realized that she was making love with some crusty grunt from down among the untouchable caste.

You underclassmen may think that's funny. All I have to say is "Your time is fast approaching." And my case is not unique either. As a matter of fact, every member of the senior class is involved in an equally horrible battle with the universe banshee and we're all desperately trying to avoid being slaughtered by digging in and settling for a lifelong war of attrition.

We seniors have two ways of pursuing this stalemate strategy. We can grab on to our shovel now and dig in by hunting for a job, or we can be lunatic romantics thinking that it really is possible to be "Bullish on America." In the latter case, one ships himself off to graduate or high-powered professional school and hopes he'll be able to muster enough bucks to buy an army of mercenary substitutes. Ironically, what this man discovers is that, instead of fighting the war for him, his troops have only made the enemy invisible. The banshee can never be beaten back.

Now all of this brings me around to a third question. What I want to know is why everybody is so eager to congratulate me on my graduation, on having sped through my youth? What they ought to be doing instead of shaking my hand and patting my back is asking themselves where the hell are the brakes in this careening car of Life.

Garbage in—Garbage out

by "Crazy" Joe Kershishnik

Most people think of computers as the supermechanical brain that does all kinds of mathematical calculations in seconds and of course that description is it in the nutshell. But what most people do not know is that a person can have a lot of fun with the computer by matching wits in games such as chess, baseball, football, and golf too. Of course the computer cannot maneuver around the greens but games are programmed into the computer so all the physical action that takes place is for the computer's opponent to sit down at the main console typewriter and read in some numbers. The Juniata College Academic Computer Center offers to all students an "open house." The computer center is located on the bottom floor of the science building in the geology wing. The best time for any student to visit is from Monday to Thursday at the times of 9:00 a.m. to 12:00, 1:00 to 5:00 in the afternoon, and from 7:00 p.m. to 11:00 p.m.. and on Sunday from 7:00 p.m. to 11:00 p.m. Gigo, the informal name of the computer known to those who frequent the center, offers the games of chinese matchsticks, one and three dimensional tic-tac-toe, an artillery game, and can print out such neat posters like Snoopy and the Pink Panther. I know any of the operators would be more than happy to let students experiment and mess around with the canned games. The students who are the IBM 1130 computer operators are Carol Kredatus, Dale Hoover, Cindy Gilbert, Lee Flinner, Kathie Dickey, Joe Kershishnik, Mark Chaplin, Mark Henry, Wayne Chan, and Alice Herritt. No one need to know any computer language who drops in and that's the great thing about the center, there is no pre-requisite to show your face at the center. So if you have any interest at all, don't be bashful, come-on in, sit right down, and let you hair hang down.

Juniata Honors Retirees At Trustee/Faculty Dinner

HUNTINGTON — Four retiring faculty and staff members at Juniata College were honored at the college's annual Trustee/Faculty Dinner, which was held in the Baker Refectory of Ellis College Center.

Also recognized was Dr. John C. Baker of Essex Fells, N.J., who is stepping down after 13 years as chairman of the board of trustees.

Some 225 trustees, faculty and administration members and their spouses were present to pay tribute to Dr. B. Edwin Blaisdell, professor of mathematics; Dr. Harold B. Brumbaugh, vice president for college relations: Dr. Eva R. Hartzler, professor of chemistry; and Hilda Nathan, chief accountant.

The retiring Juniatians, whose years of service total 118, were presented with gifts from their respective departments and each received a stained glass Juniata College shield.

A member of the Juniata faculty since 1954, Dr. Blaisdell began as a lecturer in chemistry, was appointed professor in 1956 and became chairman of the mathematics department in 1961.

Born in Lynn, Mass., Dr. Blaisdell received the B.S. degree in chemistry from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1932 and the Ph.D. in physical chemistry from M.I.T. in 1935. Before teaching, he was a research chemist for more than 10 years.

A 1933 graduate, Dr. Brumbaugh returned to his alma mater in 1936 as assistant to Dr. Charles C. Ellis, fifth Juniata president. He has been with the college ever since. In addition to his first and present positions, Dr. Brumbaugh has served as alumni secretary, director of development and vice president for development. He has also been the curator of the Juniata Museum since its establishment in 1963.

Prior to joining the Juniata staff, he taught school in his hometown of Woodbury and served as principal of a high school in New Paris. He was presented with the honorary doctor of humane letters degree at Juniata's commencement last spring.

Dr. Hartzler has been a member of the Juniata faculty since 1950, when she was named an assistant professor of chemistry.

A 1932 Juniata graduate, Dr. Hartzler earned the master of science degree and Ph.D. from the Pennsylvania State University.

She has conducted 15 years of research in university, government and industrial laboratories and has published many articles in scientific journals, primarily dealing with vitamins. Raised in Belleville, Dr. Hartzler held a Charles A. Dana professorship and received the Beachley Distinguished Professor Award in 1971.

Born in Hilden, West Germany, Nathan was an interpreter and part-time teacher before emigrating to England and later America. She is a 1941 graduate of Duffs Iron City College, Pittsburgh, and spent five years following her graduation as an instructor at the Huntington Secretarial School.

Nathan joined the Juniata staff in 1946 as assistant treasurer and later became chief accountant. In 1971, she was recognized by the college's national alumni organization for 25 years of service to Juniata.

Dr. Baker, who will remain a trustee, is a 1917 Juniata graduate and a native of Everett. He has served on the board since 1936 and was elected chairman in 1963. President emeritus of Ohio University, Dr. Baker received the M.B.A. degree from Harvard University in 1923 and holds nine honorary doctoral degrees.

During the evening's ceremonies, Dr. Baker received a sterling silver tray with an engraved citation, a gift from the entire Juniata community.

Juniata President Frederick M. Binder presided at the recognition program. Special remarks, which were followed by responses from respective retirees, were offered by Dr. Dale Wampler (Dr. Blaisdell), Dr. Calvert N. Ellis (Dr. Brumbaugh), Dr. Donald M. Rockwell (Dr. Hartzler), Dr. Miriam Schlegel Musselman (Nathan), and Att. C. Jewet Henry (Dr. Baker).

LIBRARIES HOUSE 175,000 VOLUMES

Juniata College's L. A. Beeghly Library and Myers Science Library together house a collection of nearly 175,000 volumes, 118 titles represented by microforms, 165 motion pictures, 715 audio recordings, 250 maps and charts and 831 current periodical subscriptions.

JUNIATA'S FOUNDING

Juniata College was founded on April 17, 1876, through the efforts of several members of the Church of the Brethren. It was chartered by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania on November 18, 1878.

Michele Tree Joins Central Pennsylvania

by Evagelia "Teddy" Lyras

Michele Tree was one of the local sixteen girls selected to run for Miss Central Pennsylvania. Michele, who is from Mt. Union and who is a junior here majoring in music theory, finally had her dream, which she held since childhood come true: she tried out for Miss Pennsylvania.

Upon filing her application, she participated in the Valentine Days' talent try out where ten out of twenty-six girls would be picked to go on for Miss Central Pennsylvania. Michele did her own dance routine to "Love Theme" and was one of the ten girls selected.

"Every Saturday after that," Michele says, "we had practice in Holidaysburg for three hours where we practiced walking, the routines, performing in the different attire such as the bathing suit and the evening gown, and other details."

The day of the pageant, March 27, finally rolled around. Each girl participated in an interview with five judges. The mian jest of the interview was to get to know the girl's ambitions and personality. One can not win the pageant just with beauty.

"I was really nervous but pleased with my performance," says Michele. For those of you who saw her perform she did well. But, the judges, according to Michele, consider singing and piano more cultured than dancing. To them dancing is something very easy, a great understatement though. Michele was not one to be picked for Miss Central Pennsylvania (one of the 16 local pageants) part of this she feels is due to the selection she made for her talent. "The judges are definitely more impressed with singing and piano playing than with dancing," concludes Michele, "but it was all still fun and a great experience." I'm seriously considering giving it a try for next year. And if I do, I will sing."

Eventhough Michele did not make this pageant she must be commended on her beauty, elegance and poise. Congratulations.

JC Trackmen Place In The MAC's

by Evagelia "Teddy" Lyras

The JC trackmen traveled to Dickinson last weekend for the MAC's and came back with 8 medalwinners, one being a double winner. Overall Juniata came in 10th.

Placing in the field events were Jim Kistler, Dick Green, Calvin Schoenberger, and Jon Loeliger. Shot putter Jim Kistler took 6th with the best throw of the year — 45 feet and 3 inches. Dick Green took 6th in the javelin with a throw of 173 feet and 10 inches, John Loeliger took 6th in the pole vault with 12 feet 0 inches, and Calvin Schoenberger threw the discus 138 feet 10 inches to grab 5th place.

JC's 3-miler, Jack McCullough captured 4th place in the 3-mile with a time of 14:53.4. Jack holds the school 3-mile record (previously held by Paul Wilson, 15:51) with a time of 14:40, a time he had run in one of the dual meets. Paul Wilson ran the mile taking 7th place with a time of 4:24, but missing a medal by only three seconds.

Our double medal winner, Bob McNeily, anchored the mile relay team consisting of Dave Robison, Charles Kohel and Austin Robison into 4th place with a time of 3:25.4. Bob also tied for first in the 440 yard hurdles with a time of .54.3 which qualified him for the nationals which will be held in Chicago during Memorial Weekend. Meanwhile he will be running in invitational meets on weekends along with teammates Jack McCullough and Paul Wilson.

Despited the scorching weather on Friday and the miserable rain on Saturday, the team performed well. Congratulations and good luck in the future.

I.U.P. Invitational Tournament

The Juniata Rugby Club traveled to Indiana U. of Pa. on Friday, April 30, to defend its 1975 championship in the I.U.P. Invitational Tournament. As fate would have it, though, the club could only manage a last-place finish in this year's four-team round-robin competition.

The tournament opened Friday night under the lights, with Hiram College romping over Indiana, 24-6. Indians, however, was using mostly its "B" team players, so the game was a poor indicator of what was to come.

The nightcap was Juniata vs. the Erie Rugby Club (last year's cellardwellers). The much-improved Erie ruggers dominated the game from the start, keeping Juniata from ever generating effective offensive movement. The game was marred by a plethora of penalties. Perhaps bothered by the unfamiliar night conditions, Al Kulp and Charlie Lerman conspired to miss six penalty kicks at goal, which could have made all the difference, since Erie's eventual victory was by a score of 16-0.

Juniata opened the Saturday play by taking on Indiana, who now entered their first side. The game was fairly well played, with hard running, good kicking, and determined rucking and mauling by both sides. Juniata suffered the loss of fullback and captain Rich Jager early in the game with a shoulder injury incurred as he took a hard tackle.

Indiana got two penalty goals in the first half to lead 6-0 at halfime, but Juniata came back hard after the break. Rugby rookie Terry Keenan suddenly broke loose with the ball in hand and produced a 60-yard run for a try. Perhaps bothered by the daylight, Charlie Lerman missed the conversion, leaving the score at 6-4.

Indiana fought back to another try, but Al Kulp added a penalty goal for Juniata to make it 10-7 with only a few minutes remaining. The tense battle broke open when Indiana got a much disputed try with only two minutes left. The Indiana runner had been forced over the touch line just as he reached the goal line, and an argument developed over whether he had gone out before or after touching the ball down. The referee had not been in position to see the play clearly, and he asked for the opinion of the touch judge, who awarded the try. The final score was thus 14-7, leaving Juniata winless in two games.

Next, Erie took on Hiram in what seemed to be the game for the championship. Well played all the way (under Juniata referee Lee Flinner), the game was indeed an exciting contest. Hiram built an 8-3 lead, only to see it fall to 8-6 with ten minutes left. Erie then provided the shocker by winning with a 45-yard penalty goal with only seconds remaining.

Then the rains came, and the Indiana-Erie contest was a mudfest. Indiana slowed the Erie club's winning momentum by holding them to a 4-4 halftime tie, then actually taking an 8-4 lead in the second half. Erie once again provided closing-moments fireworks, however, and pulled out their third vicotry, 14-8, clinching the tournament championship.

Juniata was scheduled to take on Hiram in the final game of the round-robin. The two had battled till the final moments for the championship of the 1975 tourney, but thie year the clubs mutually agreed to a cancellation for a combination of several factors: lateness of the hours, cold, rain, mud, fatigue from earlier games, and lack of influence on the outcome of the tournament.

Despite the losses, which dropped the season record to 1-8, the Juniata club played some good rugby, especially against Indiana. The players generally enjoyed the tournament experience, which allows them to share games and tournament social functions with ruggers from a broader geographic area than do dual matches.

The tournament results summarized:

	W	L	PF	PA
Erie	3	0	39	16
Hiram	1	1	32*	15*
Indiana	1	2	28	45
Juniata	0	2	7*	30*

Girl's Track At JC

by Evagelis "Teddy" Lyras

This year numerable girls have come out for spring track for the first time in Juniata history. With the help of the boys' coaches, Coach Rossi and Coach Mitchell, and Dr. Grouch, the team, consisting of approximately 10 girls, is learning to get used to the different factors and techniques involved in running. There are only two schools in our league that have girls, so meanwhile to gain experience the girls have been running a few events among themselves in the boys' home meets.

The only dual meet which was against powerful Lock Haven proved to be an experience for our trackwomen. For the majority of them, it was their first race ever. This was Lock Haven's second year of girl's track which consisted of girl's who had run in high school while it was JC's first year with mostly non-experienced girls who, however, are showing great improvement and interest.

No official scoring was kept but Lock Haven's experience prevailed. Lia Fong took third in the 440 yard dash and second in the 100 yard dash followed by Anita "Custy" Kustanbauter in the 100. Pam Julius grabbed second and Teddy Lyras third in the 220 yard dash. Our two field eventers threw against powerful Lock Haven. Sue Stapleton threw the discus and shot while Claire Swaverly threw javelin and discus. Two relays were run, the 440 and 880 which Lock Haven managed to capture first place both times. Participating in the 440 relay were Lia Fong, Pam Julius Joy Akerman, and Cindy Picarrelli and in the 880 relay were Custy, Teddy Lyras, Pam Julius and Priscilla Gove.

Next year the team will miss the valuable services of Custy, due to graduation. The team is looking forward to having more girls out next year in order to have a more well-rounded team.

Pam Julius, a member of the newly formed Girls' Track Club, captures second place against powerful Lock Haven.

As the Rugby Team reaches for the stars . . .

The Week In Juniata Sports:

TRACK (1-0 on the week; 8-1 FINAL on the season): As Monday's scheduled quadranglular meeting with Bucknell, Gettysburg and Lycoming was cancelled due to cold and rain, the Indians completed their regular season with a 94-45 victory over Albright in Huntingdon Saturday afternoon. Their 8-1 record is the second best ever compiled at Juniata, trailing only the 10-1 mark of 1963. Their eight wins are also a second best ever, tying the number for 1972.

The Indians complete their overall season Friday and Saturday at Dickinson College in the Middle Atlantic Conference Championships. Windener College defends.

In the Albright meet, freshmen Dave Robinson (York) and Bob McNelly (Somerset) combined for 27 ½ points to pace the Tribe attack. Both ran on the winning 440 relay team, Robison captured both sprints and the long jump, and McNelly won both hurdles events. McNelly logged the Tribe's best times of the year in the latter races, a 15.9 and a 55.2 in the lows and intermediates, respectively, while freshman Lou Gibbons (Bloomsburg) also clocked a 15.9 for the lows.

Sophomore Jim Kistler (Allentown), second in the shot, also turned in a new team best for the year (43-8), while senior Paul Wilson (Glenside) collected a pair of victories in the mile and three-mile, the only double in distance events for the Indians this spring. Classmate Jack McCullough (Willow Grove), undefeated this year at three miles, did not compete against Albright.

BEST SHOWINGS ON THE YEAR: 100: Robison, 10.2; 220: Robison, 22.9; 440: Casey Koller (Fr., Meadville), 52.2; 880: Dave Parker (Jr., Florence, NJ), 2.01.2; mile: Wilson, 4:27.9; three-mile: McCullough, 14:40.3; 120HH: McNelly and Gibbons, 15.9; 440IH: McNelly, 55.2; 440 Relay: Robison, Koller, McNelly, Dave Yost (Jr., Ft. Washington), 44.8; Mile Relay: Dave Robison, Austin Robinson, Koller, McNelly, 3:26.9.

Shot: Kistler, 43-8; Javelin, Rick Green (Jr., Johnstown), 191-0; HJ: Rick Bloser (So., Enola), 6-3; TJ: Jan Gable (Jr., New Enterprise), 40-9 ¼; Discus: Calvin Shoenberger (So., Bellwood), 142-0; PV: Dan Bausher (Sr., Wyomissing) and Rick Loeliger (Jr., Irwin), 13-0.

TENNIS (2-2 on the week; 7-4 on the season): Taking to the road while the rest of the college relaxed during spring recess, the Indians split four matches and suffered their only shutout of the year. The losses came at Bloomsburg, 9-0, and Scranton, 5 ½-3 ½, while two shutout wins came at Kings, 9-0, and St. Francis, 6-0. In the latter test, doubles play was called due to rain.

Monday's match with Gettysburg has been rescheduled for May 6, so the Indians returned to action Wednesday with their biggest contest of the year: their final MAC encounter at Albright. A victory would give Juniata, which is 4-0 in the league, the Northern Division West Section crown. It would also be the Lions' first loss in the league. In addition to the Gettysburg match, the Indians will face Penn State-Altoona May 5 to complete their regular season.

On the road trip, senior Gavin Ford (Felicity, 0.) continued to pace the Tribe. At 3-1 on the week, he ran his singles record to 9-2 playing at number one. Freshman Scott Burghart (Franklin Lakes, NJ), who had taken over the number six spot just prior to the journey, also went 3-1, upping his record to 4-1.

The other singles players each split their tests. At number two, sophomore Gary VanHartogh (Pompton Plains, NJ) ran his record to 4-7; at number three, senior Mont Rice (Camp Hill) to 8-3; at number four, freshman Greg Norton (Bloomsburg) to 6-5; and at number five, sophomore Dave Wallin (Lancaster) to 3-2 and 5-6 overall.

In doubles play, Ford and Rice went 2-1 to be 5 ½-1 ½ at number one; VanHartogh and Norton went 1-2 to be 5-3 at number two; and Burghart and sophomore Dave Shober (Ephrata) went 1 ½-1 ½ to be 7 ½-2 ½ at number three on the year.

BASEBALL (1-1 on the week; 2-6 on the season): It was feast or famine for the Indians last week as they split an Albright doubleheader, 0-2, 11-6, on their only day of action. Monday's game with Gettysburg was cancelled due to cold and rain, so play resumed with twinbills at Frostburg Thursday and at Wilkes Saturday.

In the opener Saturday, junior lefty Jim Kudel (Mineral Point) turned in the Tribe's best mound performance of the year, allowing five hits in as many innings but absorbing his third straight loss. He managed to keep his ERA down to 2.70, best among Tribe starters, while striking out four and walking two. In the second game, junior righty Todd Wise (Curwensville) tossed the Tribe's first complete game of the season, also striking out four. Sophomore lefty Dick Smith (Altoona), who finished up in the opener, pitched his fifth and six innings without allowing an earned run.

At the plate, only soph leftfielder Tom Gibboney (Huntingdon) could manage more than one hit in the loss, going 2-for-3. In the nightcap, however, designated hitter Gary Bickle (Jr., Tyrone) went 3-for-4, and junior secondbaseman Dave Wichrowski (Westmoreland City) was a perfect 3-for-3. Senior centerfielder Steve Harper (Clearfield), belting his second home run of the year, collected three rbi. Wichrowski and Bickle two each.

Replaced at shortstop by freshman Pete Bartlett (Broomall), Wichrowski seems to like it at second. He has grabbed the team lead in batting at .478, passing Harper's .452 and Bickle's even .450. He has also upped his slugging percentage to .783, trailing only Harper's incredible .839. Harper retains the Indian lead in runs (9), hits (14), rbi (10), doubles (4), homers and total bases (26).

GOLF (0-2 on the week; 2-4 on the season): Dropping both halves of Friday's match with Dickinson and Elizabethtown, 420-383-406, the Indians went on the finish 13th in a field of 21 at the MAC Championships at Hidden Springs Country Club near Philadelphia Monday. Despite high winds and frigid temperatures, theTribe moved up from its 16th-place finish in a field of 20 last year.

A pair of triangulars were carded last week, Wednesday at Johns Hopkins with Gettysburg and Friday at home with Wilkes and Albright.

Sophomores Dean Miller (Jeannette) and Rusty Hoover (Roaring Spring) were low for the Tribe at the MACs. Miller carded a 94-76 for his 170 total, Hoover 77-93. Senior John Shuck (Huntingdon) had medalled in the triangular at 82. Sophomore Doug Garner (Huntingdon), who had 175 at the MACs, continues to pace the Tribe in average scoring, shooting at 83.8.

WOMEN'S TENNIS (rained out Monday in only scheduled action on the week).

Co-Captains Elected

WILLIAMSPORT — Defensive end Steve Weigle and tailback Phil Bellino, both seniors, have been elected co-captains of the 1976 Lycoming College football team, it was announced by coach Frank Girardi.

For Weigle, it will mark the second consecutive year as the field leader of the Warriors. The veteran defensive end from Williamsport served along with graduating defensive back Jim Rich as co-captains in 1975 when the Warriors completed their best season in two decades with a 6-2 record and finished first in total defense in the nation among small colleges.

The 210-pound Weigle contributed immeasurably to the fine defensive record fashioned by the Warriors last fall. His personal achievements included 35 solo tackles, 12 assists, and 8 sacks of the opposing quarterbacks. He also blocked two punts, recovered two funbles, and intercepted one pass. One of his top performances was against Fairleigh Dickinson University when he sacked the quarterback three times and recovered one fumble. Weigle was named to the Middle Atlantic Conference All-Star Team at the end of the season.

Bellino, a graduate of Brooklyn Technical High School, Brooklyn, N.Y., had a fine season as a runner despite missing three games because of injury. The 180-pound tailback romped over the opposition for 341 yards on 101 carries for a 3.4 average and scored 4 touchdowns. His best game came in the cruccial 16-12 victory over Juniata when he plunged for 82 yards and caught 2 passes for an additional 20 yards. He also had an equally fine day rushing in the opener with Lock Haven when he netted 84 yards and caught a short pass for 3 yards.

The co-captains will be leading a Warrior team which is expected to return almost intact next fall to defend its Number One ranking defense.

Undefeated Jack McCullough followed by teammates Steve Hooper and Dave Quig captures first place with a school record of 14:40.

Juniata big-leaguer has a watchful eye as we try to get a few more runs for our team.

May Day Breakfast

by Cindy Hill

The Centennial Celebration of Juniata College was begun by the annual May Day Breakfast for Women served by the male students. Attending the breakfast were numerous alumni, professors and administration. Continuing the traditional format, a prominent woman speaker presented the main part of the program. Dr. Jacquelyn Hayes Gibbons, a pediatrician from Media, Pennsylvania and a 1957 graduate of Juniata spoke on the need for humility within any profession. Following Dr. Gibbons presentation, three outstanding women of the college community were honored. Dr. Judith Lerman, assistant professor in the chemistry department, Mrs. Sally Johnston, director of Student Activities, and Shelley Kaltenbaugh, president of Student Government all received special recognition in the form of a rose for their efforts in the college's behalf.

As always, the highlight of the breakfast is the selection of Woman and Man of Juniata and their court. The criteria for nomination was cordiality, poise, and special achievement in any given field. Each class chose two girls to be attendants while the senior class chose an additional girl for Woman of Juniata. Each girl was escored by a senior male while the Woman of Juniata was escorted by the Man of Juniata. Freshmen attendants were Teddy Lyras escorted by Jim Messner and Annalisa Mulhollen escorted by Tom O'Brian. For sophomore attendants Carolyn Setzer escorted by George Kourakin and Wency Jacobus escorted by Ralph Whetstone. Junior attendants were Elvira Magniglia escorted by Alan Kulp and Elaine Joyce escorted by Bill Thompson. Senior attendats were Debbie Smith escorted by Perry Habecker and Alic Boomhower escorted by Dave Cortazzo. The woman of Juniata was Meg Meyers and she was escorted by the man of Juniata, Sam Sirianni. This concluded the Centennial May Day Breakfast of 1976 with hopes for another 100 years of tradition to follow.

The capture of Chief Geronimo ended the Apache Indian war in the Southwest, in Sept., 1886.

Juniata College Centennial Shorts

11 JUNIATA GRADS HEAD COLLEGES

Century-old Juniata College, which now claims some 6,500 living alumni, has produced no less than 11 current presidents or presidents emeriti of colleges and universities throughout the United States.

LIBERAL ARTS STRESSED

Juniata College is an independent liberal arts college with student-designed Programs of Emphasis, which replace traditional "majors," leading to baccalaureate degrees in the arts, sciences and various pre-professional feilds. Study is grouped into three divisions: the humanities, the social sciences and the natural sciences.

FINANCIAL ASSETS GROW

When Juniata College was founded 100 years ago this month, the total investment was zero — unless the $6.50 tuition paid by each of the first three students is taken into account. Today, nearing the $24-million mark in total assets, the college boasts a 100-acre campus with 27 buildings. In addition, the college owns a 170-acre nature preserve and a 55-acre recreational site and operates a 400-acre biological field station on Raystown Lake.

MOUNTAIN DAY TRADITIONAL

Mountain Day is a well-established tradition at Juniata College. The entire student body, joined by faculty and staff, exits campus and "Takes to the hills" of Central Pennsylvania for a full day of outdoor activity. It is always held in the fall.

FACULTY NUMBERS 95

There are 95 faculty members at Juniata College, more than half of whom hold earned doctorates.

ONLY EIGHT PRESIDENTS IN 100 YEARS

In its 100-year history, Juniata College has had only eight presidents, five of whom have been Brumbaughs or Ellises. At present, it has two presidents emeritus, Dr. Calvert N. Ellis (1943-68) and Dr. John N. Stauffer (1968-75). Juniata's current president, Dr. Frederick M. Binder, is the first non-alumnus to hold the position.

COLORS CHOSEN IN 1898

Juniata's college colors — (Yale) Blue and (Old) Gold — were chosen in 1898. The Juniata Echo, a faculty monthly, heralded the adoption of colors as "another step forward in her college progress."

FINANCIAL AID AT JUNIATA

Seventy per cent of the student body at Juniata College receives financial aid, either in the form of Juniata scholarships, campmppus work programs, state aid programs or Basic Educational Opportunity Grants.

Centennial Mace, Medallion Joins Juniata Traditions

HUNTINGTON — Two special items — a centennial mace and a presidential medallion — became part of Juniata College tradition during the college's Centennial Convocation ceremonies, May 1.

The Juniata Centennial Mace, first carried by faculty marshall Dr. Earl C. Kaylor, Jr. during the convocation proceedings, was a gift to the college from its National Alumni Association. Barnard C. Taylor, former college editor, was responsible for the design.

Carried today as symbols of authority, maces date to the Middle Ages when churchmen, forbidden to bear edged weapons, carried them into battle. In later years they were borne before kings by their bodyguards, assuming the role which they now retain in ceremonial processions.

Beyond the tradition role, however, Juniata's mace holds particular significance. Perhaps most special is the wood from which it is hewn, a walnut beam from the James Creek Church of the Brethren, the home church of Juniata's three founders, Dr. A.B., J.B. and H.B. Brumbaugh.

The head of the mace, further, pays tribute to three central factors in the college's historical success — its relations with its students, the church and the community — and to the service rendered to each of those groups through the years.

Four medals, the largest of which is the college seal, are situated on the head. The smaller, representative three — each a gift from the represenled group — depict Founders Hall, the Church of the Brethren's 250th Anniversary Seal, and Huntington's Standing Stone. Donors of the medals were the Class of 1976, the Church of the Brethren General Board and the Penn Central National Bank, respectively.

When not in use for processions, the mace will be displayed in the Ellis College Center.

Struck this year as an added observance of the college's anniversary, the bronze presidential medallion features the Juniata College seal. Suspended from a blue and gold ribbon, the medallion will be worn by the president for all special college ceremonies.

Dr. Frederick M. Binder, who was formally invested as the college's eighth president during the convocation ceremonies, will first wear the medallion.

In addition, each future Juniata president will receive a personal medallion replica as he or she leaves office.

Hawaii was annexed to the U.S. July 7, 1898.

State General Assembly Commends Juniata College

HUNTINGDON, PA. — Juniata College has received a special citation from the Pennsylvania House of Representatives on the occasion of the college's 100th anniversary year.

The document, dated March 9, was introduced before the General Assembly by Rep. Samuel E. Hayes, Jr. of the 81st legislative district, which includes parts of Huntingdon, Blair and Centre Counties.

The final paragraph of the citation says, in part, "the House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania congratulates Juniata College on its one hundred years of service to the Commonwealth and to the Nation and extends best wishes for continuance of its significant accomplishments."

The framed citation was presented to Dr. Frederick M. Binder, Juniata president, by Rep. Hayes (April 15). The document bears the signatures of Hayes, Herbert Fineman, Speaker of the House, and Vincent F. Scarcelli, chief clerk.

Juniata College was founded on April 17, 1876, through the efforts of several members of the Church of the Brethren and chartered by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania on November 18, 1878.

Juniata Students To Perform Early An American Comedy

HUNTINGDON — "The Contrast," one of the most popular comedies of the early American Colonial period, will be staged Saturday and Sunday, May 8-9, on the campus of Juniata College.

Performances are scheduled for 8:15 each evening in the Oller Hall Auditorium.

The comedy presentation is part of "Founding A Nation," a one-time-only course on the American Revolutionary period, which is being offered during the spring term at Juniata. The cast and stage crews for "The Contrast" are primarily composed of "Founding A Nation" students.

Written by Royall Tyler in 1787, "The Contrast" provides an insight into the social customs and lifestyles of the elite city dwellers in Colonial America. A comedy of social conflicts, it explores the differences between those Colonial citizens adorned with wig and knee britches and those who were more rough and rugged.

Doris P. Goehring, assistant professor of speech and theatre, is directing the production.

The public is cordially invited to attend the delightful comedy presentation given in recognition of our nation's bicentennial.

Student Life Styles

SPRINGFIELD, OHIO — "It is time we opened the issue of student life styles and how they relate to the academic community as a whole," states Dr. Edwin Heusinkveld, vice-president for student services at Wittenberg University.

Dr. Heusinkveld stressed that any opinion he voiced on the matter was strictly a personal one and that his goal is to "get the ball rolling" on the open discussion of the issue. He accentuated the concept of Wittenberg as a community. Dr. Heusinkveld said that because of the size of Witt, "what one person does really does have an effect on the other."

He added that because of this, "the entire academic community has a legitimate interest" in the life styles chosen by its members. Dr. Heusinkveld said he thought it would be a "healthy thing" to take a look at student life styles, and more importantly, the quality of student life styles. He added that faculty and administration life styles should also be looked at.

Student life styles, he said, consist of all of the things students do while they are at Wittenberg.

Dr. Heusinkveld also said that the entire Wittenberg experience is of interest to the whole academic community because that is what a student pays for, and the product which the university sells. He said that an academic community "is not a democracy. Someone has to take the ultimate responsibility determining the common good."

Attention all Seniors -- whether you know it or not graduation is less than a month.

HONOR MOTHER ON HER DAY . . .

By feeding the world's hungry children

On Mother's Day, Sunday, May 9th, people all over the United States will try to express to their mothers the love and devotion they feel for them. By making a donation of $2 or more to CARE in honor of your mother, you can send CARE food to hungry children overseas, or self-help tools and seeds that will be used to help grow food for them. Boy Scout Recognition Dinner

HUNTINGDON — Dr. Thomas S. Haggai, whose "Values for Better Living" radio broadcasts have made his voice familiar to thousands of persons in this area, was the speaker at a Boy Scout recognition dinner at Juniata College on Wednesday, April 28.

More than 300 persons attended the annual dinner at which Scouts and scouters from all three districts in the Juniata Valley Council were recognized for service during the past year. The presentation of the coveted Silver Beaver Award to veteran scouters in the council will be a major feature of the program.

Dr. Tom Haggai is well known to audiences across the nation, not only for his radio broadcasts but also for hundreds of annual public speaking engagements before groups including the Boy Scouts, chambers of commerce, teachers, ministers, college students, business executives, United Funds, and civic service clubs.

An ordained minister since age 12, Dr. Haggai communicates equally well with teenage rebels and gray-suited businessmen. Concerned with the problems, interests and needs of middle-class young people, he has written a book for and about them, "Chrissie, I Never Had It So Bad," published in 1973.

Dr. Haggai claims his only hobby is the Boy Scouts of America, for whose National Council he serves as Director of Manpower. His speaking engagements before Boy Scout audiences are supported by Mayflower World-Wide Movers.

Dr. Haggai recently was elected chairman of the board of the Independent Grocers' Alliance. He is also a director of Super Food Services of Dayton, Ohio, an IGA wholesale distribution center.

Honored guests at the April 28 recognition dinner were Eagle Scouts of the Juniata Valley Council.

A special color guard of Boy Scouts from Troop 28, Huntingdon, under Scoutmaster William Berrier and Senior Patrol Leader Dan Quarry, will perform a special Bicentennial opening and closing ceremony. The group will be accompanied by the Standing Stone Fife and Drum Corps, a musical group assembled especially for the Bicentennial by musical director Ted Yoder.

Huntingdon insurance executive William E. Swigart, Jr., Oneida District's first Eagle Scout, will serve as toastmaster.

Donald G. Everhart, president of Reeves, Parvin & Co., Huntingdon, is serving as general chairman for the dinner. It is noteworthy that Everhart himself began his professionsl career as a Boy Scout executive in the Philadelphia area.

Johnstown Senior Chosen For Simpson Scholarship

HUNTINGDON — Mark D. Schellhammer of Johnstown, a senior at Johnstown Vocational-Technical High School, has been awarded the Richard M. Simpson Scholarship at Juniata College for the class of 1980.

Schellhammer's selection was announced by Dr. Frederick M. Binder, Juniata president.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Schellhammer of 1307 Linwood Ave., Johnstown, the recipient will enroll in Juniata's pre-medical curriculum in the fall.

According to Dr. Binder, the Simpson Scholarship is one of Juniata's most prestigious awards. Through funds provided by friends and relatives of the late Richard Murray Simpson, a member of the U.S. Congress for 23 years, a Sinmson Scholar in each Juniata class is awarded $1800 per year for his four years of undergraduate study at the college.

Selection recognizes outstanding attributes of citizenship, useful purpose and academic promise.

In a letter to Schellhammer, Dr. Binder noted, "The selection committee was impressed with the high quality of all the candidates, but you were the one selected because of the promise of your career in service to mankind."

A native of Huntingdon, Mr. Simpson served two terms in the Pennsylvania Assembly before his election to the U.S. House of Representatives in 1937. He served continously in the House until his death in 1960.

In announcing the Simpson Scholarship Fund in 1960, Rep. Joseph W. Martin, Jr. of Massachusetts, former Speaker of the House, commented, "Mr. Simpson's ability, foresight and patriotism made him a truly national leader. His selfless dedication to duty benefitted every American."

Schellhammer serves as president of Johnstown Vo-Tech's Science Club and is a member of the Health Related Club and the Student Congress. He played football for four years and was a co-captain during his denior season. He is also a member of the tennis team.

Community Services of Pennsylvania

A special presentation on "Giving in America" — the official report of the Commission on Private Philanthropy and Public Needs — will highlight the 10th Annual Meeting of Community Services of Pennsylvania, May 20-21 at the Bellevue Stratford Hotel, Philadelphia.

This report, released in December, 1975, includes considerable emphasis on changing trends in services and funding in institutions of higher learning. One Commission study, for example, reports that "it is not idle speculation to talk of the dissapearance of the leberal arts college."

The Commission report also states:

- nearly 150 private colleges have closed down since 1969;
- higher education costs rose about 76 percent between 1963-64 and 1973-74 compared to 40 percent for the economy-wide cost-of-living index;
- in 1950, more than half of all higher education students were enrolled in private institutions, compared to about one-quarter today;
- in 1960, about two thirds of all institutions of higher learning were private; today it is closer to one half.

Professor Adam Yarmolinsky, who served as a consultant to the Commission, a social activist and government advisor in the early 1960's, and currently Ralph Waldo Emerson University Professor at the University of Massachusetts, will make the keynote address on "Giving in America," Thursday, May 20 at 8:30 p.m.

Friday, May 21, the program will be devoted to panel presentations on the role of voluntarism and the nonprofit sector compared to government and the profit (business-labor) sectors, followed by Town Meetings for citizen input.

Advance registrations are to be made to: Community Services of Pennsylvania, 201 Locust Street, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania 17101.

Esquire Offers Undergraduates

Every September, Esquire Magazine does a back-to college issue and this year, the editors are focusing in on the faculty. They want to know who the most unforgettable faculty members are and why they make indelible impressions upon their students. How to find out? They're asking college undergraduates themselves.

Esquire wants you to tell us about your most memorable college teacher in 100 words or less. Your character sketch must be true and you've got to name names. If we publish it, you get $50 and a byline in September's Esquire — which is a lot of glory for what probably will be the shortest piece of writing of your college career.

The deadline for submissions is May 10 (write fast) and send those immortalizing words to S. O'Malley, Editorial Department, Esquire, 488 Madison Avenue, New York, New York, 10022.

thankful he will remain a trustee so that Juniata may continue to benefit from his experience and judgment."

Dr. John N. Stauffer, also president emeritus, added "... Juniata's present strength and future promise are both far greater than they would have been without his unprecedented influence. His careers and successes in education, business and public affairs have brought his alma mater great credit, and above all else he has given unselfishly of himself for 40 years as a trustee.

"He has been wise, zealous, singleminded, imaginative and progressive in his leadership, and beyond that remarkably generous. Few colleges, if any, can find such greatness among their trustees."

Juniata's current president, Dr. Frederick M. Binder, concluded the chairman's tributes, remarking "In less than one year at Juniata, my impressions have been strong. Dr. Baker's knowledge and vision are more than worthy of their high regard worldwide, and the value of his leadership knows no bounds. One cannot measure his effect on this institution, nor project the importance of his gracious continued service.

"He and others like him have made Juniata strong, and will continue to do so as the college enters its second century of service."

Second Annual Meal For Crop Scheduled

by Andy Murray

Juniata students are starting preparation for the Second Annual Meal for Crop, scheduled for Monday, May 17. Meal For Crop is an ingeneous food raising idea, developed at Juniata College, which involves participation by college students, faculty, and the Huntingdon community at large. Last year 530 students participated, raising over $1500 for world hunger relief.

The money is raised in the following way. A student volunteers to skip his or her evening meal, Monday, May 17. That meal "ticket" is then sold to a faculty member or someone in the community for $3.00. The entire $3.00 is donated to CROP. — an independent organization which funds emergency food relief and long range agricultural development programs. None of the money goes to food service. The person who buys the student's place in line gets quite a bargain for $3.00. First, they get a good meal at less than they would have to pay at a restaurant. Second, they get to help a college student do something worthwhile. Third, the entire $3.00 goes for a good cause. Fourth, they get a nice concert of Jamaican folk songs after the meal. The concert will be given by Stan Shepherd, popular Penn State entertainer, and will be open to everyone.

Sometime during the next week or so someone will approach you and ask you to sign up for Meal for Crop. Go ahead. You will be hungry for only a few hours and it will help keep someone else from being hungry for days.

If you want to help work on the project, contact Andy Murray at the Campus Minister's office. The project is sponsored by the Campus Minister with help from Center Board and Circle K. The goal for the project is to have 600 students donating meals and to raise $1800.

Huntingdon Attorney To Chair Juniata Board Of Trustees

HUNTINGDON, PA. — Huntingdon attorney C. Jewett Henry, a member of the board of trustees since 1959, has been elected chairman of the board at Juniata College. The announcement was made last weekend by Dr. John C. Baker, who is stepping down after 13 years in the post.

In addition, Dr. Baker announced that Dr. Calvert N. Ellis, president emeritus at Juniata, will serve as vice chairman of the board. Both appointments are effective immediately.

A 1929 Juniata graduate, Henry is a partner in the Huntingdon firm of Henry, Corcelius, Gates & Gill. A history major at Juniata, he received the LL.B. degree from the University of Pittsburgh Law School in 1932 and later received the J.D. degree from the same institution. He has also studied at the University of Pennsylvania.

The new board chairman engaged in private practice from 1933-46 before establishing a partnership with A. Lynn Corcelius, a 1938 Juniata graduate, in Huntingdon. The partnership existed for 24 years before expanding in 1970 to Henry, Corcelius & Gates. It grew to its present state in 1974.

A member of the Pennsylvania and American Bar Association, Henry has also been admitted to practice before the United States Supreme Court.

A native of nearby Alexandria, Henry is a past president of the Huntingdon County Bar Association, Juniata's National Alumni Association, and the J.C. Blair Memorial Hospital board. He has been a director of several additional organizations, including the Penn Central National Bank of Huntingdon and Huntingdon Throwing Mills, Inc., of which he is currently secretary.

Henry also served as chairman last year of Juniata's Presidential Selection Committee, which elected Dr. Frederick M. Binder as the college's eighth chief executive.

Active in civic affairs, Henry is a member of the Masons, Odd Fellows, Shriners and Kiwanis Clubs, among others, and is a past Kiwanis president. He and his wife, the former Phyllis K. Wald of Huntingdon, are also active in the St. James Lutheran Church, and the couple has one son, John Jewett.

Professor Greg Gieble asks Bill Bickel and Steve Cordova, if he can possibly help Meal for CROP by selling 10 tickets. They say "yes."

National Trust Sponsors Competition For Students Producing Film, Videotape

Are you producing film or videotape? If so, focusing your efforts on the historic environment could pay off in four figures!

The National Trust for Historic Preservation has announced its Third National Collegiate Film and Video Competition, "Exploring Our Historic Environment," with entries due in Washington August 1, 1976.

Competition is open to graduate and undergraduate students enrolled in accredited colleges, universities and occupational schools in the United States.

Individual students or groups are eligible.

First-place winners in each of four categories with more than four entries will receive $1,000 prizes.

Categories are as follows:

— Preservation and restoration in process or completed, including traditional building crafts.

— Preservation and people; social, environmental and economic issues.

— Rehabilitation and city planning that demonstrates concern for preservation of older structures or areas.

— Historic site archaeology, historic horticulture or other subjects that aid in interpretation of a site or building.

Winning entries in last year's competition depicted the restoration of a ship by a skilled craftsman, explored New York City's Central Park as a historic and natural resource, and documented the heyday and eventual demise of the famous Broadwater Hotel in Helena, Montana.

Films may be 16mm or Super-8mm with optical or magnetic tracks if sound is used; video tape may be submitted in ½ or ¾-inch cassettes. All entries must be less than 15 minutes in length.

A faculty member must sponsor each entry.

Additional information and entry forms may be obtained by writing the Audio-visual Office, National Trust for Historic Preservation, 740-748 Jackson Place, N.W. Washington, D.C. 20006.

The National Trust was chartered by the United States Congress in 1949 to facilitate public participation in the preservation of structures, sites, objects and districts that are important historically and culturally to the nation.

With headquarters in Washington, D.C., and regional offices in Boston, Chicago, Oklahoma City and San Francisco, the National Trust has more than 100,000 members.

Circle K

This past Saturday evening, the J.C. Circle K club sponsored a semi-formal dance in Baker Refectory. Featured was Jon Yon and his Dance Orchestra with music ranging from polkas and big band to modern day hits. Much hard work by members, and even a few non-members, made it a very enjoyable event, that is, for those attending. Many thanks to those who came, hope you had a great time!

Circle K ?? Service — on campus and off. Interclub socials and campus events. Helping those less fortunate than ourselves. Giving — making an IMPACT ON LIFE.

Looking forward to next year — !!!!!!!

(Along Muddy Run)

This being the last Along Muddy Run article that will have By Saltz affixed to the title, I am stuck by two different and very contrasting ideas as to what I should write about this time around. On the one hand I feel like writing about something that in my view isn't as it should be, however, sentamentality has grabbed me, and I will abandon my usual style, and discuss a more pleasant topic.

When I think about what college life was to me, it was a culmination of a couple of things, but one of the most important has been the people that I have met, and become good friends with. For a while, it seemed like the social life was going through a serious deterioration process. However, for those that made it out to the fairgrounds for the Hockey Club's party renewed my faith that Social events can be planned, and be well attended. The people that night seemed to be in an All-Class night mood and indeed I heard comments that group was better and the party in general was organized at least as well as any All-Class night party.

The way that I view this situation is that one can only count on any college administration to a certain degree to provide special events to break up the tedum of Study. As a student body, we have to get it together enough, as we did last Saturday night, to make our own good time.

As I approach the time when I will be looking at my college career totally in retrospect, as I have begun to do here in this article, I think that all in all we have a good deal here at Juniata. One may remain pretty much anonymous if he chooses, or may become very active on campus. One may learn to know his or her Instructors in a way other than simply the person who lectures and grades papers and tests. There is definitely advantages to being a student here at Juniata, but the size of this college has one great liability that students should realize. We can't always depend on the other guy, to have a party, to go to class and take notes, or to have written a paper that we can use over again for another class. To be a student here it seems to me that one has got to do it himself, a point that I feel Juniata should be proud of.

Editorial

Ralph Whetstone

Throughout the course of this year my staff and I have tried various methods to improve the Juniatian, sometimes with success, other times without. The most notable change in our paper was the switch to another printing company which is extremely efficient and experienced. This in itself greatly helped the image of the Juniatian.

Due to many factors which are beyond my control (such as a continually reduced budget) and (student apathy) in regard to wanting to work for the Juniatian, the paper in my opinion has not been all it could have been. These statements basically serve no other purpose other than to remind the student of the many imposed limitations which are in a pragmatic sense insurmountable here at Juniata. In any event the intent of this editorial is to name the person I have chosen to replace my position and become editor of the Juniatian next year. The student I have chosen is a freshman woman who has demonstrated exceptional reliability and without a doubt outstanding service to this years' paper, that person is "Teddy Lyras." In short, I would like to thank that select number of students who did have the time to work for the Juniatian and Mr. Pollack in the Public Information Office for his valuable assistance.

"Contrast" Means Comedy In Juniata Presentation

HUNTINGDON — Lovers' triangles, social confusion, powdered wigs and Revolutionary era costuming all promise to make viewing the Juniata College production of "The Contast" a bicentennial "must."

Performances of this 1787 Royall Tyler play, one of the most popular comedies of the early American Colonial period, are set for 8:15 p.m., Saturday and Sunday, May 8 and 9, in Oller Hall Auditorium on the Juniata campus.

Set in post-Revolutionary New York, the plot of "The Contrast" centers around Maria, a well-read sentimentalist, and Billy Dimple, a real "ladies' man," who are unhappy in a bethrothal arranged by their parents.

Other characters in the comedy include: Charlotte, a gossip and social butterfly, who is one of Dimple's secret lovers; Letitia, Charlotte's dearest friend, who (unknown to Charlotte) is also one of Dimple's favorites; and Colonel Manly, Charlotte's brother, who is basically a man of fine character, but rather lacking in some of the social graces of the time.

Also adding humor to the play are Jonathan, Col. Manly's clumsy "waiter," and Jessamy, Dimple's conceited servant who unsuccessfully tries to teach Jonathan how to woo the women.

Centennial Open Houses

To: Students, Faculty and Staff who helped with the Centennial Open Houses

From: Bonnie Makdad

Re: Thanks

Just a note to thank you for your time and help with the Centennial Open Houses held Saturday. I feel the work involved, displays, and attendance of faculty and students help to represent our interest and pride in Juniata's Centennial Celebration.

I appreciate all the effort put forth and am certain that those people who visited the different Open Houses were left with a better feeling towards Juniata.

Thanks again for your aid on our special occasion.

The Week In Juniata Sports:

(The third in a series of weekly wrap-ups of spring sports at Juniata College, highlighting individual performance.)

TENNIS (1-1 on the week; 8-5 on the season): Having wound up an unbeaten conference slate with a 6½-2½ victory over Albright Wednesday afternoon, the Indians dropped their title match in the Middle Atlantic Conference Northern Division, 6-0 to Upsala Friday. The Albright win had left the Indians 5-0 in the Northern Division West Section, but the East Section champion Vikings proved too much. Upsala lost its bid for the overall crown to Southern champ Swarthmore, 8-1 Saturday, giving Swarthmore its 12th title in the last 13 years.

Five of six Indian singles players won their crucial Albright matches, but all were defeated by Vikings (the doubles play in the latter test was suspended). The splits left senior Gavin Ford (Felicity, O.), who will soon end four years as the Indians' number one man, with the Tribe's leading record — 10-3 on the season. Freshman Scott Burghart (Franklin Lakes, NJ) is 5-2 at number six, while senior Mont Rice (Connellsville) is 9-4 at number three. Another freshman, fourth man Greg Norton (Bloomsburg), is currently 7-6.

Burghart and sophomore Dave Shober (Ephrata), the only doubles winners at Albright, ran their record to 8½-2½ at number three. The only two newcomers are prime reason the Indians sport a doubles mark of 21½-10½ this year, having managed only 19-13 last spring.

BASEBALL (1-2 on the week; 3-8 on the season): Rain did the Indians in at Wilkes, ending the first of two scheduled games with the Tribe behind 2-0 with the tying runs on base. The threat of rain was enough on Monday, causing two pitchers to miss the trip by thinking a twinbill at Pitt-Johnstown had been cancelled. The Indians managed a split, however, dropping the opener 10-6 and squeezing out the nightcap win, 4-3.

Coach Bill Berrier turned for the win to his slugging centerfielder Steve Harper (Clearfield). Harper did not bat, however — he made his first appearance on the mound for the Tribe. He went 6-2/3 innings, allowing five hits and just one earned run while striking out three. Sophomore leftfielder Tom Gibboney (Huntingdon) saved the win by nailing the tying run at the plate for the final out of the game. Offensively, freshman shortstop Pete Bartlett (Broomall) wasthe Tribe's big gun, driving in three runs with a third-inning double.

At Wilkes, sophomore righthander Elmer Levengood (Pottstown) absorbed the tough loss, going all five innings and yielding one earned run. He allowed four hits, struck out two and walked two.

The team will wind things up with a singleton at home with Penn State Monday.

GOLF (2-3 on the week; 4-6 on the season): The Indians split triangulars Wednesday and Friday, losing to Gettysburg 411-431 and Wilkes 384-395, respectively, and defeating Johns Hopkins 431-446 and Albright 395-412. At Pitt-Johnstown Monday, the Tribe was squeezed 10-9 in its only non-stroke match of the season.

Sophomore Doug Garner (Huntingdon) paced the Tribe against Wilkes and Albright, carding a near-medal 75 as the Indians logged their low round of the year. Junior Jim Ludwick (Pottstown), who was Tribe low man at 81 in the earlier three-way affair, turned in a 77 in the Wilkes and Albright test.

Ludwick has now averaged 81.6 for five scoring rounds this year, taking over the Indian lead. Garner follows at 82.3 for six scoring rounds, but included among Garner's scores are the high figures from the MAC Tournament. Sophomores Dean Miller (Jeannette) and Rusty Hoover (Roaring Spring), whose scores also suffered at the MAC's, follow at 84.3.

The Indians close out their season Monday, hosting Susquehanna.

WOMEN'S TENNIS (0-2) on the week; 1-6 on the season): The Indians dropped a pair of tests to a pair of "neighbors," Susquehanna 6-3 and Bucknell 8-1.

The Indians' top performer of late has been senior Lynne Grove (York), who picked up the Tribe's only win playing number four singles against Bucknell. She also won at number four at Susquehanna, giving her back-to-back straight-set victories and upping her season record to 2-4. Sophomore Lisa Frosell (Edgewood, MD) also won at Susquehanna, making her 2-2 at

Reflections of a Discjockey

By Kathy Jacobs

One of the most rewarding experiences in life can be seeing improvements and developments, over a period of time, in something you really care about. Greg Eveline, a senior, recalls the days only four years ago at WJC, when it really seemed like an underground radio station. The changes since then have been vast, both physically and in the operating of the station. Record service, particularly, has increased a great amount.

Greg says that now there are better feelings among all the people at WJC. Everyone has more responsibility, and really enjoys working there in many different capacities. With the recent proposal for the FM noncommercial-educational system, officially passed for next year, the opportunities will even be greater. We will be hearing much more about this next year.

Greg encourages new people to get involved with WJC, especially girls. Having a show is a great way to express yourself in terms of the music you play and editorials, as well. Greg feels that his experiences at WJC will stay with him for the rest of his life. He is now hoping for a career in broadcasting. We can be sure that Greg has been just as beneficial to WJC, as it has been to him.

Women Cadets

Long Beach, Calif.-(I.P.)-An 18-year-old California State University, Long Beach, biology student may be among the first women cadets to enter the United States military academy at West Point this spring. If she does well in a series of medical, physical and scholastic tests, the student, Gail Marie Wuchner, could begin at West Point in July.

Nominated for appointment to the academy by Congressman Charles H. Wilson (D-Calif.) as a result of a law signed by President Gerald Ford in Oct. 1975, opening West Point to females, the Gardena student said, "I don't consider myself a women's libber, it's just that West Point is a good opportunity for a good education. Besides it's a good chance to serve my country."

Wuchner said the lure of a full scholarship and an education at a prestigious institution also prompted her to seek the nomination. "The nomination is the most difficult," she said. "The tests can't be that bad."

In doubles play, sophomore Carolyn Setzer (Camp Hill) and senior Deb Worrall (Malvern) split their week's matches, leaving them 2-1 at number one.

Raystown Idea Bank

ANY BUDDING THESPIANS AROUND?

No, we're not looking for a flowering bush. We are trying to discover if there are any students who intend to attend summer session who would be interested in participating in Summer Theatre.

The Raystown Idea Bank (R.I.B.) has as the "brainstorm of the month" the idea of creating a repertory theatre. The group would function all year long, but would prepare a season for the summer visitors to Raystown Area, as well as the local populace.

We need people with all types of talent . . . acting, set design, technical, etc. If you are interested and intend to be here this summer please notify Doris Goehring in the Speech and Drama Dept. Your interest will help us decide as to the value of this idea.

Introduction to Center Board

by Elaine Joyce

I'd like to extend a warm welcome to the new freshman class and returning upperclassmen. Perhaps I should introduce myself before I continue. My name is Elaine Joyce, and I am General Chairman of Center Board for the 1976-77 school year. The purpose of this article is twofold, it is written to acquaint you, the student body, with the purpose and functions of Center Board and to make you aware of the students who serve as Committee Chairmen on the Board.

Center Board is the student programming board on campus. According to our By-Laws, the purpose of Center Board is "...to develop and implement a broad cultural, educational, social and recreational program for the members of the College in compliment with the academic program of the College." Sounds somewhat pompus, doesn't it? Actually we endeavor to create a social atmosphere through extracurricular activities that operate outside the academic classroom.

The board is composed of seven committees:

Fine Arts Council
Concert Committee
Recreation Committee
Coffeehouse/Dance Committee
Special Events Committee
Films Committee
Publicity Committee

In addition to committee chairmen, membership on the Board includes the General Chairman, Vice-Chairman, Secretary-treasurer, an Alumni representative, a Faculty representative, an Administrative representative, and a Student Government representative. All of the above possess one vote on the Board, with the exception of the General Chairman who votes only in the case of a tie.

In this article each committee will be briefly discussed. In later issues of the Juniatian, each committee chairman will explain his/her committee in greater detail.

The Fine Arts Council is headed by Micki Gaunt. The Council plans and programs various cultural activities for the college community. The Artist Series is programmed through the Council. Events programmed by the Council include art shows, craft shows and special cultural events outside the Artist Series Program.

Paul Endress and Kenny Rodger co-chair the Concert Committee. As the title implies, this committee programs concerts, both mini and maxi, during the academic year.

Recreation Committee plans a program of varied levels of recreational activities. Events sponsored by the Recreation Committee include Mountain Day, tournaments, and Raft Regatta. Mitch Wells is the Committee Chairman.

The chairman of the Coffeehouse and Dance Committee is Mark Smith. This committee plans the coffeehouses programs, plans and organizes mixers and dances on campus.

Co-chairman Bev Martin and Katie Middleton head the Special Events Committee. Some of the events programmed are Homecoming, Madrigal Dinner, All Class Night, Spring Weekend and May Day Breakfast.

Films Committee plans, schedules and shows a variety of films throughout the academic year. Kit Salisbury and Jim Donahue co-chair this committee.

The last committee to be described is the Publicity Committee. David Corman is the Committee Chairman. The primary purpose of this committee is to promote and publicize the events Center Board programs.

Corrie Foy is Center Board Vice-Chairman and assists the General Chairman in executing the administrative duties. She runs all Center Board elections and aids any committee chairman who requests her assistance.

The Secretary-treasurer is Sonia Bahner. She is responsible for keeping the minutes of the Board meeting and is responsible for the budget.

Center Board meets every Tuesday evening at 7 P.M. in the Faculty Lounge. The meetings are open to the student body. I urge anyone who has a criticism or suggestions concerning programming to attend the Board meetings or contact one of the chairman. The more student input we receive, the more we can program to the students' tastes and interests.

I personally hope for a good programming year for the Board. However, it can only happen with your support.

Welcome to the Students—1976

This month begins the first academic year of Juniata's second century. We open with one of the largest freshmen classes in Juniata's long history. Your total student body this fall is 1148 strong. Most of you live on the campus, thus forming our community. Each of you has selected Juniata from among a number of colleges and universities. Whether you are a freshman or an upperclassman, you are here by choice and not by chance.

There is no way "to suceed in college without really trying." But in the very act of trying college becomes an exhilarating experience — an adventure in living and learning. Your years here move on swiftly. How fortunate you are to have time to ponder and to think, to absorb information, to test ideas and to seek truth. How often will you peer into your world of the campus and see spinning inside its core a microcosm of the world outside?

Fall and not spring is the time for the rebirth of a college. The campus comes alive again with young forms and faces. There is movement and good sounds. There are lights once more in the dormitories. There is the smell of football in the air. These are the golden days at Juniata and we, as faculty and staff, are glad you are here. We like to believe that you are glad to be here, too, because when you are young there is no better place to be.

Smith Seeks Social and Political Changes for J.C.

by Nancy Rowe

The President of Student Government, Brian Smith, stated in a recent interview; "My policy is if things in the past don't seem to be working too well...change it." Smith and Student Government are concentrating on dorm government reform, a voter registration drive, and internal organizational problems.

The old dorm government structure — having a dorm president and representatives — is "not working" claimed Smith. The new policy will allow students to voice complaints and suggestions directly to a senator or member of Center Board at meetings of hall organizations.

Student Government is also working jointly with Center Board on having coffee houses in the lounges of dorms Said Smith, "In the past, the policy has been that no college funded money (to a particular organization) will be allowed to go towards any activity that is serving any alcoholic beverage."

However, a hall could sponser a party and buy the beer with private money, while Student Government would pay for non-alcoholic drinks. "We want to make it known that there will be money for use." The result, said Smith, "would be almost a nightclub atmosphere." He is hopeful that these types of coffee houses would keep more students on campus over the weekends.

President Smith is encouraged by these joint ventures with Center Board. The conflicting attitudes between the two organizations in past years seems to have dissipated. Smith was confident in saying "if we have to go to the administration, we'll go as one group instead of two...a unified front."

Smith claimed that the relationship between students, faculty, and administration had been thought of as a "tension-type relationship." He sees Juniata as a "college run by (these) three factions." However, Smith wanted to stress that "we're working with them, not against them," and that students give faculty new insights which they may not see.

All three "factions" are involved in the voter registration drive. The objective of this Student Government drive is to get eligible voters to register in Huntingdon rather than their home districts.

Would students with out-of-state grants lose their financial aid? Smith claimed with assurance, "It is illegal to determine residency according to where you register to vote." If an out-of-state grant is cut off, Smith claimed that the Student Government would be willing to hire a lawyer and take it to court.

Also, Huntingdon cannot get

by: D. Brown

Another year at Juniata and low and behold, what did the students discover in "The Pathfinder?" An alcohol policy and none too soon, because one must admit we did use that policy to the fullest extent this past weekend. As one stands at the bottom of the stairs, about to embark on a party in East House what runs through the minds of "innocent" freshmen and, "experienced" underclassmen? For the frosh, one would probably find a twinge of fear, in the upperclassmen, nonchalance — both feelings will soon be drown with the pleasant buzz of a few beers, if you can get to the keg.

Most people enjoy having others around them when partying, but when movement is restricted to standing on a postage stamp, paralysis of the lower torso is inevitable. Unfortunately, crowds are sure to build and the blame goes to those throwing the party, but it's not the fault of the people sponsoring the party.

This past weekend was truly unique. There were numerous parties, yet at nearly every party there were enough people to drink the refreshments provided, and few parties were plagued with dullness.

What does this say about the student body at Juniata? First of all, the freshman are definately party people and the upperclassmen were anticipating the coming year at J.C. by spending a normal weekend back on campus.

Thus far, we have arrived at the party and found that it is difficult to move and next to impossible to come within six feet of the keg. From this point on the question of WHY rings through the minds of a majority of those in attendance who had the intention of getting a good buzz on.

Specifically one asks oneself, why did I decide to come to this party, why did I get so drunk, why do I feel like I'm going to get sick, why is it that next weekend I will do exactly the same thing? All of these questions are recited as one watches their beer foam of a few hours ago swirl down the bowl. On the whole I believe that the answers to these questions are relatively universal, at least for those persons who attend Juniata, so everyone knows the answer.

By this time, it's probably three o'clock in the morning and time to retire to the floor. Obviously the type of party person I'm describing has had enough experience to know that beds spin and in the condition they are in they need something nice and solid like a floor.

The previous sequence of events takes place during a normal Friday or Saturday night on campus, but the most agonizing event of all is the morning after.

The morning after somehow sneaks upon you with surprising quickness. Suddenly you find yourself awake on the floor wondering if you had somehow fallen there from the top bunk, but slowly it all comes back. All of the people, the postage stamp you stood on, the WHYS, the foamed bowl, etc. The next event that strikes you is your present condition. You body feels like it was run over by a Mack truck, your mouth tastes like the bottom of a bird cage and your head, well you don't even want to think about it. All you want to do is get a shower, brush your teeth and eat something. The only problem with this is that you don't think cafeteria food is exactly what you had in mind for your stomach. Then when you go to the cafeteria for lunch, you know that your stomach is going to revolt if you even run that food under your nose, but you take that chance knowing what the consequences might be. Somehow you survive, knowing full well that you will repeat the whole sequence again in six to seven days.

For the partying people of Juniata, the first weekend back proved to be very promising for the coming year and for those of you who have yet to party here at J.C., you know what to expect, but don't let it scare you away, because if it was that bad, why would people do it again and again and again and...

Letter to the Editor

Tradition or Terrorism?

Brutality and violence were once accepted in the Medieval Era, but we had hoped it had died along with most feudalistic ideals. Unfortunately, this is not the case. It has been reborn, here on the Juniata campus, with the "Storming of the Arch."

We would like to make it clear that we are not against the tradition, but rather, the violence and maliciousness the students inflict upon one another. Many serious injuries have occurred in the past, this year being no exception. The use of less harmless weapons as shaving cream, tomatoes or water would be understandable and fun. However, when students are put in the hospital as a result of their injuries received, then we feel this is the time to draw the line.

We hope the upperclassmen of next year will realize the damage that can be done, and has been done, and put a stop to it.

Sincerely,
Karen Schydlowski
Margaret Broadwell
Debbie Pearce
Janet Kelso.

The Dinosaur is Dead

by Cliff Ryer, Student Senator

For several years the Juniata student body has been plagued by the presence of a cumbersome and useless organization called RHA (Residence Hall Association). What is the purpose of RHA? Well, in my conversations with fellow students, I discovered that very few of them had any idea of the purpose of this organization. So before I precede, I will list the purpose of RHA as cited in it's constitution:

The purpose of this organization shall be: 1) to promote and organize activities within the residence halls. 2) To guarantee a certain standard of living within residence halls. 3) To advise in the selection of R. A.'s. 4) To mediate conflicts within the halls. 5) And to insure the general welfare of the residential students.

Did you know that? Well if you didn't, don't be too hard on yourself, because in the light of the achievements of RHA in the last several years, it is surprising that it didn't die long ago. So, considering RHA's reputation, we might ask if it is even necessary today? In the opinion of the Senate, it is not. For on Thursday, Sept. 16, the Senate abolished RHA by a 9-1 vote. Our reasoning in this matter is obvious. RHA was created before the existance of Centerboard and to students on a one to one basis. We hope, that in this way, student concerns will become more open and that your student government will become more accessible.

As we start a new school year, we, in student government hope that each and every one of you will become involved. For without your help, our job becomes impossible. We feel that in the structual changes we have initiated there lies many opportunities for you to get involved and make an impact on your school. Let us all attempt to insure that no new dinosaurs are created this year.

From the Editor

Welcome back to Juniata: this is the first issue of a regular weekly newspaper run entirely by interested students on a voluntary basis. "The Juniatian" will be distributed throughout the campus and to friends, parents, alumni and other subscribers every Thursday of every week during the academic year, except during examination and vacation periods.

"The Juniatian" is used as the primary source of written information for all members of the Juniata community. In addition to being a bulletin for campus events and a compiling of objective reporting, "The Juniatian" will also serve as a medium for free exchange and an outlet for creative offerings to be provided by the readers.

This is the first issue put forth by a newly organized staff. I will take this opportunity to introduce "The Juniatian's" advisor and other editors. Our new advisor for this year is Professor Hochberg, and my editors are as follows: Dave Corman, news editor; Herman Klinger, business manager; Carolyn Setzer, advertising editor; Jay "Ace" Nelson, photography editor; and Ellen Snyder, circulation editor. I am greatly looking forward to working with my staff, whose intent along with mine, is to continually improve upon every facet of the paper, and at the same time produce a good paper. Already new ideas have been inserted into the first issue. There are still more to come.

But keep this in mind: this product is your product. The success of "The Juniatian" depends upon the interest of its readers. A product value is measured by the degree in which it is in demand. Whatever you, the readers, put into this paper, you shall get.

What can you, the reader, do? As an individual you can participate in the production of "The Juniatian" in several ways. If you wish to work on the paper, either contact Teddy Lyras (309 South), P.O. Box 1413, or drop a short note in the intracollege mail addressed to "The Juniatian." There are openings in almost every department. All staff members choose their own working hours by scheduling their free time.

If you, as a reader, have no wish to actively participate, you will be doing the paper a great service by dropping us a note on what you feel about the paper — any new ideas, any suggestions, any criticisms — anything will be welcome. Or come in person to the Juniatian office in Ellis basement. (Office hours will soon be published.) Only by hearing from you, will we know whether we are satisfying your needs or not.

Just remember: when we can count on you, you can count on us.

Getting to Know You

By: Elizabeth Borton
Thecla Coppolo
Sandra Taylor

"Getting to Know You," is a column which we have been thinking about for some time. Of course, we weren't always aware of it, but it was there just the same. What we'd like to do with this column is to introduce you both informally and personally, to people — many different kinds of people — on or around campus. We will not be dealing with the most popular or beautiful people on campus, nor will we be dealing with the super athletes that can be found in almost every sport. Instead, we will be concerned with those individuals who are interesting in their own right, on a one-to-one basis. We want to emphasize the personality, the feelings, the special uniqueness that separates one person from the next — not the academic achievements or the competitive achievements which are, more or less, obvious to everyone. We do not mean to suggest that these do not deserve recognition, rather, their kudos would be aliens in our column.

Because this is our very first column, we feel it is only fair for us to introduce ourselves, and then close with some notes on a few new profs on campus.

My name is Sandy Taylor. I am a nineteen-year-old sophomore from Bricktown, New Jersey and am majoring in Secondary Education, English Literature and Journalism. I love to entertain and write, and I enjoy participating in all kinds of sports. My musical tastes include Chick Korea, Joni Mitchell, Carole King, Herbi Hancock, Genesis, Rackmaninoff, and disco.

I am Teck Coppolo, and I'm majoring in Child Psychology. I am a nineteen-year-old sophomore interested in theater, drawing, and people. My home is in St. Marys, Pennsylvania. I love Emerson, Lake, and Palmer, and disco. As far as sports, I am addicted to swimming, and on occasion, can be found on a golf course. And like Sandy, I love to entertain.

My name is Betsy Borton, and I am also a nineteen-year-old sophomore. I am from Moorestown, New Jersey and am majoring in history with hopes of entering into museum work. I love parties and, especially, dancing. I am into antiques, art and complex music.

We'd like to welcome a few new profs to Juniata, with best wishes for a happy and successful year.

Andrew Bargerstock, M.B.A., from the University of of Pittsburgh, is an Assistant Professor of Economics.

Jessiann F. Dortch, M.S. from Wheelock College. She is an Instructor in Education and in charge of the new Early Childhood Center which is located in Maude Lesher basement.

Linda Sue Esch, Ph.D., from Boston University. Linda Sue is an Assistant Professor of Mathematics.

Tom Lyons Fisher, M.A. from Iowa State University is an Assistant Professor of Chemistry.

David A. Flanary, M.A., is a graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Mr. Flanary is a part-time French instructor.

Another new face that you science students may be seeing in the Biology department is that of Mr. Todd D. Gustafson, Ph.D. Todd is an Assistant Professor of Biology.

Lee G. Nollau, J.D. has been added to the list of Economics and Business Administration Instructors here at Juniata College. Lee is a graduate of Dickinson School of Law in Carlisle, Pennsylvania.

Last, but certainly not least, is Ms. Ruth Elizabeth Reed, Ph.D. Ruth is a graduate from Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University. She is an Assistant Professor of Chemistry.

Speaking with Ralf Neufang

by Joann Sandone

Each September Juniata's campus swarms with many new faces. One new face which you will be seeing is that of Ralf Neufang. Ralf is a German exchange student who will be studying during the 76-77 school year here at Juniata.

Ralf is from Liebenau; a small town along the river Weser in the northern part of the German Federal Republic. He attended elementary school there and after four years, changed to a boy's gymnasium in a larger city near his home town. After five years there, he changed again to a co-ed gymnasium where he finished at the age of nineteen by receiving the "Abitur" (a diploma). During his schooling, he learned English and French and took part in the political life of the school government. He began be become interested in traveling and experiencing the life of other people and their cultures. Ralf says that the jobs he held during vacations (such as working in factories and administrative offices in schools) made a big impression on him and contributed to his learning through experiencing.

After Gymnasium he began to study in the University of Marburg along the River Lahn. There he studied philosophy, politics and German. More specifically, he is interested in systems and theories of societies, modern literature, Goethe, and modern German philosophy. He is also studying this at Juniata. He hopes to work in close contact with people after finishing his schooling.

One of Ralf's firm convictions is that it is necessary to become acquainted with the life-styles and ways of living of other countries. He decided to study in the United States for one year because he thinks, "It is one of the most important countries in the world with a big influence, at least, in the Western World." And, of course, he wants to learn the English language better.

Ralf arrived here on August 13 with a great hunger to receive new impressions and experiences. He enjoys all kinds of music, as long as it is understandable. He is particularly fond of Westerns, and of course, he finds some of the American habits different from those to which he is accustomed. Ralf says he wants to learn to play tennis, meet more people, and help people understand each other, specifically Germans and Americans. The only thing he misses is "Kuchen," a type of pastry which he enjoys back home in Germany.

Freshman Surprises

by Suzanne Sweatlock

Do you remember what it was like to be a freshman? Juniata's new crop of first year students are living that experience right now.

After spending a summer preparing for college and listening to other people's horror stories of "that first year," freshmen invariably find themselves alone in a new world. Left to their own devices, perhaps for the first time in their lives, it becomes necessary to navigate through many new situations. For instance, in high school a text book was placed before the student. In college, it's everyone for himself. As one frosh put it, "It doesn't say anything in the Pathfinder about the lines in the bookstore." Better still, "How do you explain to your friends at home about Modes?" or "Three hour finals?" and "When do I go home?"

Take heart dear freshman, for as the year progresses, the surprises diminish. Before you know it, you'll be shaking your heads and smiling at the freshmen class of 1978.

Grass Roots: The triumph of the Arch

This year a new concept is being instituted: at-random journalism! In the future the author of this column could be you! Every week we will select, at random, a name from the official student roster. The person belonging to that name will be expected to submit an article for the next week's paper on any subject he wishes. Our goal? To try to generate greater interest in "The Juniatian" and at the same time to create a more interesting paper by printing a wide cross-selection of articles. This concept was begun in 1971 and seemed to be successful. For some reason it was later discontinued. It is now being re-instituted with the hope that you, the student body, will keep it going. It's up to you. Your ideas are always welcome.

The annual Storming of the Arch is uncivilized, dangerous and asinine. But there is one more thing; it's fun. I have been on both sides of the gallant battle and had a good time during the two encounters. My freshmen year I looked at the Storming as one of my first college challenges. I was not sure if I wanted to participate from the stories that the upperclassmen had told us. Whether I wanted to or not, I was committed, if by nothing else but sheer pride.

This year was different. At first I wasn't even planning to attend. I felt that I had already done my part for the tradition. However, the night that the Arch came under Storm, I decided to just go over and watch. As a precaution, I made sure I had old clothes on. Then something happened between my dorm and the Cloister. I saw the faces of the determined and uncertain freshmen; I heard the cheers of the defenders, and I saw the gathering crowd in the side lawn of Oller Hall. It reminded me of my high school days, when we ran out on the football game field for warm-up. The people were psyched! The crowd's excitement took hold of me in the way that all crowds permeate each individual, pulling him into the social frenzy. Before I knew it, I was standing on the front of the stairs beside the rest of the guarding upperclassmen, many of them sophomores who had come from the other direction last year. There was the Storm, and then it was all over.

Sure there were injuries. Injuries in such a brawl are inevitable. This is probably the biggest complaint about the Storming. Due to the possibilities of accidents many people believe that the Storming should be stopped. Then those same people shouldn't ride in a car, since there is always the possibility of an accident. But, there is a purpose to riding in a car just as the Storming of the Arch serves a function.

What possible purpose could the Storming of the Arch fulfill? I'll tell you in my words. Juniata may not be the most social campus in the world; it's no Penn State but in its own way our college offers something good. At Juniata there is still time for traditions. Modernization here has not wiped out all the past that was good. Much of it is still preserved and can be seen in events such as the Storming and Mountain Day. Juniata offers quality education and tradition hand in hand. I feel that they go together and I also think that the spirit of Juniata is kept alive by certain events such as the Storming of the Arch.

The Storming of the Arch

by Melanie Boyer

Confusion has to be the one word that sums up this year's Storming of the Arch.

The traditional night of the storming is Wednesday, and except for a rumor which no one could seem to trace and one lonely voice yelling from North to "storm the arch," most people expected it to be on a Wednesday night. The upperclassmen, a little leary of the largest freshmen class to come along for quite some time, took organizational matters into their own hands. This small band of upperclassmen traveled the campus by car and over a CB radio broadcasted the news that the storming was to take place that night. They did their best to call all the freshmen out of their dorms and over to Cloister, but they forgot that most upperclassmen thought it was to take place on Wednesday. By the time a large band of freshmen had gathered, there seemed to be only a handful of upperclassmen on the Arch.

Since it was a Tuesday night and many students have no classes on Wednesday, it could be expected that some upperclassmen would be found in the local Huntingdon bars. A call went out to Kelly's, a favorite spot, and soon the reinforcements arrived.

By about 10:00, it was apparent that tradition would be broken and the Storming of the Arch would be on a Tuesday night. Sufficient numbers of both freshmen and upperclassmen had arrived ready for battle.

The freshmen gathered at the end of the walk to Cloister, the upperclassmen positioned themselves on Cloister's steps. The freshmen, who had no better numbers than any other year, made their first attack. The upperclassmen had hoses and cans of water waiting, resulting in a soaking wet free-for-all. Fighting was one-on-one, and the usual confusion about who was in what class." The attack was soon broken off and the freshmen retreated down the walk.

The upperclassmen sent up the cry for the freshmen to "go study Modes." This provoked all the rest of the attacks by the freshmen, but none were successful.

Soon the numbers of freshmen began to dwindle — perhaps they had decided to take the upperclassmen's advice and study Modes. By about 11:00 the upperclassmen declared themselves once again victorious.

The usual injuries for such an event occured. The fighting was well controlled, when the fighting between two people became too heated, it was broken up.

It did seem that with the size of the freshmen class their showing was very poor. It is true that they had no idea the storming was to be on a Tuesday night, but neither did the upperclassmen. The freshmen's only consolation is that next year there will be a new freshmen class and they will be the upperclassmen.

Pro-Con: "The Storming of the Arch"

by Terese Balinski

Every September in the evening after the first day of classes, Juniata's traditional hazing takes place. It is known as the "Storming of the Arch" and involves the upperclassmen defending the arch of Cloister from the freshmen.

Although some see this Juniata tradition as an adventure, the excitement of the moment often results in violence. What do Juniata men have to say about this?

Well, two freshmen, who wish to remain anonymous, had no part of the "Storming". "...I think it is a big joke...It's O.K. if it's controlled. Pounding a kid's head on the cement is not my idea of fun...there should be something less violent..."

The upperclassmen generally feel less passionate about the dangers involved in the excitement. Tom Powell (a junior), believes that," a few people can ruin it for everybody...I wasn't involved this year, but I feel that it is a good thing as long as no one becomes serious about hurting each other..."

Mark Dooley, another junior, has this to say about the infamous night. "As a freshmen I felt that I had something to prove and that is why I took part in it...it seems to be O.K. if it is controlled." A senior, Mike Johnson, feels that..."It's a Juniata tradition...if someone becomes violent it will responded to and that is when everything flies out of hand. Sure, Juniata should continue with the, 'Storming of the Arch,' we have no other form of freshmen hazing here and, remember, there has never been a death!"

I heard an over-riding sense of wishing to continue with the annual "Storming of the Arch," whether it be a freshmen who feels he has something to prove, or an upperclassman who wishes to release pent up frustrations. There were a few disparaging remarks about the trash-can tossing this year, but I'm sure that by next year that trivial difficulty will be cleared. Keep on "Storming the Arch," but please leave the baseball bats at home!

used to organize the activities now handled by Centerboard. Since that time RHA has been a tag-along, attempting to mimic the actions of it's bigger brother. Now the other responsibilities that used to be ignored by RHA will be handled by the student government itself.

In order to meet these new responsibilities, the senate has adopted a new policy designed to open up lines of communication between itself and students in the residence halls. Senators and centerboard officials will come around to the dorms on a regular basis and knock on doors to speak

Why Cinematheque

"What's a culturally derriere-garde school like Juniata doing with something as worldly and sophisticated as a cinematheque?" The question is on everyone's lips these days. That or maybe "What the hell IS a cinematheque, anyway?" or in a few cases "Hey, have you seen that freshman with the huge gazongas?"

We'll give what help we can. A cinematheque (sinuh-ma-TEK, turkey) is a movie house that specializes in retrospectives. Each term Juniata's cinematheque will offer two film series, with the pictures in a given series sharing a common genre, period, director, actor, key grip or the like.

The new theater, which seats about eighty, is located in the bottom floor of Ellis Hall in the area formerly known as the mini-stage. Now it's called Plato's Cave, a moniker which, as anyone who has dipped into The Republic will enjoy pointing out to you, simultaneously pays homage to the man who invented the movie theater and cautions us against getting sucked in too thoroughly by our most powerful art form.

The Cave is a little antiseptic looking just now, and the acoustics and sound system leave a lot to be desired, but if the new theater becomes a popular campus gathering place, improvements in sound and ambiance will follow.

In addition to contributing mightily to Juniata's extra-curricular life, the Cave seems likely to be useful academically. Two classes are already being taught there, and instructors are being encouraged to use the room for film screenings both in the daytime and on evenings not taken up by the regular series. In later terms the Center Board Film Committee hopes to work closely with professors who plan to use feature films in their courses. If these films can be coordinated with a cinematheque series both the Film Committee and the instructor can cut expenses.

This term the Friday night series is devoted to science fiction movies. Oldies like Things to Come and War of the Worlds provide a historical perspective, while very recent pictures such as THX 1138 and Westworld display the state of the art in the seventies. The most unusual film in the series is the bizarre Fantastic Planet, a full-length animated film made in 1073.

Monday nights will be even more fun. Ruby Keeler and Eleanor Powell are going to dance their little hearts out for you, and Busby Berkeley will execute tracking shots between the legs of chorus girls. And if you've never seen a Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers picture a whole part of your life is missing. Don't despair though: you can catch four of their flicks in the Thirties Musicals series.

After experimenting with a 6:15 first show, the film committee has decided to switch to 7:00 and 9:00 as the regular starting times. That still allows you to catch the early show and be out in time for a full evening of studying or partying.

Questions — Answers

Do you have a question concerning the college? A problem with faculty or adminstration? Wondering about taking a certain course? Bugged by regulations? Questioning the value of college related organizations? If so, write it in to QUESTIONS-ANSWERS, box 1346, or drop it off at the Juniatian office. We'll publish it and try to our best ability to answer it. Sometimes we'll find what your looking for, and maybe sometimes we'll run into the same roadblocks, but a least your question won't go unheeded. If you wish, your letter can be anonymous. We'll try to print as many as we can, especially those pertinent to the student body as a whole.

Good Movies

This year we're trying something new in cinema here at Juniata: running two "theme" series at Plato's Cave in addition to our weekly major motion picture series in Oller Hall. Monday nights, at 7 & 9 p.m., the thirties musical series will provide the very best of Fred and Ginger (not to mention some nice surprises from Cagney and Grable); in fact, on October 4th we're featuring "Flying Down to Rio" with the first Astaire-Rogers duet ever. The moment is magic: not to be missed.

Friday nights are sci-fi nights down at the Cave. Sept. 24th brings one of the best-known H.G. Wells stories to life with "Things to Come." The following Friday, Oct. 1, Wells strikes again with the classic "War of the Worlds." As usual, the shows are at 7 & 9 p.m. and admission to both series at the Cave (formerly the mini-stage in Ellis) is $1.00 at the door or series tickets ($7.50 at the information desk).

This Tuesday, Sept. 28th, exploding onto the screen for the first time on campus is Jimmy Cliff in "The Harder They Come." A drastic change from what you're used to seeing anywhere, Cliff has got it — if you can take it. It's really got to be seen to be believed. Admission is $1.50 at Oller Hall. Tuesday, the 28th, 8:15 p.m.: be there: for the biggest screen event of the term "The Harder They Come."

Interested in Education?

There is a concern, on the part of the faculty of the Department of Education, that students who would like to teach or work in some aspect of the education profession are being turned off by faulty or incomplete information. This article is intended to stir or rekindle your interest to the point that you come in and talk to one of the members of our department.

Yes, there is tremendous competiton for jobs in teaching but Juniata has been able to place 60-70% of those graduates who are certified and want to teach. Why? Because our academic program is strong, our professional work is sound, and our reputation good . . . and because we care. This year we had jobs available in Math and English that we could not provide candidates to fill. Those students who maintain a good academic record and carry out a strong program of field work have had little trouble being top candidates for good jobs.

Elementary majors have had a bit more difficulty than secondary graduates but all of that could change rapidly as we move into our new Early Childhood Education program. The field is wide open and by the Winter of 1977-78 we plan to be able to certify teachers in N-Primary (Nursery through Third Grade). Until that time persons taking a solid program in Human Development, Early Childhood, and Education-Psychology should find the Day Care Centers, private Jack & Jill schools and Christian Academies seeking their help. Again, those interested should stop by and talk.

But there are other positive gains to be made by following through with a program in Education. Gains other than certification to teach. Persons with good academic and professional education backgrounds find it easier to get good graduate school teaching assistantships and are good candidates for jobs in related education fields such as sales. Again, a few minutes of conversation with one of our department might help you with ideas for your future that you thought impossible or might not have thought about at all.

Don't be dissuaded by faulty or incomplete information if some aspect of the education profession is your goal. Come see us in Good Hall . . . a new and interesting idea might take shape.

More on Education

So that more students have the information let me explain briefly a change in field work in the Department of Education that provides secondary teaching candidates with more flexibility to develop a good Secondary Practicum (Ed. 360).

The student is required to take Intro. to Psych. (Which can be taken as early as the first term of the Freshman Year) and Basic Foundations of Education (Which can be taken as early as the third term of the Freshman Year). Upon successfully completion of these two units the student is eligible to begin work in Secondary Practicum. There are three terms of field work required to complete the practicum unit; two of these must be taken prior to Ed. 361 (Studies of Teaching) which is taken the Spring Term of the student's Junior year. The third term of the practicum follows in the Winter Term of one's Senior year; immediately after Student Teaching.

The point that I am attempting to make is that the sooner one completes Intro. to Psych. and Basic Foundations (Ed. 200) the more time one has to develop a practicum; as many as five terms to plan and carry out two terms of work. This allows the Department of Education to provide you with a more desirable experience for we are better able to match your schedule on campus to that of a public school teacher in your field. It gives you additional time to arrange and re-arrange your program to make the best possible use of the public school system as a field experience.

Those who have questions concerning this program (and other ways of meeting the practicum requirement) should contact Dr. Crouch in the Department of Education.

IUP Football Team "Gets the Hachet"

by Greg Ransom

The Juniata Indians opened its 1976 football campaign with an impressive victory over the Indiana University of Pennsylvania 38-21.

With the score even at halftime (14-14) the Indians returned to the field to display a superb offensive attack that provided three more touchdowns and a Stan Nosal field goal.

Highlighted by the magnificent running of Sophomore Dewayne Rideout, the backfield trio of Darryl Long, Allen Lipstein, and Rideout combined their talents with receivers Tom Gibboney and Eddie Flynn for a total offense of 382 yards. (Compared to Indiana's 273 yards.)

Defensively it was senior, Stu Jackson, applying the pressure inside with 18 crunching tackles, while Bob Devine also added some spice to the improved second half defense by intercepting two Indiana passes.

Recapping the game, it was Indiana scoring first on an excellently executed pass play that went the distance for 45 yards and the touchdown. On the ensuing kickoff Juniata marched 80 yards to paydirt, with Rideout scoring on a 5 yard jaunt. Each team scored again before the first half came to a close. Indiana scored on a recovered blocked punt caught in the endzone by an IUP defender. Juniata then tied the score on a 34-yard pass play to Allen Lipstein. This was the first of two Lipstein touchdowns.

Much like the defense in the second half, the blue and gold offensive machine began to roll also. Led by quarterback Dave Wichrowski, the Indians engineered drives of 60 and 80 yards in the third period. It was Lipstein again in this quarter scoring this time on a 2-yard pass play putting Juniata ahead for the first time in the game. The next score will be talked about for years. Tight End Ed Flynn took the handoff from Wichrowski on the tight end reverse but much to Indiana's surprise Ed was looking to throw. He found Tom Gibboney all alone for six more points.

Rideout scored his second touchdown of the game on a 15-yard sweep and Nosal added a field goal to the Indian total. Indiana also scored in this period, but the game had already been put out of reach. Next week the Indians take on the Titans of Westminster away and will return at home the following week for their initial MAC contest against Albright.

VB Expects Good Season

by Marge Morgan

The Juniata College Women's Volleyball Club has begun practice in anticipation of its third season. Interest in the team seems very strong with about 25 girls, most of whom are freshmen, attending the practices three days a week. The club is again coached by JoAnne Reilly with Priscilla Grove and Marge Morgan acting as assistant coaches. A combination of returning upperclassmen and experienced and promising freshmen should develop into a strong team.

A very challenging schedule has been planned with the season opening at Susquehanna University next week.

The club is also planning two fund raising projects in an effort to raise enough money to play in the M.A.C. tournament. Shakers will be sold at the Homecoming and Parents' Day football games and a disco dance is being planned for sometime next month. Please support the club by coming to the dance, buying a shaker (or two, or three, or . . .), and coming to the games to cheer the team to victory!!!

JC Football beat Westminister 14-7!

Congratulations!

JC X-Country slaughtered Dickinson and Messiah 17-41-44

Congratulations!

Women's Hockey: Shaky But Promising

The girl's hockey team, although defeated 3-0, in their first scrimmage against Messiah, showed promise for the future. The team has many new freshmen players of outstanding ability. Marian Pagano and Shawn Hansen among the crew were AllState players last year; Lisa Masood and Marj Porter also have been exhibiting their hockey skills on the field. The score at the half was 1-0 and remained that way through almost the entire second half, until the last few minutes of the game when two additional goals were scored, one scored by a penalty flick.

Then last Friday, the girls travelled to Bucknell to gain the knowledge of what needs to be worked on at the next practice. Bucknell with their highly skilled stick work sent Juniata home with embarrassing defeats of 7-0 for the varsity and 5-0 for the junior varsity. Not too much can be said about that game. Claire Swavely and Nancy Osborne played well on varsity while Tate Brunner, Judy Gross, Sue Stapleton and Cheryl Kent were impressive on the junior varsity.

Juniata will next play Frostberg on September 22, at Frostberg.

"This is the Year for Juniata Lacrosse" Says Coach 'B'

After a few years of unsuccessful efforts to start a lacrosse team at Juniata, Asst. Prof. Andy Bargerstock of the Economics and Business Administration Department has arrived on campus this fall with high hopes of fielding the school's first crew of stickmen by spring.

Bargerstock's most recent lacrosse experience was as a player-coach at Allegheny College from 1973-75. He also played for the Pittsburgh Lacrosse Club for two years after his graduation from Muhlenberg College in Allentown.

Lacrosse is an ancient American Indian game played on a football-size field with similar speed, grace, and strategy as hockey.

All students, faculty, staff and area residents interested in participating in the program are encouraged to contact Andy Bargerstock, Box 625, Juniata College, Huntingdon, Pennsylvania 16652. No experience is necessary.

Boredom at Juniata College

by Barbara Frezza

After lumbering up the three flights of stairs to my room with about ten pounds of books in my arms, I had no doubts as to how I was going to spend the rest of the evening — or so I thought. The self-pity I felt toward having to devote still another evening to Ronald F. Brown and the wonders of hydrocarbon reactions suddenly vanished when one of the freshmen in the room next to mine let out an anguished wail. Anticipating a major catastrophe at best, I knocked her still further into the closet when I burst through the door. "What's the problem?" I asked, extending a hand so she could extricate herself from her laundry basket.

"This place is so boring that last night I dreamed I was choking to death on a Hall's Mentholyptus cough drop!"

A non-sequitur to be sure; but having had better fantasies than that about the food served in Ellis, I decided that something should be done.

I feel that I can safely assert that most of the students at Juniata College have a more than adequate amount of course work or are engaged in enough on-campus activities to keep us reasonably well-occupied. Even so, there will always be a person or persons who claim that they're bored to death because there's nothing to do at JC.

For those of you who suffer from this affliction but hate movies and music and can't help being apathetic toward clubs, organizations and studying, I have tried to compile a list of some not-so-new but different diversions to help see you through the JC "blahs." Although the list has been categorized for your convenience, don't feel that you can't participate in any of the activities mentioned because you're no really a bona fide member of a specific category. Feel free to feel free.

Freshmen and other persons who are new to the Juniata campus may want to kill some free time between classes by trying to count all of the numerous commemorative plaques on campus, (and maybe even read a few of them while you're at it.) When counting the plaques in the science building be sure to walk around with an appropriate dazed expression. You'd be amazed at the number of persons who'll ask you if you've just come from an organic chem or a p-chem class. Oh! If you count more than 247 plaques, please let me know.

Those of you who are involved in body contact sports or who just prefer moderate exercise less than once each week might want to try counting the accumulations of cuts, bruises, lacerations, etc., on your bodies. This is best accomplished while taking a shower, and should be loudly moaned about to friends, roommates, etc., at a later point in time.

Math and business majors may wish to try their hands at playing "bookie," the odds for success have never been better. Baseball season is on the wane, but football and basketball season will both be coming on strong. If you're tired of the conventional game results, why not try setting odds or stakes for spades, chess, backgammon, election returns, etc.

Poli-sci majors, pre-law students and budding social science workers can get together to talk about the generally lousy state the world is in, and how it can be remedied in 30 days or less if only . . . Neatness and originality will be taken into consideration. Persons in this category may also wish to try putting together a platform for a fourth political party-replete with candidates for the Presidency and vice-presidency.

Are you analitically inclined? If so, don't just complain about the food at Ellis! Examine it in a biology or chemistry lab course. What is it? Is it alive? By what processes can a Tote pizza be synthesized? What characteristics, if any, do Jell-O and paraffin have in common?

Do you lust for recognition and power? If so, run for the Presidency on the fourth-party ticket the poli-sci majors are setting up. Not quite that desperate? Then the key to your mail box may be just the ticket you've been looking for.

Thanks to the rules and regulations of the U.S. Postal Service, a mere flick of the wrist will enable you to perform the same executive decisions as the president of any large corporation — or even Gerry Ford! Only you can decide which bills are to be passed-on to your parents, which junk mail you want to even bother looking at and which mail is to be vetoed altogether.

Still can't think of anything to do? Have you looked for any four-leaf clovers lately? Tried counting the number of people coming out of Ellis to see if it equals the number that go in at meal times? Did you examine the mold on the shower curtains? Tried repainting your room? HAVE YOU SUBMITTED AN ARTICLE TO "THE JUNIATIAN"? If you're still at a loss for something to do at JC, the only thing I can suggest is to grit your teeth, buff your car or your suitcase to a high sheen and pray that Friday gets here — FAST.

taxes from those registering in this district according to Smith. This type of "poll tax" is illegal.

Smith hopes that enough students will register in Huntingdon to have Juniata's voice heard on issues. One issue Smith sighted was the discussion of turning 17th street in front of Shoemaker Gallery into a humanities hall. This action would have to be approved by the city.

Vice-President George Trapp has met with the mayor of Huntingdon to discuss the community-college relationship, said Smith. "Huntingdon is not that big. A block of say 800 votes is a pretty large block...they'll start to listen to us."

President Smith then turned to his own political organization. There had been reports of bickering within Student Government itself. Smith reflected on the last meeting, "We got into some things we shouldn't have — that should have been done in committees. From now on, we're going to make sure (that work) is done."

However, Smith was quick to add that "Arguing is the only way you're going to get anything done." Someone has to play the "devil's advocate" so that both sides of an issue can be brought out.

He then sighted some important constitutional changes that had been made. Committee structure was changed due to some organizational problems. Procedures at meetings, and dorm government were two other reforms.

President Brain Smith wished to remind students that "Student Government is just sixteen people, and they cannot possibly do all (the) work — and be effective.

The Good Ole Days

A most timely statement from the Juniatian, October 26, 1938.

Six weeks have passed since we first entered the portals of Juniata College for the current school year. Six weeks — a comparatively short but sufficient period of time to permit us to do some introspection and to determine which way our "sails are set."

"Just listen to this —," said a freshman, reading a letter from her girl-friend. "I can tell by your letters that you are changing." Change — the one word which, perhaps better than all others, is the proper connotation for the activities of a college student. It is as one of the professors said to his class the other day, "If you were to meet your freshman self, you would be ashamed to introduce him to your friends."

Students cannot escape the reality — there has to be a change. An individual doesn't adapt himself to a new environment without making some change. Such a change can mean the choice of only two alternatives — either amelioration or degradation. It hardly seems possible that anyone could imply that an individual could spend four years in college and be the worse for it, but it is true. A student who attends classes only because he feels that it is compulsory, performs the minimum requisites, and spends his time carelessly, is certainly not the type of student one can classify as deserving or worthwhile. Having been released from parental restraint, he has failed to make the most of the individual virtues of energy, prudence, and self-control. Education is vitally important — a fact no one would hesitate to admit, but there is no educational institution existing with its only aim in instruction. Life is something more than the knowledge one reads in text books.

How trite it is to say that the four years of college are the best years in a person's life, but reflection tells us that it is so. The opportunities are here. The student must develop them.

Yes, change is inevitable, it simply has to come. Nothing in life gives the same satisfaction as the harmonious development of an individual. The humanist has something when he says that the ideal life is characterized by moderation, independence of mind, preference for higher pleasures, and harmonious development of capacities. Add to this, belief in a higher Being, and you have the basis for worthwhile change.

WJC — A New Image

This year is a year of changes for WJC. By January we should see our new FM facility going strong. It has been only through the diligent and persistent hard work of Dave Holl, station manager, and many others, that this project has just about reached its final stages. We will soon be able to hear the voice of Juniata College in all our dorms and FM car radios, with excellent quality.

There are other changes for WJC, as well. The station itself is being remodeled and will have the appearance of a professional station. Disc jockeys now rely solely on the records in the station and are not allowed to bring their own. The record library has increased significantly, so as to make this possible. "Tree," Program Director, has encouraged all the DJs to be innovative and develop different types of shows. Feature shows and interviews with well known groups are a reality this year.

The general attitude to the people at WJC seems to be toward pleasing their audience through a sense of true professionalism and serious work. Nevertheless, everyone has a really good time and is able to enjoy the experiences they encounter at the radio station.

Positions are still open at WJC in areas such as sales, advertising, news and engineering. If you are interested in becoming part of WJC, just drop them a line or stop by the station. So listen to the "Music People" and stay tuned to WJC . . .

Volunteers Needed

by Michele Fistek

Most of us have passed the Crawford Apartments on our way downtown, perhaps calling it the "Poverty Palace" or finding ourselves hastening our pace in apprehension. Well, last spring I began working with 4-H at the apartments. I worked with girls between seven and seventeen, trying to teach them to cook. It was a rewarding and worthwhile experience.

These kids need someone to care. They are good kids when given the chance. The conditions they live under would probably shock most of us.

I need a few guys to coordinate a 4-H program to work with the boys at Crawford. You don't need any experience, and it only takes a couple of hours a week. If you are willing to help these kids and the community at large, please call me, Michelle at 643-0913 or write me a note, Box 1714. Thanks for caring.

J.C. Mountain Day!

Mountain day, a long standing tradition at Juniata College, is being held this year on October 6th, at Greenwood Furnace State Park. A rain date has been set for the 13th.

For those who haven't heard, Mountain day is an opportunity for students and faculty to get together for a day of relaxation and entertainment. There are no classes scheduled for the day, and the campus will be closed. Come and see, if the faculty can scrap upe up enough energy to match our Senior class in the Senior-Faculty football game. Which couple will yoke up the egg throwing contest. Come and see if the mud is as thick as Modes in the class tug-o-war. There will also be a number of volleyball games.

Food Services will be serving the noon meal at the park, They will not be serving lunch anywhere else on campus. The evening meal will be served on campus in the normal manner. Unfortunately, no alcohol will be permitted in the park. For those who need rides, transportation will be provided by the school. Time schedules will be posted at a later date. This year, we, at Juniata would like to see everyone at Greenwood Furnace on Mountain Day.

1967-77 Artist Series Opens

by Michelle Fister

We will have a unique and interesting Artist Series opening when the Freiburg Baroque Soloists arrive on Tuesday, Oct. 5, at 8:15. (standard Juniata time)

The Soloists will present a program of the music of J.S. Bach and his sons. The works of the talented Bach family will be performed on instruments that are authentically representative of the Baroque period. They include a harpsichord, viola da gamba, the violoncello, the violin, the oboe, and the flute, all instruments which were in high fashion at that time.

The Freiburg ensemble was formed in 1964 and had its first American tour last year and was hailed as "Remarkable" by the Philadelphia Inquirer, and "Delightful" by The Miami Herald and The Cleveland Plain Dealer.

If you are planning on taking "The Baroque Era" HEH, this would be an excellent opportunity to hear some Baroque music before you take the course. If you have taken "Baroque", this would be an interesting review.

These cultural experiences should be taken advantage of while here at Juniata. College should give you a broad range of experiences. These are free and well done. Try it!

Remember to get your tickets for this Artists Series and the others before September 30!

Roth And His Dulcimer Are Hit

by Michelle Fistels

Not quite knowing what to expect, my roommate, another friend and I dutifully trotted up to the Jallroom to hear Kevin Roth and his Mountain Dulcimer on Friday night. By the end of the first song we were captivated and enchanted.

You might ask - what is a Mountain Dulcimer? It originated in Appalachia, and is not a true dulcimer but a kind of zither. It is a flat soundbox, in an oblong or tapezois shape, with three to eight strings running across it. (Kevin carries his in a rifle case, creating some interesting situations!) It is played by placing it across the lap, plucking and strumming the strings with the right hand while stopping them with the left. The sound can be mellow like the guitar or twangy like the banjo or even balalaika-ish.

Kevin Roth is one of the best Mountain Dulcimer players in the country. He is innovative, even creating an electric dulcimer! By his performance I can certainly attest that Kevin is fantastic. He has a quiet, mellow voice that is easy to listen to. Along with the dulcimer he also accompanied himself on the piano. His selections included some of his own music, some jazz, an instrumental of the old Beatles' song, "Norwegian Wood", fold standards by Judy Collins, Peter, Paul and Mary and some humorous folk songs. His program was varied and interesting, the music didn't start to sound alike as folk is sometimes prone to do.

Kevin has an easy, comfortable style. He is totally confident as soon as he begins to play. He added anecdotes and jokes as he went along, creating an evening that went all too quickly.

Kevin began performing when he was thirteen and has developed into a diversified artist, all of nineteen years of age. He has two recordings and another one to be released soon. Ilis first, "Kevin Roth Sings and Plays Dulcimer" is folk oriented and his second, "The Other Side of the Mountain", as pointed out by the title, takes the dulcimer out of the folk area into the more commercial, rock area.

I would also like to compliment Smitty and his Coffee House Committee for doing such an excellent job on this and the first coffee house. They have presented talented people and have gotten things going at an amazing speed for Juniata, whose usual social events don't begin until around Thanksgiving!

"A Rumble on Campus"

by Elaine Joyce

There's a rumble on campus. The sounds of discontented students have reached my ears. What's the problem? It appears that many students are dissatisfied with the admission fees Center Board is charging for its events. Fifty cents for a coffeehouse? Ridiculous! Last year they were free!! What has happened to the quarter and fifty cent movies of last year? Bring back the cheap, and free, old days. Alas, one cannot relive the past, and this year is no exception.

The primary purpose of this article is to explain how Center Board's budget operates. It is my hope that our rationale for the admission fees will be understood once Center Board's budget is understood.

Center Board, like any organization, must operate within the limits of a budget. Each committee is allotted a set amount of money per year. From this set amount, the individual committees program their events. Center Board's budget is approximately $20,000. for the academic year. A budget breakdown for each committee is as follows:

Concert Committee: $6000.
Films Committee: $3000.
Coffeehouse and Dance Committee: $2320.
Special Events Committee: $1450.
Recreation Committee: $1410.
Fine Arts Committee: $4060.
Publicity/Promotion: $50.

The school allocates Center Board $9725. towards the budget. The Board must supply the remaining $10,000. through its revenues. Areas where the Board receives revenues are through rental of equipment, commissions and admission fees to events.

Not all the committees can charge admission fees. Those committees who are able to charge for their events are Coffeehouse and Dance Com-

Juniata Has Teacher of TM Program

Andrew S. Bargerstock, Assistant Professor of Economics and Business Administration and teacher of the Transcendental Meditation program as taught by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, will hold advanced lectures for meditators in the Faculty Lounge, Ellis Hall, every Sunday evening at 7:00 pm starting September 26th. All students who have taken advantage of the EM program are encouraged to attend.

Those wishing to learn more about this simple, practical technique for utilizing more of our inherent abilities (and thereby elevating life to high levels of achievement and enjoyment) may contact Andy in his office at 419 Good llall or via campus box 625 or call his home at 643-6503. A course of instruction will be offered by him at least once every term. Watch the Juniatian for announcements of introductory lectures.

Grass Roots

This year a new concept is being instituted: at-random journalism! In the future the author of this column could be you! Every week we will select, at random, a name from the official student roster. The person belonging to that name will be expected to submit an article for the next week's paper on any subject he wishes. Our goal?? To try to generate greater interest in "The Juniatian" and at the same time to create a more interesting paper by printing a wide cross-selection of articles. This concept was begun in 1971 and seemed to be successful. For some reason it was later discontinued. It is now being re-instituted with the hope that you, the student body, will keep it going. It's up to you. Your ideas are always welcome.

Fall is a Natural

Fall is a wonderful trip.
A natural escape from all the bummers of the world.
All the nice colors, so symbolic of images beyond.
A colossal function of your own design.

Get into the falling colors, hitting the earth, creating a glossy reflection while they combined efforts naturally to blow your senses.

A deep breath of air will to bring you back to reality,
if your are coming.

But why come back when what is there is not here.
Nice colors are there; only black and white are here.
Absorb all you can, while you can, if you can, because yesterday might be gone the next day of the year.

So enjoy all the naturals of all while there here.

mittee Concert Committee and Films Committee. These three committees are important sources of revenue for the Board's budget.

Charging for a coffeehouse is not an unusual occurrance on many college campuses. Prices for entertainers to perform at coffeehouses have risen tremendously. Mark Smith has tried very hard to provide a "coffeehouse" atmosphere in the Ellis Ballroom. Tables, lights and refreshments are available for the Students' comforts. To continue providing this form of entertainment, it is necessary to charge.

The biggest complaint I've heard from students is the admission price for films. Many feel that $1.50 or $1.00 is too high, especially the upperclassmen who remember paying 25¢ or 50¢ for films last year. If you look realistically at the films being offered this year, you will discover that films are offered three times a week. The Plato's Cave Film Series is offering musical and science-fiction movies on Mondays and Fridays. Tuesday nights the films committee shows a variety of film styles. Films are expensive. Admission fees must be realistic in order to continue showing films. If a film costs $300, films committee cannot charge 50¢ or 25¢ admission and expect to cover their costs.

Center Board is trying to provide a variety of programmed events and stay within our budget. This can be done if we get student support. We have $10,000 to raise through revenues. Continual support of Center Board events-now-guarantees Center Board programming for both Winter and Spring Terms.

PRO-CON:

East House Living

by G. Moellers

To begin with, I am not writing this article to make any decisions for anyone as to whether or not living in East Houses is for them. I am trying to put together some of the feelings and thoughts that are discussed by students when kicking around the possibility of moving to the East Houses.

East House Complex is a living style that is unique to the rest of campus living, with a majority of the apartments designed to accommodate eight people. Four bedrooms of two to a room, one living room and one bathroom. There are also a few apartments known as Quads, that accommodate four persons, with a livingroom and bathroom.

A majority of the upperclassmen on campus have chosen this mode of living for one reason or another, but there are some upper-classmen scattered about on the other end of campus for various reasons of their own.

Many of the residents of East Houses picked that style of living because of the home-like atmosphere, what with the bathroom right there, a living room to entertain company with, and the added options of having a television and telephone in the lounge area. Another big plus that might be considered is a refrigerator; many apartments have a refrigerator that is normally shared between the apartment-mates.

With these types of reasons piled together, and a good possibility that many of your friends are living there, the choice of living in East Houses is narrowed to a point where it is considered to be an "elite" style of living.

On the other side of the coin, there are some reasons for not wanting to live in the East House Complex. Many people say that its too far to be walking, and if your classes happen to be spread out during the course of the day, its an inconvience to be walking back and forth to your room. And then, once you get there, you have seven other people to contend with, instead on one. If you want to study and the others want to make a lot of noise, in most cases, you'll have to go somewhere else, or if you feel like making some noise, and the others do not then its not really right for you to be bothering them.

And the expense of living in East Houses could be somewhat greater. Normally everyone chips in for the cable to the television, the cost of the telephone, and the expense of buying a refrigerator, and once you have that, you might as well keep it stocked. And it all adds up on the expense account.

Also there is more furniture to be responsible for. You can not really have water battles because of possible damage to the rug and living-room pieces. Another factor to be checked out is the idea that you get to know a more varied percentage of the J.C. population in a dorm. In East Houses most of the people want to live there and at least have that in common, besides the fact that they are all at least Sophomores, and mostly Juniors and Seniors.

Over all you would have to be able to get along with six more people (in addition to your roommate), and adjust yourself to that different way of living; after all, they are not your family.

Then there is the situation of living in East Housee and having to know some people living in the dorms to find out what is happening at that end of campus, but also along these lines is the fact that someone living in the dorms must know some-one in East Homes to know what is going on in that area.

All in all, it is up to the individual, if he/she likes what (or who) East Houses has to offer, they'll probably choose to live there, but if they think that it is more desirable or pleasing to live in a dorm life situation, they'll opt. for that living style.

Letter to the Editor

by Dave Brown

Just where is Juniata? This question appeared in the view book that was published by the admissions office as a supplement to the catalogue. It might very well be a question that you have no doubt had to answer numerous times when asked where you go to school.

The answer is usually Huntingdon, and the next thing you hear is, well where is that? Now you are caught in a somewhat perplexing situation. How exactly do you explain to someone that you are going to school in the middle of nowhere. If the person you are talking to is at all knowledgeable about the geography of Pennsylvania, you can get him in the general area by saying Juniata is thirty two miles south of Penn State. If he needs something more specific, you are in a bad way. But, location is not our topic, Huntingdon is, and we hope to discuss Huntingdon and Huntingdonians.

Another quip which appeared in the admissions view book was, "I like the town — not because there's so much to do, but because you can walk down the street at night and not have to worry, you can have eye contact with people and not be afraid."

It is obvious from the start that whoever made this quote was not enrolled at Juniata at the time or else they live in Meyers or Beeghley library from nine in the morning until twelve midnight and then retire.

The next tip we have about the person who's being quoted is the portion about all that there is to do in Huntingdon. I've been here three years and besides what is offered on campus, I really haven't run across too much in downtown Huntingdon.

Finally, we come to the most interesting comment, about the fact that you don't have to worry about going downtown at night and making eye contact with those you don't know. Fortunately, this statement is relatively true. You don't have to worry about going downtown at night or making eye contact with anyone, if you dare. Have you ever made eye contact with a Huntingdonian? It's not the most exhilerating experience you're likely to have in your life, but it is one experience that you will remember. Because, you only do it once and from that point on, you don't care if you make eye contact with anyone in this town for the rest of your life.

One positive point that Huntingdon has now, is MacDonald's, and remember, as the admissions view book says, "I find Huntingdon very receptive for those who give, not just take. It's small and offers accordingly."

Letter to the Editor

For the record, I want to clarity the alcohol policy as reported in the article on Student Government in the issue of September 23. It is true that college policy prohibits the expenditure of college funds for the acquisition of alcohol. I and many others, including students, are concerned, however, that the effect of this is to insure that students do nothing at parties except consume alcoholic beverages.

There are several ways to try to improve this situation. One that Center Board, Student Government, and Student Services have agreed to try once on a trial basis is to move a Coffeehouse to one of the dormitory lounges where there is also a party taking place in order to create a more responsible atmosphere. It must be stressed that there presently is approval to do this only once, as a trial. If the trial does not work satisfactorily, then such coordination will not be permitted subsequently.

I have every hope and belief that by working together we can make such occasions successful. However, the impression that a new policy has been approved permitting events of this kind is incorrect. Our intent is to move carefully to insure, before the policy is changed, that students will behave responsibly in such a setting.

Sincerely,
Donald T. Hartman
Dean of Student Services

Getting to Know You

by Elizabeth Borton
Thecla Coppolo
Sandra Taylor

"I still got a long way to go - but I'm gonna get there."

We would like to introduce you to Celestine Carol Denise Ray - better known as Celeste. She is from Philadelphia and is twenty-five years old. She is a Political Science major who transferred here from Shaw University, in Raliegh NIorth Carolina. She graduated from Simon Gratz High School, which is an all black school in North Philly, in '68. "I'm the only kid (in the family) to go to all black schools." After high school she went to work in the Institute for Scientific Information, where she stayed for five years. Beginning as a clerk-typist she worked her way up the ladder to a night supervisor job, which she held for three weeks. Because of her age, the women under her protested and complained saying, "I was too young to be over all those women." She was moved to another position in the company as a result.

She went to Shaw University for two years, then left to work as a disciplinarian at Simon Gratz. Through Dr. Moselle McKay, who was Celeste's high school guidance counselor and personal friend, she discovered Juniata. Celeste came here without ever seeing the school. She gets into the country, and it's quiet, "slowing moving" pace. "I'm the first kid to go to college in the family - it's a new thing. I was just lucky to get enough money."

Celeste has been singing and dancing all her life. She went to the Peter Kadell Dance School in Philly, and is especially into interpretive modern dance. "I love to dance - I've been a modern dance teacher." Celeste also loves to sing - anything from Gershwin to gospel. "I love to sing - "I've always been into music . . . my roommate, Chris, and I have had singing groups."

Celeste would like to get her voice back in training again and return to dance after she graduates from college. "I wanna get into people more. To make myself feel good on the inside I'd like to get back into music and dancing."

Celeste's mother has been somewhat of a guiding influence on her life. "Mom has always been a sister to me - and not a mother. I knew she was my mother but she was more like my sister in every way." After graduating, Celeste's most important ambition is to repay her mother for all she has done for her. "I'm hoping I'll be able to do something for her before myself . . . I look forward to doing the best for them." (Her mother and sister)

For Celeste, an ideal job involves working with kids. While working in her high school, she helped parents to realize their responsibilities to their children, and also helped them to communicate with them. "I kinda dug communicating with the kid's parents. I graduated from the school and I knew what was happening." She would like to get into some form of counseling work, whether it be criminal counseling, or working in a detention center. She also toys with the idea of returning to Simon Gratz to work. "I don't want to be a teacher - I want to be like a counselor - helping them along with their problems. I'd like to do something that puts me right in front of the person where I can reach out my hand and touch them."

The social atmosphere of Juniata is not very appealing to Celeste. She attributes the small number of black students to the people in the Admissions Office who don't recruit prospective students in the black areas. As the the black students who have come here, Celeste says, "they're not exactly token blacks, but they're somewhat different. All-in-all I do believe that they should have more blacks come here because it's a very good school." She feels that there should be some blacks on the staff, and also believes that other minorities and cultures should be represented not only in the staff, but in the student body. She views the campus as "not really open". There are "no women's organizations - women don't have a chance except to go to their classes - the males don't give them a chance - they're too touch and go. There should be a lot more communication between a woman and a man." As for the curriculum, Celeste finds it hard to understand why courses such as M odes and VCU's are emphasized to the extent that they take priority over other courses pertaining to the individual's major. "They're (V-CU's) only value - centered to the teacher."

Celeste's philosophy in life is one of peace and compassion. She would rather "do unto others", than wait for someone to come to her. "I'm not always successful - but I'm human. I sort of live day by day. I don't know exactly what might come my way. I'm just a happy-go-lucky person. I just try to look for the best in people, and that's what I usually get in return."

Happiness to Celeste can be found in adopting children, or taking in foster children. "N ot necessarily do I want to be married, I just want to have a child and be happy. I'm happy a lot of times within myself. I kinda live off life - I love walking into the darkness and looking at the stars. I don't really think that I have a personal life. My life is free to anyone who wants to know it."

We admire Celeste not only because she remembers where she came from, but also because she will one day return to the inner-city to help those she left behind. When she says, "I like being Celeste", we couldn't agree with her more.

Certainly n undisputed classic in the randtradition of science fiction, Var of the Worlds was first resented to the public in the orm of the now-infamous Orson Velles broadcast that sent most mericans flying down to their asements to dig air raid shelters and this was before Mc-arthyism even). How can the itifully inept Earthlings wipe ut, chastise, and generally arass these trespassers into howing off? Admission is only 1.00 to find out how to defend yourself when the Martians send us their Viking I.

As for the Monday night blahs, you can throw them away at the door with a trip back into the Thirties with Fred and Ginger. This Monday Oct. 4, Plato's Cave is proud to present the very first Rogers/Astaire duet ever filmed, and the first of a series of three which we will be screening this term at the Cave. Flying Down to Rio, actually "starring" Gene Raymond and Dolores del Rio, introduced a new style of musical, the Astaire style: the passive/aggressive eclat, a nonchalant exhibition of the smoothest kind of sophistication on two feet. Admission to the Very Best of the Thirties is $1.00: a mere trifle to watch history being made on the dancefloor and The American Screen.

Team Competes Girl's X-Country

Four of Juniata's women runners participated in the meets. Lia Fong, Teddy Lyras, Janet Kelso, and Carol Braceland (finishing in that order) all completed the rough 5.6 mile course. In a seperate girl's meet competing against two St. Francis girls, one of whom ran an excellent time and captured first place.

This year there are nine girls out for the team; due to injuries and other problems they were not all able to compete on Saturday. It is a young but quickly developing and enthusiastic team.

This week they will be preparing themselves for Saturday's meet against Gettysburg. All of the girls are Saturday's meet against Gettysburg. All of the girls are gettin used to the hill-infested area around Juniata College, a thing which is not too easy to do.

Congratulations, and good luck on Saturday.

Cross Country Tea
Wins a Triple Mee

by Jerry Keenan

Juniata's Cross Country tea won both of its meets against S Francis and Albright last Satu day, September 25.

Freshman Marty O'Lea came in first with a near reco breaking time of 32 minutes a 31 seconds. Other Junia runners who placed were sen Dave Parker in fifth plac freshmen Jim Foster and B Butler in ninth and tenth plac respectively, and sophomore Casey Kohler and Mike Bodley thirteenth and fourteenth place Bodley came in one second ahe of St. Francis' last scori runner, causing Juniata to w that meet by just one point. the Albright meet Juniata had broader eleven point victory.

Coach Meditch stated that h was pleased with the team's pe formance and looks forward next week's meet with Ge tysburg as a good test. He sa that he felt that Juniata runners scoring together in good team effort helped to pu the victory off.

Women's Field Hockey

by Sue Shapleton

This past week the Juniata women's field hockey team traveled to Frostburg Maryland to face an expectedly rough opponent, the Frostburg State College Bobkittens.

After a short week of hard practice the girls appeared on the field ready to play a new type of game after they suffered the embarrassing defeat from Bucknell. The varsity played a 4 - 4 - 2 game. What this entails is having only four players on the forward line thus allowing a wing to drop back to a half-back position to give added strength on the defense and a more forceful move forward. This strategy seemed to work, for our girls controlled the ball better and piled up more attacking time.

The first half fell into Frostburg's favor as they led scorewise at the half, 2-0. Juniata's varsity team did not give up as Alison Reeves scored J. C.'s only point on an admirable try at a comeback. The score remained at 2-1 with our defense playing an excellent game to the end.

The Junior Varsity also suffered their second defeat that day, too. They fell behind to Frostburg 4-0. The halfbacks played very aggressively throughout and much credit should be given to them. Many of the girls are first attempters at the sport and are learning the game well from some tough competition. Experience will be a major point in helping these girls turn their game around. In either case, good luck to both teams for a successful season.

How to Stay in College

From the Juniatian, August 1961.

1. Look alert. Take notes eagerly. If you look at your watch, don't stare at it unbelievingly and shake it.

2. Bring the professor newspaper clippings dealing with his subject. Demonstrate fiery interest and give him items to mention to the class. If you can't find clippings dealing with his subject, bring any clippings at random. He thinks everything deals with his subject.

3. Nod frequently and murmur, "How true". To you, this seems exaggerated. To him, it's quite objective.

4. Laugh at his jokes. You can tell, if he looks up from his notes and smiles expectantly, that he has told a joke.

5. Ask for outside reading. You don't have to read it. Just ask.

6. Sit in front, near him. (Applies only if you intend to stay awake.) If you're going to all the trouble of making a good impression, you might as well let him know who you are, especially in a large class.

7. Be sure the book you read during the lecture looks like a book from the course. If you do math in Psychology class and vice versa, match the books for size and color.

8. Ask any questions you think he can answer. Conversely, avoid announcing that you have found the answer to a question he couldn't answer, and in your younger brother's second grade reader, at that.

9. If you must sleep, arrange to be called by a friend at the end of the hour. It creates an unfavorable impression if the rest of the class has left and you sit there alone, dozing.

As to whether or not you want to do some work, in addition to all this, well, it's controversial and up to the individual.

Campaign Tactics Lead to Frosh Victories

The newly elected freshmen senators are Tod Kulp, Judy Gross and Doug Wood.

After many hard days of campaigning, nine freshmen senatorial candidates looked forward to the September 28th election. The results showed Judi Gross elected by a comfortable margin, and Doug Wood and Todd Kulp elected with a one vote difference between them. About forty-six per cent of the Freshman class voted.

Senator Gross used a massive poster campaign in Ellis Hall to attract voters. Although knowing little about the candidate, voters remembered the name from the aggressive campaign put forth by Judi.

Senators Wood and Kulp both preferred to use a grassroots approach by knocking on doors and introducing themselves to prospective voters. They were strongly advised, however, to use posters. Doug centered this added campaign feature in the dorms, while Todd took advantage of Ellis.

What encouraged the three to run for the Senate? Both Doug and Judi were involved in Student Government at their high schools. Doug particularly enjoyed the honor of being President of Student Government in his school, Deer Lakes.

Todd ran for the Senate because he "likes making decisions." Senator Kulp is involved in economics, with a great interest in the stock market. If his decisions in Student Government are made as well as those in the stock market, Juniata students will be well represented.

Not surprisingly, Todd is interested in working on the Budget and Management Committee or student-faculty relations, while Doug would like to get involved in the upcoming elections. Judi is unsure at this time. None have yet been assigned to committees.

Both Doug Wood and Todd Kulp plan to go on WJC with other members of the Student Government to speak to the students. Judi has not yet made similar plans.

The Freshman class can now feel officially represented in Student Government. Senators Gross, Wood and Kulp are looking forward to an enthusiastic participation in the coming years of Juniata's Student Government.

Foreign Study Program Starts

By JERRY KEENAN

Brethren Colleges Abroad, Juniata's program for study abroad, is moving into its fourteenth year. The program, with Professor George Dolnikowski as co-ordinator, offers Juniata students and students from other Brethren colleges a year of study in Strasbourg, France; Marburg, Germany; and Barcelona, Spain.

As BCA co-ordinator for Juniata, Prof. Dolnikowski is placed in charge of recruiting and accepting those students who will participate in the program. Prof. Dolnikowski was BCA coordinator in Marburg, Germany from 1970 until 1972, and has been the coordinator at Juniata since his return to the United States. He feels that the XCA program is a successful one in view of the demise of other similar programs. Ours "still exists and is in good shape."

BCA offers the student many opportunities. First, and most important, is that in studying abroad the student is learning about the language and culture on a first hand basis, which is the best way to learn. Also, the student and the people of the country involved benefit through an improved understanding of one another.

Economically, the student can benefit also. It is cheaper to go abroad for a year, about $3,800, as opposed to $4,300 for a year at Juniata. In addition to this lower cost, any financial aid or scholarships that the student is receiving, whether it be national, state, or local, is applicable to his tuition abroad.

Students who go abroad will earn at least the same, if not more, credits than if they stay here. The maximum amounts of credit abroad is thirty-eight semester hours, which translates to almost eleven units at Juniata.

Actual application for the program should be made during the sophomore year before January. The absolute deadline is February 15, but the earlier the application the better. All candidates must have an average of "B" or better, they must have a generally outstanding academic ability.

Anyone interested in the BCA program should contact Prof. Dolnikowski in his office (425 Founders). His office hours are Monday through Thursday from 10 until 12.

Sharpen Your Pencils

KVASIR, Juniata's literary magazine, will be getting off the ground soon. It desperately needs all sorts of poems, short stories, drawings and pictures for this 1976-77 year. The deadline for all students work done will be February 1.

Finished written work will be accepted by the editor-in-chief, Bess Gongiewski, care of box 1702. So sharpen up your pencils and make this the best issue of KVASIR ever!

Features at WJC

By KATHY JACOBS

Did you ever walk into Ellis on a Sunday and wonder if it was really WJC you were hearing? Every Sunday for the rest of the year, Chris Fowler presents classical music from noon to three. Again this year we will be able to enjoy classical music from the Baroque Era to modern times. Chris will have an emphasis in the 29th century.

Grass Roots

She asked me what I was gonna write it on and I replied that I didn't know. She suggested dead flies and I gave no response. What a stupid idea! Who would write about dead flies for a college newspaper. But as I sit on this hard seated chair (I don't need a pillow because I have a fat rearend), I think maybe dead flies aren't all that bad. And besides, I've only got a ½ hour before the deadline . . .

I never met a dead fly that I didn't like (or so the saying goes). Actually I don't really have an opinion on flies so if they want to be dead, it's O.K. by me. Maybe they don't say that much but sometimes people don't either (what a touchy story.) So anyway, if you pass a dead fly and he doesn't say anything, don't get ticked off. Maybe he's listening to the silence or squelching a burp.

Social Policy on Trial this Weekend

Hi, I am Mark Smith, this year's Coffeehouse-Dance Committee chairman of Center Board. This year's coffeehouses and dances will be different from those of last year. If you have attended coffeehouses this year you might have noticed something different. If you haven't you're missing a very enjoyable evening. To begin with, they are in the ballroom instead of Tote. This cuts down on most of the noise. It also allows for a better atmosphere.

There will be a charge of fifty cents for coffeehouses this year. There are many reasons for this admission fee. The major one is to get excellent quality in entertainment for the students. Also pretzels and potato chips are being served at coffeehouses, and don't forget the candlelight to add the final touch to the atmosphere.

There is a "New" for Juniata this year. Permission has been given to have a trial coffeehouse in which beer and birchbeer will be served. Let me explain this in greater detail. Center Board will not be using any of its alloted money to purchase alcoholic beverages. They will be held in Tussey-Terrace lounge. Another "party" will supply the beer to be served by a waiter or waitress. No one will be permitted to walk up and get his or her own drink. Tickets will be distributed at the door for one general admission charge. A limited number of drinks will be served to each person. Remember, this is not a beer blast. If you want to stand next to a keg all night don't bother coming. Any inappropriate behavior will not be tolerated. This type of coffeehouse will give the student a chance to socialize with friends over a few beers while enjoying the entertainment. The first coffeehouse of this type will be tomorrow, October 8, at 9:00 pm, featuring "Laurel." This is a trial coffeehouse granted to us.

Now that I have mentioned some new ideas in Coffeehouses, let me say something about dances. This year we are planning disco — dances throughout the year. We are also looking forward to a square dance, 50's dance, and a good old sock hop.

From Bach to Rock

We extend a full welcome to the freshmen just beginning their higher education and to the upperclassmen continuing and/or finishing their education here at Juniata. In this column we will be presenting critical reviews of new releases in the realm of rock, rhythm and blues, and soul along with notices of upcoming musical events on campus (i.e., Centerboard dances and concerts, Artist Series presentations, etc.).

The summer rock scene was impregnated with many new releases, outstanding and otherwise. It would be impossible to review them all owing to space considerations, so we have chosen two of the more noteworthy albums to inaugurate this column.

Fly Like an Eagle by the Steve Miller Bank on Capitol records and tapes is an interesting mixture of numbers. It is an album which blends many different types of songs appealing to almost all interests and tastes. The title cut is a good medium middle-of-the-road beat number, with the outstanding quality being the excellent blend of organ and synthesizer to create a totally unique sound. The one bad spot in the album is perhaps the inspiration-lacking "Dance, Dance, Dance". This one is just too countrified to enter the context of the other parts of the album. The other one sadly lacking, and not even Steve Miller in quality, is the noncontextual "You Send Me." The brightest spots of the album are "Take the Money and Run", which is typically Steve Miller vocal work providing flawless synthesis of all the instrumentation, and "Rock'n Me" which in our minds is nothing short of excellent, defying criticism. It is probably the pearl of the whole album. "The Window" exemplifies the ability of Steve Miller to create a piece which flows along smoothly, yet with a firm and resounding beat. The other unusual aspect of the album is the space music which is heard throughout the album beginning with "Space Intro." in a very subtle yet totally effective way. All in all this is one of Steve Miller's better efforts.

Another bright spot of the summer months was Aerosmith's release of Rocks on Columbia records and Tapes. The album is generally quite good, loud, heavy, and fast-paced with the exception of one cut, "Home Tonight". It is the only semiquiet slow paced number with a good melody; however, the tempo picks up to give a good fadeaway. The rest of the album is characteristically Aerosmith all the way! "Back in the Saddle" is definitely one to blast through your stereo as it possesses a heavy pounding quality, as does "Last Child" which is really belted out and complimented by excellent guitar work. "Nobody's Fault" is very reminiscent of Led Zeppelin in vocal quality despite the quiet start; once they get going, however . . . An excellent example of superb transitions within a single song is "Sick as a Dog". The harmonica arrangements in "Rats in the Cellar" are very resemblant of those of the J. Geils Band; otherwise the cut has a good fast beat with a heavy pulsating quality. The lackluster track comes in "Combination" when the vocal work sounds harsh as though it were out of key despite the superior instrumentation. All in all the songs are similar, blending well to give a loud, pounding, and heavy sound; very distinctly Aerosmith, or in other words a get-down partyin' LP!

Another of life's everyday mysteries unfold as students sit down to lunch . . .

By DAVE BROWN

It was a typical day, so much work to do, I didn't know where to start. I peered out the window and what did I see, rain, rain and more rain. Well, that means no outdoor activities this afternoon, so it's time to get ahead of the prof, on second thought maybe we'll try to catch up with the prof. But, that will hold, because it's three thirty in the afternoon and "Mighty Mouse" is on, then at four thirty "Batman" and then it's time to psyche up for dinner. Yes, you heard me correctly, I've got to tell myself that dinner will be good. That there is nutrition in mystery meat and eating a lot of starch is truly good for oneself.

Oh no, "Batman" is over, what now? I think I've got it together, time to walk to Sille Hall and have my daily adult requirement of something. What that something is, I'm as yet not quite sure. One nice thing about eating in Sille Hall, there are never any lines, you can just walk right in and sit down to a meal, or a similar facsimile thereof.

This evening, we're having "El Rancho's," the second part in a continuing series on how you can make hamburger sound like something different. Last evening, we were given the introduction to the series, "Salsbury Steak," and tomorrow it will be "Swedish Meatballs."

Sometimes I think I'm going to school in India and won't see meat until I go home to visit. Well, I've finished — what I could, now the question is, do I want more? Definitely not, so it's time to return to the dorm and wait until the hunger pangs set in and I travel to the local store for a soggy hoagie. Such is life for the young aspiring college student.

Letters to the Editor

When many students first set foot on Juniata's campus and begin to explore the Huntingdon area, they experience what could be termed "cultural shock." Compared to metropolitan areas such as Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, and even Harrisburg, Huntingdon could indeed be termed as a cultural wasteland — no Spectrum, no Three Rivers Stadium, no center for the performing arts, no enclosed malls, no Jack-In-The-Box or Gino's . . . none of the "accessibles" which have come to be an everyday part of many students' lifestyles. It is no wonder that, once the "countryside vacation" atmosphere fades, Huntingdon becomes a "mere way-station for Conrail" and Juniata College is located cynically as "nowhere."

Of course, one will realize that the initial mistake lies in comparing Huntingdon to a metropolitan area; such a comparison only shows what this area does not have. (A little common sense explains why.) Unfortunately, some students narrowly condemn the town and its people by their "lack of," and maintain this attitude for the duration of their stay at Juniata.

At this point, it would be my suggestion that these persons should be the ones who "live in Myers or Beeghly Library from nine in the morning until twelve midnight and then retire." They have, in effect, offered nothing worthwhile to this area or its residents, and, in my opinion, have not placed themselves in a position to demand anything from them.

Huntingdon is small, and it does offer accordingly — but we as short-term residents must be willing to look for what the town does have; and in light of the surrounding rural area it originally and primarily serves. Some of us do not; perhaps that is why they, like Mr. Brown, "really haven't run across too much in downtown Huntingdon." They just haven't learned how to look.

Finally, and perhaps most importantly, how you judge Huntingdon is how you judge its people. If you go into town with the metropolitan attitude that the area is lacking, then you are automatically going to assume its people are deprived, as well. You are going to miss the friendliness of a smile or the willingness to help (or the need for a friendly smile or help) in a person's face; you are going to be doing Huntingdonians an even greater injustice by judging all of them by a single experience of "making eye contact." (I am alarmed to consider what generalizations I would make about Juniata College students if I were a townsperson basing my judgment solely on "eye contact" with Mr. Brown's article.)

For those of you who feel as Mr. Brown seems to have indicated in his article, rejoice — all is not lost with MacDonald's and a Kentucky Fried Chicken under construction. Just remember one thing: don't look the persons behind the counter in the eye — they are probably "townies." — Dave Corman

Just who is Dave Brown? This question came up in the last issue of the Juniatian. It seems that Mr. Brown has a dislike for the townspeople of Huntingdon and a dissatisfaction with the town in general. Perhaps Dave would have been happier back at Indiana or better yet, the University of Alaska at Fairbanks.

Have you ever made eye contact with Dave Brown? It's not the most exhilarating experience of your life. I'm sure there are townspeople who would agree wholeheartedly.

Perhaps this town doesn't have as much to offer as some other college towns. However, there are some students that do not find the town objectionable and recognize that there are a good number of nice people living here. What we do have objections to are the harsh, unfair generalizations that Dave has made.

Getting to Know You

By: Elizabeth Borton
Thecia Coppolo
Sandra Taylor

"Everything's okay, and will be okay."

We would like to introduce you to Nguyen Thi Loan, her cousin Tran Minh Khuyen, and her brother Tran Tat Dat, who are Vietnamese students at Juniata. Loan is studying pre-med, with hopes of entering into a health profession. In Vietnam she went to college for six months. "I was studying to be an English teacher." Khuyen is twenty-seven and is studying accounting. He graduated from law school and was a practicing lawyer in Vietnam. Dat is twenty-three and spent three years in college studying economics. He is a business major at Juniata.

There are many differences between our culture and the Vietnamese culture to which all three have had to adjust to, sometimes with great difficulty. The English language represents the biggest barrier to them. Dat says, "Communication-language — it's a big difference." Loan and, Khuyen add, "We felt very lost — we couldn't communicate." The climate is also a change from the one they grew up in. As the coldest temperature is 70° and the warmest over 100° they never saw the snow they have come to love, until arriving at Juniata. In Vietnam, "You sweat all the time." Besides the language and climate, they have had to adapt to American food. They miss rice the most. The Vietnamese diet consists mainly of rice and vegetables. Loan says, "Most Vietnamese food is like the Chinese restaurants here . . . Food is completely different, but I'm getting used to it."

Loan and Khuyen escaped Vietnam just days before the Communists took over their country. They arrived in Indiantown Gap which is a refugee community in Eastern Pennsylvania. In order to leave there you must have a sponsor. A church in Mount Union sponsored them (and also sponsored Dat when he arrived from Guam last May). As Khuyen told us, "They just took us out of the camp and brought us to the college — we had no idea where we were going — they put us here."

They communicate with their families by mailing letters to France, where they have relatives and friends who also escaped from Vietnam. These people then mail their letters to Vietnam, as if Loan, Khuyen, and Dat were living in France. The Vietnamese government does not know they are here in America. "If we send letters directly to Vietnam it would be very harmful." It is not possible for their families to leave. "They couldn't get out." They all want to return but have no idea when they will be able to. Dat says, "Right now, we can't go back."

Their interests are varied and have had to be expanded in order to accommodate the American culture. Loan loves to embroider. Khuyen plays a mean game of ping-pong and is on an intramural soccer team. Khuyen also likes music, and dancing. "In America, they have two kinds of music — a rock and roll, and a classical — I like the classical. We had a lot of rock and roll bands in Vietnam . . . I like to dance, but not American dance." He likes French dancing; the tango, the cha-cha, and the waltz. Dat also enjoys ping-pong, and reading. "I like to read — that's the only way to learn English."

They are very happy with the people on campus. Khuyen feels, "the professors are really nice. Small college — everybody friendly." Loan adds, "I like students here — they're all friendly." Dat likes Juniata "because I had chance to be close with my sister . . . and my cousin. Everybody friendly to help — especially the professors."

One of the major hassles they must contend with is finding a place to stay during the summer and on term breaks. As Khuyen says, "We don't know where we live on term break or vacation — that's the problem. We have to find a place to live." If they are unfortunate enough not to find a temporary home, they stay at the Faculty Club. "If we don't have any places to go we just go there."

The people most responsible for Loan, Khuyen, and Dat's well-being are Dr. Cornelius Frijters and his wife, who have opened up not only their home to them, but more importantly, their hearts. Dr. Frijters has worked with them on their English and has helped them to deal with financial and other problems. "Right now everything depends upon Dr. Frijters. What he has done for us is much more than a sponsor. We would like to say that we are really grateful — deeply grateful, to Dr. Frijters and Mrs. 'Bonnie.'

Most of us are fortunate enough to have families that we can turn to for love and support, in times of need or despair. Just knowing they are only a phone call away is in itself, a source of comfort. When we hear Khuyen say, "We don't have a family here so we get lost . . . sometimes we have a spiritual crisis." we can only appreciate so much more, those people in our lives such as our parents, our brothers and our sisters, who we often mistakenly take for granted.

Red Cross Blood Drawing

Numerous accidents and disease are causing a drastic increase in the need for whole blood and blood derivatives. Last year the Red Cross Chapters in Western Pennsylvania provided over 60,000 units of blood, free of charge, for eligible area residents in hospitals throughout the continent. Several recent leukemia cases in the area have severely reduced the available supplies of blood.

In an effort to rebuild the dwindling supplies of blood, the Red Cross is sponsoring a joint Huntingdon-Juniata College blood drawing in the Ellis College Center Ballroom on Wednesday, October 13, from noon until 6:00 P.M. All students, faculty and staff are encouraged to take time out from the hectic Fall schedule to join townspeople in this program to "recycle life." If you are in good health, between the ages of 18 and 65, and weigh at least 110 pounds you may donate blood. If you are 17 years old you may donate with the written consent of your parent or legal guardian.

Please stop at the College Center Information Desk prior to Wednesday, October 13, to sign up for an appointment or drop in any time from noon until 6:00 PM on tht date and give so that others may live.

Anyone interested in helping with the blood drawing please contact Wayne Justham or leave your name at the College Center Information Desk.

Dorm Program Started

At a Student Government meeting held September 28th, it was decided that Dorm Visitation by Senators would start this week. Students will be able to voice complaints and suggestions directly to Senators. This is an effort of Student Government to directly hear problems from students.

Student Government was pleased with the voter registration drive. They estimated that they had registered between 250-280 students. There are now approximately 400 students from Juniata registered in Huntingdon.

Two new proposals were made at the meeting. The first was to have the color television in the basement of Ellis Hall fixed and moved to the lounge across from Totem Inn. The second proposal was to ask Seniors to sign over their fifty dollars refunded from their room deposits to perhaps start a student scholarship fund. Both proposals are being investigated.

Several Senators are growing concerned about some faculty-student relations in different joint committees. They hope to alleviate any problems that could come up.

The next Student Government meeting will be held tonight at 8:00 in Ellis Hall.

Good Movies

Clear-headedness and critical analysis go out the window this week, folks: three of my (absolutely) favorite films will be screened here on campus and I intend to revel in the genuis of each (alone, if I have to). Friday night, Oct. 8, the most gripping, haunting science fiction film I have ever seen will be viewed in Plato's Cave at 7 and 9 p.m. THX 1138 is not a chemical compound; it is not the call numbers of a missile; THX 1138 is the designation for a man. It is his name. At the time of this story, humankind has been reduced to numbing and numbering its members, neutralizing passions and creativity from the cradle with tranquilizers. (The cradle in this case happens to be a lab where babies are synthesized rather than born, however.) THX (his nickname) and his companion in life, who happens, happily to be female, decide not to take the drugs, indulge in a couple of discreetly filmed, through tremendously erotic love scenes (that's why I don't mind if I have to watch it alone . . .) and turn renegade.

Gay Divorcee is not an escapee from the Continental Baths, although the Continental has a lot to do with it; it's Betty Grable and Edward Everett Horton and some terrific Cole Porter music combined into one of the Best of the Thirties. Grable-Horton was not as long-lived as Astaire-Rogers, but, after a spectacular seventeen-minutes "doing The Continental," anyone might reconsider a career in dance. The Gay Divorcee will be screened down in Plato's Cave at 7 and 9 p.m. If you're not familiar with Cole Porter, you'll find the answer — oh so sweet — to the musical question "Night and Day come . . ." It's a beautiful way to learn a lesson.

And, at last, Fellini strikes! Tuesday, 8:15 p.m. at Oller Hall, Amarcord will weasel its way into your hearts. I fell in love with Amarcord (and renewed my affair with Federico) up at State a couple of years ago.

Bullets Bite Dust

By GREG RANSOM

Last Saturday the Juniata Indians hosted the Bullets of Gettysburg College. According to the Dunkle and Hunter Ratings this contest was to be a tightfisted defensive struggle. However one did not get this impression from watching the first half of this game, although the score at halftime was even at 3-3.

What the first half had reflected was a game of offensive blunders on the part of both teams. During this thirty minutes of play penalties and turnovers ran rampant as long gains were turned into losses.

As the second half started the defensive unit for J.C. began to overpower the Bullet line and provide excellent field position for the offense time and time again. Running off Tackle and countering up the middle the offense began to move. Soon the Indians found themselves on top for the first time, as Allen Lipstein scored his first of two touchdowns. Later Stan Nosal kicked a 26-yard field goal and Eddie Flynn scored on a conversion pass to conclude the scoring.

Both teams on the whole appeared to be a bit sluggish in their actions but there were a few good individual performances. Mike Miller, a freshman from Altoona, had a good day at the half-back position replacing the injured DeWayne Rideout; and Allen Lipstein may well have had his best game ever in collegiate ball surpassing the century mark in yards gained.

Outing Club's Activities

by Jerry Keenan

Juniata's Outing Club, under the advisorship of Dr. Zimmerer, is planning another active year of outdoor adventures. The club will be going backpacking, camping, hiking, bicycling, canoeing, kayaking, skating, skiing, and cross country skiing. Also, activities are planned in connection with the Caving Club.

Senior Elaine Keithan, a member of the club's steering committee, stated that the organization will be designed to fit individual interests. She said that the steering committee would like suggestions as to what types of activities people would be interested in.

So far, eighty-five people have shown interest in the organization. Naturally, not all of these people have the same outdoor interests, so a schedule of events will be set up. This schedule will appear on a monthly basis on the bulletin board in Ellis Hall near the dining room.

Anyone interested in joining the Outing Club or who would like to offer suggestions for activities should contact Elaine Keithan (box 298) or Scott McMillin (box 432) for information.

Meet the Masque Club

by Sally Brick

Ladies and gentlemen, introducing . . . masque club, a student run drama society to give students an outlet for their talents.

The club sponsors plays, theaters, etc. which are directed, staged and cast entirely by students, outside regular classes which put on plays also. Advised by Doris Goerhring and headed-up by a co-chairmanship of Lynn Bowmann, Sue Kane and Eric Schwab, the group is in the process of making plans for the coming year.

Among the many ideas which have been suggested are one act. plays at various places on campus and workshops about play production. Being investigated are the possibilities of having a "mystery theater" time on WJC, staging a dinner theater in the dining hall and a story theater for the children in town. Of course, all of this depends on people who are willing to work at it and come up with more ideas, as Eric explained.

The three chairmen are looking for members with ideas of their own. They emphasize that their real purpose is to receive ideas, check out the different aspects of them and then help the students get the needed facilities, materials and funds to make their ideas work. They are looking for more interested people all the time, because as Eric explained, "More people naturally means more ideas to work with." He also mentioned that one does not have to know how to act or perform to join the organization, because the group deals with all aspects of theatre production and there is much to done back stage.

The club meets on Tuesday nights at various times in the Gold Room in Ellis Hall and they will welcome anyone who is interested in having a part in the drama society.

Keep the Spirit

The Juniatian will be printing football cheers so that the student body will become familiar with them and join the cheerleaders during the football games. We expect you all to join in and show you school spirit this Sat., Oct. 2nd against Gettysburg.

All you gotta do is put your mind to it;
buckle down, buckle down and do it, do it!
S-O-U-L sould team. Sock it to 'em now!
Hey, hey what do you say? All the way, all the way!
Go, Go! Fight, Fight! Win, win!
Hey, Go, Fight, Win!
First and ten do it again!
Indians are dynamite! Indians are dynamite!
T-I-T-E Fight, fight!
F-I-G-H-T Fight team fight!

Freshman X-Country runner, Janet Kelso

By MIKE BODLEY

Saturday, October 2, the Juniata mens X-country team was defeated on its own course by Gettysburg. Gettysburg, last year's MAC champions, had a good day, while our own team had its first poor showing of the season. The Juniata team was also hampered by illness and injury. This now puts Juniata's running record at four wins and one loss. The team is young, lacks experience, and is in the process of rebuilding. They are looking forward to having a good race at Susquehanna this Saturday, October 9th.

Running for the women were sophomore Lia Fong and freshman Janet Kelso, who improved her time by a minute and a half. Due to injuries and illness, the other two women on the team were unable to compete.

The women's team is quite young, but developing and looking forward to further competition.

Juniata Brotherhood

By Jerry Keenan

Student Volunteers Services, a campus service organization, is again sponsoring its Big Brother-Big Sister program. Under the program, a child from the community in need of someone to relate to, visits a Juniata student two or three times a week. Through these visits the child benefits by having an older person to look to for guidance and friendship, while the student becomes involved in community affairs.

Sally Carn, last year's student head of the organization, stated that the program is designed to get college people integrated into the community, and to give children without fathers or mothers a chance to become close to someone older than themselves. She said that the program, which is several years old, was a success last year with about twenty-five Juniata students participating. From all available information, the turnout is about the same this year.

Sophomore Cindy Piccirilli has been involved in the Big Brother-Big Sister program since last Christmas. Her little sister is Beth Weld, nicknamed "Max," a twelve-year-old in the seventh grade in the Huntingdon Middle School. "Max" comes from a family of five brothers, so Cindy really does fill in as a big sister.

When they get together two or three times a week, "Max" and Cindy really don't do all that much. They sit and talk, or go for a walk to the gym or around campus. There is no need to do anything "special." "Max" is just as happy sitting around as she is beating up Marge, Cindy's roommate. The important thing is that she is out of an all-male environment and can be herself with another girl. This interaction is evident in the playful

By Robert "Twig" Lawrence

It seems that women's liberation has entered every facet of our lives. A few weeks ago everyone was notified of Juniata's title IX position. In case anyone is unfamiliar with title IX due to their immediate destruction of "junk" mail, I will describe it in general.

Title IX states in the form of a national law that there will be no sex discrimination in any areas whatsoever — a supreme court decision which places more restrictions on males than on females. For instance, a gentleman may not participate in a girl's sport because he may deprive a girl of the chance to play, whereas a body in a male sport should not deprive a boy of a chance to play. Through evaluation, who knows, maybe there will be total equality under the law.

At any rate, now that we have talked about the law, we are ready to examine The Mountain Day football game and whether Sex Discrimination at J.C. ?

By Nancy J. Rowe

"I would assume that since we're a human institution, there is sex discrimination," said Dr. Hartman, Dean of Student Services. Hartman has been named coordinator of the Title IX committee which will investigate alleged cases of sex discrimination on campus.

"Discrimination is defined not only in terms of the intent or the actual written policies, but also in terms of effect." There could be nonintentional discrimination that would be difficult to find unless brought to the committee's attention.

"Institutionally," said Hartman, "we do very good." In areas such as financial aid, campus jobs, and food service, "there is none."

In athletics, there is "equality of opportunity," although this does not mean identical expenditures. Hartman said that there should be concentration on equal locker facilities.

"I don't think that there is any secret of the fact that we're not all excited by the locker facilities for women." The men's facilities "aren't that great either, but they're larger." This also becomes a budgetary problem.

In discussing discrimination in relation to campus housing, Hartman claimed that they did find a discriminating policy in the student handbook, "The Pathfinder." It claimed that women's dorms would be locked at midnight, although the men's dorms had no such regulation. This policy was chanted to allow each dorm to decide this issue. The only all women's dorm on campus, Lesher, did decide to lock their dorm at midnight.

Cloister came up as a possible discrimination violation in housing. Said Hartman, "We toyed with the idea last year of opening Cloister to women." This decision was made late in the year right before room drawings. The response to having women in the traditionally all-male dorm was negative, although Hartman claimed that "tactically we started considering the possibility so late that people didn't have time to adjust to the thought of having women in Cloister."

The fact that several alumni hold the all-male Cloister as a "tradition," coupled with the "negative reaction we got from the male students" indicated to Hartman that "we haven't done our homework to make a change like that." Hartman said that the possibility of having women in Cloister was "one of the things that we will be wanting to look at this year."

One problem involving Cloister going co-ed is what will happen to the freshman-upperclassman ratio. A section of rooms in Cloister are generally reserved each year for incoming male freshmen. If girls are allowed to sign up for Cloister, they could push all the freshmen out, making it an all-upperclassman dorm, or Cloister could be forced to have male freshmen making it more likely that it would have less upperclass males.

Besides Cloister dorms, Lesher, North, Northeast, and Sherwood are single sex dorms. Would these also have to be broken up into co-ed housing? Dean Hartman pointed out that "We've got a number of problems . . . we can't arbitrarily assign housing like that. We have to go on a year-to-year basis depending on how many men and how many women." The whole fair housing problem is one that will require some study.

The Title IX committee itself is made up of members from Development, Business Office, Student Services, faculty, and students. Meetings are open to all on Tuesdays at 2:00 in the Library Seminar room.

A Rare and Beautiful Day

By Barb Frezza

I awoke rather dazed from a night of too little sleep into an afternoon that was glutted with things that almost begged aloud to be done. There were papers and studying to be done, the room to clean plants that needed some water and a little TLC, etc., etc., etc. The sky was a cloudy gray and looked as though it would pour rain any minute, and my swollen glands felt worse than they had the day before. I just wanted to roll over and go back to sleep, hoping that if the ceiling caved in I'd be lost in all of the rubble; but it was not to be so.

Right outside our window, a group of people were psyching themselves for the football game by yelling "Juniata's gonna win! Juniata's gonna win!" at the top of their lungs. With a sigh, and my customary "Oh shit" at having to heave my body out of bed, I went through the motions of my morning reconstruction process. The athletic supporters were still going strong outside. "Of course we're going to win, you jerks!" I thought aloud. It was then that I realized that today would be a rare day.

Usually, rare days are bright and sunny. The sky is so intense a shade of blue that it seems as though you're walking around in a postcard world.

Rare days are days for deviating from normal routine; for procrastinating all or most of the things that should be done. But rare days are not times to be frittered away. On the contrary, they are times for enjoyment and new opportunities — a higher form of hedonism, if you please.

A rare day is for finding things; be it a lucky penny on a wet sidewalk — or yourself. They are days for meeting people,

'What Do You Think of the Food At Juniata'

By Brenda Geiger

What is one of the first things an incoming student might ask? What is the food like here at Juniata? Well, contrary to what you might think, we have found that most students are satisfied with it. Are you a bit skeptical? Read the results for yourself.

First, I interviewed a group of freshman girls. One girl, Pamela Morse, said, "It's good. They give you a variety of choices and it is always hot. The only problem is there is too much starch." Another freshman, Toni Ann Svetkovich, had the same thing to say, "It is really not that bad only there is too much of one thing, Sunday dinners are lousy though."

A few brave souls, who asked to remain anonymous, said "I think it's pretty good considering how many people they have to cook for. I love the salad bar and the ice cream."

Many people shared the opinion that it isn't bad for institutional food. Pam Nowin stated, "Well, for institutional food it is a pretty good variety, especially with the salad bar." Lisa Massoud said "Actually, I think it's pretty good and a nice variety." Ann Kromer echoed her with "I've eaten worse, but I've also eaten better at other schools." Babe Broadwell feels that "It's okay, but it sometimes leaves a lot to the imagination."

Not only freshmen had good things to say about the food. Jan Edgar, a junior, said, "I think it is edible. I haven't seen too many starving people." Valerie Dove said "It's better than last year." And Claire Swavely agreed with "It's all right. It's been worse."

Barb Reifeis felt that "It's not as good as home but it's better than a lot of other places." And Sonia Bahyer added "It's all right considering it is institutional food. For that, it is above average."

When I questioned some guys about the food I heard such comments as "I can live on it," Mike Antonetti, and "It's there. It's all right," Cecile Jackson. One student, Chris Nagel, said "I love it." Dennis Buzminski feels that "The food is good for the amount of people they have to serve."

Not all the students had good things to say about the food. Vivian Warren feels that "They should keep the food out longer on the salad bar because if you have an eleven and twelve o'clock class, till you come they have already put the food away, especially on a Thursday." Mike Bodley's biggest complaint was "When you have a sports practice, by the time you get to supper the choices are eliminated and also, all the good selections fall on one day. Why can't they set out whole fruits?"

Carolyn Burleigh said "I don't like when they disguise horsemeat as country fried steak." Cindy West had the comment that "The peanut butter is runny and they should have ice cream more often." "There are too many carbohydrates and fats. Where is the protein?" asked Rochelle Bingaman. Debbie Spillane feels "We should have

By Chuck Kirby
and Gregg Ralston

This week we feature three more summer releases, all of them on the funky-disco side of the charts. Those of you who can be found Saturday nights in the Ellis Hall ballroom dancing your poor toes off should like Elvin Bishop's Struttin' My Stuff (Capricorn), Average White Band's Soul Searching (Atlantic), and Boz Scaggs's Silk Degrees (Columbia).

Elvin Bishop has achieved a new high in Southern soul and funk with this one. Some outstanding features throughout the album are the solo guitar work interspersed with some excellent brass solos; highlights include the title cut, "Struttin' My Stuff," with its distinctive, well done keyboard work, varied lead vocals, and gradual fadeout; "My Girl," the album standout — a Southern remake of the old Temptations hit featuring a new disco beat punctuated with first-rate drum work; and the prominent hit, "Fooled Around And Fell In Love," a great slow-dance number featuring keyboards and the distinctive soulful vocal effort.

Comin' at you now from the Average White Band is a release that Chuck calls the best thing to come out of Scotland in quite a while. Soul Searching is as restrained and smoothly soulful as the white album and Cut The Cake were funky and movin'-groovin'. Most notable are "Love Your Life" in true disco style with a beat that allows nothing but bump for dancing purposes; "A Love Of Your Own," a rather lengthy slow cut highlighted with judicious use of synthesizer, sax, and vocals for a great easy-does-it slow dance; the title cut, "Soul Searching," featuring a mellow mixture of keyboard, strings, and brass for a typical AWB effect; and "Sunny Days," a truly easy-listening number with a melodic

By: Elizabeth Borton
Thecla Coppolo
Sandra Taylor

We would like to introduce you to Ellen Snyder, a twenty-one-year old senior majoring in pre-law. She is from Tyrone and chose Juniata because, "it was close to home and it was a small school, and I had a lot of friends here." Ellen's musical interests span from the Beach Boys to WRLR-FM. We better let her explain: "I like the Beach Boys but I have this thing — I like to listen to WRLR-FM. I can study with this kind of stuff." In the summer Ellen enjoys water-skiing and boating at Raystown Dam.

Besides being chairman of the Barristers Club, and Circulation Editor of the Juniatian, Ellen has two jobs here. "I work in the catalog room of the library and I am a secretary projectionist for the audio-visual department." As part of her course of study, Ellen is interning at the law office of Taylor and Stewart in Huntingdon. "I follow them around and watch courtroom procedures. I've witnessed several real-estate transactions and will be watching a murder trial the office is involved with in Fulton County. I sit in on client interviews — just more or less learn the daily activities of a lawyer. I really enjoy it. I couldn't ask for it to be any better." Ellen describes Mr. Taylor and Mr. Stewart as "very friendly and open."

An ideal job for Ellen would be found in being a lawyer in a small town. "For one thing I don't think I could make it in a big city . . . it seems a hostile environment. I don't want to be afraid of walking the streets. People tend to care a little bit more about each other in a small town — they might be nosey but they care."

Ellen feels "there's all sorts of legal problems. There's people that always need help. It just seems that as the society grows bigger, people have more legal problems. I want to be a lawyer because I want to help the little guy fight the bureaucratic mess that our government is in — and it's going to get worse."

As far as being a woman lawyer, Ellen sees both advantages and disadvantages. Ellen believes her sex will give her added insight into rape and divorce cases. "I know that it's a very male oriented field, however I want to go to a rural area. I know people are going to be prejudiced but I'll have to be competent to overcome that. They would be prejudiced against a male lawyer for other reasons."

Regarding the social scene on campus Ellen says, "there seems to be like two sides of campus — the East Houses side, and the rest of campus. The guys are over sitting in their dorms — wherever they might be — afraid to call the girls up, while the girls

Juniata Senate Report

By N.J. Rowe

The Student Government meeting last week dealt with several topics, the main one being the problem arising between faculty and students on the Personnel committee.

This committee is presently made up of six faculty members and three students. Their job is to evaluate professors.

The problem arose when it was suggested that the three students be removed from the committee. It was stated by none at the Student Government meeting that those proposing removal of the students were "blaming what was wrong with the committee on the students of the committee."

A proposal was made by those wishing the removal of the students to have two separate committees, one for the faculty and one for the students. They would talk about the same issues and give the results to Dr. Norris, Dean of Academic Affairs.

Several Senators felt this proposal would not work; one or the other committee might be totally ignored. A suggested compromise was to take one student off the committee, or give the three students only two votes.

Those who talked to faculty members about the problem seemed relatively sure the faculty would agree to let the present system stand, although the Senators were still concerned. The faculty meeting held yesterday may have solved some of this problem.

Two proposals came up at Thursday night's meeting. The first was to allot the freshman class a traditional starting budget of approximately $75.00. This motion was made,

Letter to the Editor

We are looking for fellow vegetarian workers. If you are or would like to be involved in some sort of vegetarian action on your campus would you let us know.

This fall there will be a network of UNTURKEY or vegetarian Thanksgiving public dinners around the country. Vegetarian Thanksgivings save grain for some of the 50 million hungry, save animals from going terrorized to an unjust death, save humans from the food poisoning, intestinal cancer, kidney disease, and other hazards of animal flesh.

The laboratories on your campus, if it is a typical one, are involved in some of the kinds of research which have happened elsewhere.

E.G.,

At the University of Calif. at San Diego, pigs are forced to run a treadmill till they drop of exhaustion.

At Harvard several years ago, pigs were dropped alive into 800 degree boiling oil for eventual compilation as research in The Symposium on Burns. At the University of Rochester, at Wayne State etc., dogs were strapped into Blalock Presses and into crash cars to see how much pressure could be taken before bones broke and skulls were crushed.

We are animal liberationists, world hunger activists, and disease fighters. All can be accomplished through vegetarian work, either on campus or with us. We work for $5 a week and room and board. Come on aboard.

Sincerely,
Don Wilson, Nellie Shriver,
Billy Mick, Emma Wood

STYX to Appear at Juniata College

Through six years and five albums, Styx have drawn from a variety of sounds to make their music. The overall offering is a kaleidescope of rock & roll songs. In spite of their diversity as musicians and personalities, there does exist a common denominator that cements the Styx mystique, a "badass'dness" that surfaces in each song, linking the group to their origins on Chicago's tough South Side.

Dennis DeYoung and twins John and Chuck Panozzo were neighbors on 101st Street in the dingy steel-mill district of Chicago at a time when the Beatles had turned every young man's fancy from baseball to backyard bands. Dennis had learned the piano as a youngster while John had taken up drums, and Chuck, not wanting to be excluded, took quickly to the bass guitar. Another friend (Tom Nardin) joined them on lead guitar and the four copied the hits of the mid-Sixties, leaving their bats behind to serve only as occasional tools of self-defense.

Encouraged by parents who felt their fascination with music would keep them off the streets and out of trouble, the boys matured quickly. Within a year they had played their first paying job (for $100). By the late Sixties, the nascent Styx was performing regularly, gaining valuable experience. Young fans responded enthusiastically to the combination and they soon rose above the plethora of high school dance bands around Chicago.

1969 was a landmark year in the Styx history. Nardin left the city to continue his education, leaving Dennis and the Panozzo brothers in need of a guitarist. All three were enrolled in Chicago State University where they met John (J. C.) Curulewski. Impressed with J.C.'s musicianship and knack for song-writing, they asked him to join the group, then performing under the name TW4. DeYoung had been writing his own songs for some time, but with the added strength of J.C., TW4 begun integrating original material into their show. This development helped speed the growth of their already sizable following. Eventually word-of-mouth excitement over "this group from the South Side" drew the attention of local record company scouts.

Guitarist - singer - songwriter James (J.Y.) Young joined TW4 in 1970. A flurry of changes followed, including a recording contract with Chicago-based and RCA-distributed Wooden Nickel Records. The group was dissatisfied with the name TW4 and began searching for a more suitable one: Dante's Inferno describes the river Styx as a flaming body of water separating the Greek Purgatory from Hell, a burning symbol of intense metaphysical energy. The musicians were excited by the correlation between this description and their music, so they adopted the name Styx. After centuries of rather obscure existence, the mythological concept was again brought through the intense electric energy generated by the music of Styx.

Things went smoothly for Styx in the studio and the group's first album was introduced in the summer of 1971. Styx I received critical raves everywhere, but, as sometimes happens, got little airplay nationwide. In Chicago, however, the progressive-rock fans supported the album and inspired healthy local sales.

Styx II revealed a refined group, a polishing and finessing of the raw talent evident on album one. And though Styx II got a stronger reception than its predecessor, heaviest response was again confined to Chicago and the Midwest.

To keep themselves alive, Styx played in clubs, high schools, and colleges throughout the Midwest. Their performance took on a special, crowd-pleasing, essentially Midwestern style. The "signature" of Dennis DeYoung's voice and the group's vocal harmonies became synonymous with Styx in the minds of audiences throughout the heartland of America. Styx became known for their high-energy performances (in Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Iowa, Arkansas, and of course, Illinois) and built a huge following in towns most groups just pass through between "major markets" (they drew over 11,000 people to a 1975 Little Rock concert). But the great tastemaker audiences of the East and West Coasts were denied them — a reinforcement of the you-can't-break-a-band-out-of-Chicago syndrome.

A third album, The Serpent Is Rising, received little more than a promotional shove and ended up in another commercially doomed artistic success. Using live performances to take their music to the public, Styx continued generating waves of new fans, so the reluctance on the part of the radio community was a source of constant frustration to the band.

Man of Miracles, the fourth Wooden Nickel album, was treated as the last shot for Styx. It was recorded in under ten days following months of rehearsals and contained the most commercial package of songs yet. Given more promotion than any other Styx release, Man of Miracles, got off well and was moving nicely six weeks after a September, '74, launching. Suddenly, a strange turn of events changed the course of the group's career.

In an unprecedented move, Chicago Top-40 powerhouse WLS decided to play a song from Styx II, "Lady." The year-and-one-half of requests for the song at the FM stations in Chicago had begun crossing over on an increasing basis to WLS, causing music director Jim Smith to investigate further. Smith saw the potential, and exploited it by adding "Lady."

The unexpected addition of "Lady" at WLS sparked an immediate change in plans that included the official release of the single. Finally given the big chance, "Lady" swiftly blossomed into a national hit, racking up 800,000 sales and thrusting Styx II into certified gold status.

At this point the band decided that their career with Wooden Nickel had gone as far as it could go and they went "label shopping." Several major companies expressed interest, especially when they saw the dynamic live performance. Two visits to Los Angeles later Styx had joined the A&M family.

Directly after completion of the pact, Styx went into Paragon Studios in Chicago to begin recording. With their energy devoted to the music only, a refreshingly positive attitude toward the future, and the skillful production assistance of Barry Mraz, Styx produced Equinox, their finest album yet.

Equinox was greeted warmly by the music community. Heavy national airplay stimulated quick sales and a good chart start. More recently, agreement was reached with Derek Sutton, the widely respected ex-director of the Chrysalis companies, to assume management of Styx. Sutton immediately restructured the group's business affairs, put together a nationwide tour, and filled the leadership void that had plagued Styx from their earliest days.

One final but significant change brings us to Styx today. Following the final 1975 tour, guitarist Curulewski left the band. Demonstrating their usual professionalism, Styx discovered an incredible young guitarist in 36 hours. Tommy Shaw is young, but eight of his 22 years have been devoted to learning his trade in bars, from his Montgomery, Alabama, home to Chicago. Equally capable as a guitarist, singer, and showman, Tom played his first gig with Styx seven days after meeting them for the first time. Tommy's accomplished showmanship has added a whole new dimension to the live Styx performance. His fresh approach to the music has stimulated the other four members of the group to reach for new performing highs. His guitar duels with James Young get audiences to their feet repeatedly.

Styx will be appearing in concert in Memorial Gym on Sat., October 23 at 8 p.m. Tickets can be obtained at the Ellis Info Desk; the price is $3.75 for J.C. students, $4.50 for non-students.

The Styx group is coming to Juniata!

FIDELIS
By Barg Frezza

You have taken back the promise
That you spoke so long ago;
Taken back the heart you gave me —
I must even let it go.
Where love once has breathed,
Pride dieth;
So I struggled but in vain
First to keep the links together
Then to piece the broken chain

But it might not be — so freely
All your friendship I restore,
And the heart that I had taken
As my own forever more
No shade of reproach shall touch you,
Dread no more a claim from me —
But I will not have you fancy
That I count myself as free

I am bound by the old promise;
What can break that golden chain?
Not even the words that you have spoken,
Or the sharpness of my pain:
Do you think, because you fail me
And draw back your hand today,
That from out the heart I gave you
My strong love can fade away?

Mountain Day 1976

By Steve Svarczkopf

Mountain Day 1976 began with much speculation as to "weather" or not it would indeed be held on the appointed date. As we all know, the weather of the last few weeks has been fondly referred to as the "monsoon" season here at Juniata. However, as the deadline for cancellation passed it became obvious that the threat of inclement weather would not keep the faculty and students from enjoying their legitimate leave from campus. And enjoy it they did! There was plenty to do for everybody, volleyball, egg toss, tug-of-war, hiking, mountain climbing, and, of course, the Senior-Faculty football game. And don't forget the fact that the Food Service had their "great" hotdogs.

The egg toss, supposedly a co-ed activity, was won by a pair of Junior guys; Rick Altobelli and Tom Powell, with a pair of Sophomore girls; Amanda Slawson and Linda Baker, a close second, just one toss behind. The tug-of-wars were a clean sweep for the Freshman class as both the boys and girls showed awesome power in defeating the Seniors and Juniors respectively. And the Senior class kept the string alive as they showed great defensive capability in frustrating the Bear, again, in his quest to raise the Faculty over the Senior class. These were the results of some of the activities available to those who attended the 1976 Mountain Day.

There are also those who didn't care to attend this day of freedom from campus. In talking with some of these students I learned why they had not attended. The classic excuse lay with the majority of those interviewed and that was that this was a great opportunity to catch up on a lot of lost sleep and past due reading for various classes. There were even those who managed to get home for a couple of good home cooked meals and a nice soft bed. I'm still amazed that students would want to stay on campus and eat a "delectable" Sheetzes hoagie, even given the idea of eating a food service hot dog for lunch.

So, as one can see, Mountain Day is a lot of things to a crowd of people all of whom are pursuing an education for the future.

THE GOOD OLE DAYS

By Mark Wiener

An ancient relic has been discovered on campus recently, unearthed in the bowels of I. Harvey Brumbaugh House, in the bottom of a box marked "TO BE THROWN OUT," (it reportedly has been there for years.) It seems to be the remains of an old PATHFINDER, but on closer examination, the content appears to be more like the dogma laid down by an 11th century monastery. Here are a few of the more legible excerpts from the yellow, brittle pages:

Men's Residence rules:

No alcoholic beverages are permitted anywhere on campus or in any student residence under any circumstances. Women visitors are permitted in residence hall reception lounges between the hours of 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. They may not enter the residence halls or rooms at any time, unless accompanied by a College official or proctor. Electrical appliances will be limited to four per room, regardless of number of occupants. Sunlamps, T.V., "ham" radio, flame-heated stoves, automatic coffee pots, refrigerators and other unusual devices prohibited.

Women's Residence rules:

Smoking by women students is permitted only in a specifically designated smoking room in South Hall. (Men were allowed to smoke anywhere in residence halls.) Slacks or Bermuda shorts are in order for picnics and lounging but have no place in the class room, social rooms, or the dining hall. Juniata women dress for dinner in the evening and on Sunday noon. (No socks, please!) (Men had to wear jackets and ties to dinner.) A sign-out sign-in procedure is in effect in all residence halls.

If these regulations seem rigid, pity the "Freshmen," (probably the more austere members of the sect), they had even more stringent rules:

For the first few weeks of your four years at Juniata, there are certain "rules and regulations" which you will be expected to observe. After Frosh-Soph games they decrease in number considerably, but in importance! If you obey them, then you one day will be termed a sophomore and then you will be able to impose them on the freshmen following you.

All freshmen must purchase and wear the regulation dink. Frosh will address upperclassmen as sir and ma'am. Freshmen shall not use the diagonal walk leading from the main entrance to Students Hall, nor the diagonal from Brumbaugh Hall to Totem Inn, nor the front steps to Founder's Hall.

At the command "BUTTON FROSH," freshmen are required to pull off their dinks by the button, and make the proper response.

Freshmen must carry The Pathfinder at all times. They should be familiar with all material in this handbook. All cheers and songs found in The Pathfinder, including the "Alma Mater," must be memorized within one week after the opening of classes.

Disregard for any of the Freshman regulations will be deemed sufficient reason for summons to appear at the Freshman Court.

Another interesting section of this ancient document are the collection of "chants" toward the end, like:

Rah, Rah, Rah, Rah;
Ray, Ray, Ray, Ray;
Hay, Hay, Hay, Hay;
J-U-N-I-A-T-A;

Magic comes to Juniata

Center Board is presenting "Cramer and Company," a titillating magic show for the Homecoming Weekend. "Cramer and Company" presents a unique and mystifying performance of magic. They will perform an hour's worth of "magic teaser's" at dinner in addition to their performance in the evening. The magic tricks are guaranteed not to be repeated between the two shows. Performance time is 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall. An admission fee will be charged. It will be an evening of fun and mystery — sure to please everyone.

Juniata Professors Publish Books

By Melanie Boyer

Two of our most esteemed Social Science professors have put together books relating to their field. From the Political Science Department, Professor William C. Vocke has written a book titled American Foreign Policy — An Analytical Approach. Dr. Duane F. Stroman from the Sociology Department has written The Medical Establishment and Social Responsibility.

Professor Vocke's book is a text-reader, an edited volume. This means that he himself has written approximately 115 pages and the other 200 pages is other people's work which he has edited. It was written for the college student, mainly the upperlevel undergraduate. It was published by The Free Press, a division of MacMillian and Co., in June of 1976, and has been adopted by a leading foreign policy expert Paul Seabury of the University of California at Berkley.

From the preface Vocke writes "The main thrust of the volume is to provide an analytic perspective on American foreign policy." He has combined the scientific and traditional means of analysis of foreign policy and uses multiple regression equation to highlight variables that effect foreign policy. The focus of the book asks the question Why, and what are the sources, causes and roots of American Foreign Policy.

In Dr. Stroman's book, The Medical Establishment and Social Responsibility, he raises the question of what are the major problems in medical care. He finds four major problems. First, while most of our health care is of high quality, there is still some health care that is of poor quality. Secondly, medical care services are unavailable to many people, especially the poor in rural areas and the poor in ghettos. Thirdly, he finds that there are often unnecessary services performed, such as medications, surgery, eyeglasses, and diagnostic tests. Finally, he finds that there has been too rapid of a rise in the costs of health care.

From here Dr. Stroman develops a complex analysis of why these things occur. He believes that some of the reasons are that physicians have too much to say about the pricing of services. Physicians also have not done enough to upgrade the quality of medicine. They have not gotten rid of bad practitioners.

The staff of The Juniatian would like to congratulate these two men on a fine job.

Marsha Durst: Germany Revisted

By Ralf Neufang

With the beginning of this school year, Marsha Durst, (now with short hair!) came back from her junior year abroad at Marburg-Lahn in the German Federal Republic. Before she left last year, her desires and her expectations were to learn the language, to travel, to see cultures other than her own, and especially to get to know the German people, In general, she wanted "to see something new."

Now, looking back on last year, she says that she is convinced that one really can learn the language fluently by being in a situation where only the foreign language is spoken. It upset her sometimes when the Americans in Marburg tried to speak English among themselves. She traveled during the winter break through Germany, Switzerland, Austria, Netherlands, etc., and during the summer break through Scandinavia, and France. She thought Scandinavia's landscape was more beautiful than Switzerland's. In Germany it impressed her that the houses are built in villages or cities in comparison to the Americans who have a tendency to build housing developments or "housing plants" thus utilizing the land poorly.

When Marsha arrived in Marburg on the 23rd of Aug. 1975, she had to take an intensive language course and then take the "Sprachpruefung" (language examination), given by the university. After passing the exam, she was able to take official seminars with the beginning of the winter-semester on Oct. 15. She was allowed to take courses from every department; she wasn't limited only to the study of German, but naturally the classes were taught in German. Since Marsha is a foreign language major she took seminars in German Literature, linguistics, Anglistic (to practice translations from English to German) and Slavistic. There are in Marsha's opinion some basic differences between the course and instruction-set-up in Marburg and Juniata. In Marburg there is a greater emphasis on group work rather than individual achievement (group work: a group of 3-4 students meets each week or more often to prepare their own special assignment as well as to prepare for the coming class. These 'working-groups' sometimes develop into 'social-groups'!)

Also, the professors do not lecture to the class but each student is responsible for leading the seminar (with his working-group) in the special area which he has researched. Seminars only meet once a week for two hours (of course you have more than three, in fact, you can take as many as you want, the average may be 7 seminars).

As a student herself, Marsha met mostly students and developed a sense of belonging to a students' community. For example, the kitchen, where she cooked together with other people on her floor etc. By the way, girls and guys are mixed on the floors and everyone has a single room.

When Marsha left Marburg and Germany on Aug. 7, 1976 she knew that she would go back.

Homecoming News

Before telling you what we do we would like to introduce ourselves. We're Bev Martin and Katie Middleton and our official title is co-chairpersons for the Special Events committee of Center Board. We are coordinating activities on campus such as: Madrgal Dinner, Casino Night, All Class Night, May Day and Homecoming.

Obviously, our current project is Homecoming. We are planning a small parade to begin at Weis Market travel out 15th St. to Moore St. up Moore to 18th then down Scott St. to College field where the floats will be displayed. The theme of the parade is Cultures of the World and the classes and some clubs will be entering floats on this theme. Keeping with the small nature of the parade route the floats will be built on pick-up trucks. We will be having two bands, the visiting band will be the Central Cambria H.S. band directed by Mr. Isenberg. They will also perform an eight minute pregame show. The Juniata Band will also be participating in the parade. The parade will naturally be graced with our 1976-77 Homecoming Queen and her court. The parade begins between 10:30 and 11:00 a.m. So get out there and wave to the parade!

The voting for the floats will be done by any and all returning alumni. The ballot must be turned in before the end of the first quarter and the winner will be announced during the half-time program. The half-time program will consist of the presentation of the Queen and her court. Immediately following the game President and Mrs. Binder will be hosting a reception in South Lounge.

". . . Our Season Was Whether Or Not We Could Bounce Back . . ."

By Tracy Saracco

Last Saturday, October 2, the Juniata football team extended their "76" record to 3-1, with a stunning second half victory over visiting Gettysburg, 20-3. With this new victorious light shining on the Indians, some questions had to be raised reflecting the previous weekend's loss to defending MAC champs, Albright, in a heartbreaking 15-13 screamer.

Tri-captain and quarterback, Dave Wichrowski had this to say about the team's only loss: "That game sure was a hard one to swallow. I thought that the team was definitely up for the game, but, being up for it wasn't good enough to make up for the numerous and crucial mistakes that we made. We moved the ball up and down the field on them all day, but we just couldn't punch the ball in. Due to the great effort on the part of our defense, we spent most of the 4th quarter inside their 40-yard line, knocking on the door.

"In previous games we played with team effort, when the offense was slacking the defense became aggressive, when the defense was slacking the offense became the aggressor. Against Albright we just didn't pull that total team effort together quite as well as we should have. The Albright loss hurt worse than the Indiana victory win helped, mainly because Albright was a conference game, where as Indiana was non-league. However, the Albright game is history, to be put in our pockets, keeping it out of our minds, but, not to be forgotten. That game wasn't our whole season; our season was whether or not we could bounce back, and I think our 20-3 Gettysburg victory speaks for itself. We have to continue to play from week to week and let things take care of themselves. However, praying that someone else beats Albright couldn't hurt."

Editor's Note: The JC football team, despite the miserable weather, beat Susquehanna 20-6, on Saturday, Oct. 9. Congratulations and best of luck against Lycoming on Saturday! (Dave Wichrowski's wish came true: Gettysburg beat Albright 13-10, last Saturday.)

Women V-B's — Winning Record!

By Greg Ransom

Two years ago two ladies here at Juniata had a dream of starting a volleyball team. So under the direction of Mrs. JoAnne Reilly, Marge Morgan pursued this interest.

In an effort to initiate such a program Marge encountered several obstacles. The major one being that of financing. Along with Priscilla Grove, these ladies began to plan programs to raise the necessary funds.

After selling football programs and in some cases using their personal money, the first year of club volleyball began. During the initial campaign the team had four matches, all of which the Indians lost. This 0-4 record however did not discourage these ladies. If anything they were encouraged even more to work at the techniques of the sport and gain the required experience.

This year however things are off to a good start as the Indians defeated St. Francis College last Monday evening and also Penn State-Altoona on Saturday while losing to Penn State-New Kensington.

In the first match against St. Francis it was Cindy Piccirilli scoring the most points in the first match while in the second it was Priscilla Grove leading the second match victory. The JV team however did not win, though in the first of two matches they attempted a come-back it fell short. Later in the week the Indians traveled to Altoona for a 4½ hour Tri-match with Altoona and New Kensington. Here the tribe ran into problems. After defeating Altoona the defense broke down against New Kensington and the Indians were handed their first defeat of the year. The JV's were much more successful on the road than at home Monday night as they too defeated Altoona campus. In this contest freshman Judy Brannaka and sophomore Karen Bantley were noted as the top performers in their contest.

As you can see the Women's volleyball team has come a long way and is hoping some day to become one of JC's intercollegiate female sports. Before this can happen though the team needs more student support. One way that the students can help this club is to buy a shaker at the next home football game. This money raised will help send these ladies to the MAC tournament at the close of their season. The next home match will be this Wednesday against Bucknell at 3:30. See you there to learn about JC's fastest growing female sport.

Hockey Team: Passes and Stickwork . . .

By Marge Morgan

The Women's Field Hockey Team beat Shippensburg State College in the varsity match by a score of 3-2 on October 5. The win improves the team's record to 1-2 on the season.

Shippensburg scored early in the first half but the psyched-up Juniata offense took the ball downfield. A foul by Shippensburg within the striking circle forced a corner and sophomore co-captain Allison Reeves made the shot for the goal. Although Juniata was on defense during most of the first half, Allison got the ball and scored on a fastbreak.

In the second half Shippensburg again scored first but Juniata kept on fighting. The offense totally dominated and another fastbreak by Guess Who (Allison Reeves!!!) produced the game winning score.

Coach Alexa Fultz credits the victory to good teamwork and spirit. Passes and stickwork were especially good with the halfbacks playing an outstanding game. Special notice should also go to sophomore Tate Bruner who played her first game in the varsity goal.

The monsoon which struck late last week forced the cancellation of a game at Lycoming. The Shippensburg victory should prove to help build the team's confidence and a good showing is expected against Williamsport Community College on October 12, and in the Homecoming game with Lycoming at 10:00 A.M. on Saturday.

There are 25 girls, 1 manager, and 1 statistician on the team this season. The team is young with only one senior, co-captain Bev Martin, 6 juniors, 8 sophomores, and 10 freshmen.

In the JV game at Shippensburg, Juniata lost 8-0. Mrs. Fultz is not disappointed however because 5 of the 11 JV players had never played field hockey before.

X-Country Victorious

By Mike Bodley

Despite cold, rainy weather and muddy, sloppy running conditions, the J.C. harriers won their 5th meet of the season against Susquehanna University on Saturday, October 9. The top finishers for Juniata were freshman Scott Malay, senior Dave Parker, Marty O'Leary, Bob Butler, Chris Nagel, Austin Robison, and Casey Koller. Representing the girls squad were Teddy Lyras and Lia Fong.

Coach Meditch said the 24 to 31 score showed the team's depth. He believes that the team will go undefeated for the rest of the season.

Juniata hosts Elizabethtown on October 12, and will compete in the Bucknell Invitational on Saturday, October 16. The Invitational will help the team prepare for a strong showing at the MAC championships.

Special Feature at WJC

By Kathy Jacobs

This Sunday, October 17, from 9 to 12 p.m., Ed Green will be having a "Greatest Hits" show. He will be playing the greatest hits of the 60's and 70's. Included will be some of the music from War, America, and of course, the Beatles. As part of WJC's regular feature album on Sunday evenings, Ed will be playing Santana's greatest hits at 10 p.m. During the last hour, he will be accepting requests. So call 643-5031 if there is a special hit you would like to hear, and keep on listening to WJC.

are over here waiting for the guys to call."

Ellen explains her future goals by saying, "I wanna find success and fulfillment in my career — and also fulfillment in my private life. I really don't feel in the long run that unless you become a very powerful person you can accomplish anything."

Politics play a very important role in Ellen's life. She attributes the escalation in political apathy to the fact that, "people really can't see the government working for them." Ellen found a lot of this apathy while she worked in Tyrone on a voter registration drive. She says, "I'm pretty conservative so I really don't want to change (per se) the system. I'd like to eliminate the bureaucratic mess, that's the kind of change I want — nothing radical." Ellen also has a lot of interesting thoughts concerning our society and the politics that often seem a constant shadow to it. "Our country's so diversified — there are so many definitions the sociologists have put us into — I don't even know wnether there is a middle America anymore. And all our programs . . . I don't think the government owes you a living. I think you should go out and work on your own . . . Welfare is fine for someone who is mentally incompetent or something like that . . . And all this urban renewal garbage — to me, it's cheaper to rehabilitate the buildings than tear them down and build new ones."

way that they treat each other; just as if they were sisters.

Cindy feels that the program is "definitely a worthwhile idea." In addition, she thinks that her times with "Max" are "really fun." "Max's" only reply to what she thought of the program was a shy shrug. Cindy said that she had never seen her sister so quiet before. Usually "Max" talks and talks and talks!

Anyone interested in establishing a relationship such as the one between "Max" and Cindy should definitely consider the Big Brother-Big Sister program. The student need only give as much time as he or she can, and the benefits are many. If you are interested in having a little "brother" or "sister" drop a note to Sally Carn (P.O. Box 1743) or Tom McConnell (P.O. Box 1512).

or not it was discriminatory. A group of senior girls got together and wanted to go in for one play. However, their dream never materialized. They were not permitted to play. A chorus of boos was heard from the female portion of the spectators. I mean you only go to a few Mountain Days while you attend Juniata, and there will be only one senior Mountain Day for each one of us. It would be great to remember your college Mountain Day — when you played football against Juniata's president and esteemed professors. This was denied to those girls. Not that I wanted to see them play or any other particular reason, but that is what they wanted to do. In a land of proclaimed freedom, one group should not have advantages over others.

I am not putting any blame on anyone. The event just happened, I am therefore blaming the event. I am not placing this criticism with radical liberalism. I am fairly conservative, but I try to possess a just outlook. I feel no paths of life in our society should be blocked for anyone because each one of us, whether male or female, has different potentials.

Once, if ever, equality is firmly established, I believe an equilibrium will be set up where people will do "people" things that were before labeled as female or male. Men don't want to be female and women don't want to be male, at least the normal ones don't. But nobody wants a socially predestined status. We have the right to choose for ourselves and whether what we do is called masculine or feminine is for each one of us to decide on our own. I close with this statement. Whenever a bunch of pretty college seniors want to play two hand tag, above the waist football it will be fine with me as long as I live, and as long as I get to play defense.

A second proposal was to set up a projector screen system that would transform a regular television screen to a 10 x 10 picture. It was suggested that such a device could be set up in the cafeteria of ballroom at night for such events as the debates, election returns, movies, and major sports events. Food Service would like to be involved by offering food.

It was announced that Dorm Visitation was going well, and could possibly be made a permanent function. The main gripe by students concerned cafeteria food. Many suggestions by students will be investigated by Student Government.

Freshman Senator Todd Kulp suggested that a set meeting time be slated for further Student Government meetings. It was decided that the day and time for all further meetings will be Wednesday at 8:00 in Ellis Hall.

making new friends and visiting old ones. Rare days are times for sharing experiences and ideas; for taking a bunch of 'nothings' and turning them into 'somethings.' Rare days are for learning new things and for seeing old things in new ways. They are days for doing all of the things you want to do, but ordinarily wouldn't think of doing.

For me, a rare day is finding the reddest of red maple leaves on a walk through the woods. It's a day to climb mountains and look down on the rest of the world. It is building paper airplanes out of all of my junk mail and seeing how many of them hit the wastepaper basket. It is the tea-like scent of pine trees and burning leaves hanging heavy in the autumn mist, and the sounds of people laughing. Rare days are for being the biggest kid in the sandbox (and probably the dirtiest.) A rare day can also be a time for learning how to tool leather, where one can get free pizza that tastes decent, and about a lady who died because she actually turned to soap.

On a rare day, I am the richest person in the world, even though I may only have a quarter to my name. I am a winner, and all of my endings are "happily ever afters;" as beautiful as a flock of starlings' close order drill in flight in the twilight mist, keeping a lilting time to the violins in a Schubert symphony.

Boz Scaggs — the elitist, as Penthouse calls him — justifies this appelation fully with the release of Silk Degrees: "It's Over," a past hit featuring good percussion work and a subtle yet effective background by harpsichord; "What Do You Want The Girl To Do," an easy listener with very rich background brass and chorus making a good buildup for the refrain each time it occurs; "Lowdown," the latest hit for Boz — pure disco stressing mellow organ emphasized by distinctive vocal and percussion; and "Georgia," another hit notable for its predominant brass-wind combinations and rousing finale, provide the spark for a fine album recommended to every disco-music lover.

On a more serious side, anyone who missed Tuesday night's Artist Series presentation of the Freiburg Baroque Soloists missed one of the most superlative interpretations of small-ensemble music ever heard on this campus. Five pieces representing Haydn, Mozart, and three sons of J.S. Bach were executed with the precision and grace that has won admiration ever since their composition — a real treat for serious audiophiles.

Next week: new releases by Hall and Oates, Orleans.

more sandwiches like cheesesteaks."

"I think it is raunchy." "It is always the same meat." John Gill. Cindy Wolfe echoes this thought with "I don't really like it much. It all tastes the same." Carol Anderson voiced the opinion that "I prefer my food without hairs." Cheryl Kent sums up her opinions with "Thank God for the salad bar!" Such are the opinions of the students about the food here at Juniata.

Questions-Answers

Do you have a question concerning the college? A problem with faculty or administration? Wondering about taking a certain course? Bugged by regulations? Questioning the value of college related organizations? If so, write it in to QUESTIONS-ANSWERS, box 1346, or drop it off at the Juniatian office. We'll publish it and try to our best ability to answer it. Sometimes we'll find what you're looking for, and maybe sometimes we'll run into the same roadblocks, but at least your question won't go unheeded. If you wish, your letter can be anonymous. We'll try to print as many as we can, especially those pertinent to the student body as a whole.

New Coffeehouse: Is It Here To Stay?

By Nancy J. Rowe

"No alcoholic beverages are permitted anywhere on campus or in any student residence under any circumstances." This statement was found in an old Pathfinder by columnist Mark Wiener last week. Those who wrote that statement might be quite surprised at the new coffeehouses held recently at Juniata.

October 8th marked the trial date where beer and birchbeer were served in the Tussey-Terrace lounge, as students socialized and listened to the live entertainment.

The group that performed, "Laurel," expressed repeatedly that they thought it was a great idea. But, the opinions that really counted were those who would decide whether the new coffeehouse was here to stay.

President Binder claimed, "I thought that it was a very healthy thing ... a nice change from the usual social events." He was surprised, however, that he saw so few men there. He felt that if there were areas for dancing, more couples would come. When asked how he felt alumni would respond, Dr. Binder speculated, "I would expect that there would be a positive reaction."

Dean of Student Affairs, Dr. Hartman, stated that he would present the idea to the alumni as "a positive move" that would improve the social relations on campus. Hartman said that this type of activity was "least likely to get out of hand," and that it was "fun to be there." He expressed that "having it occur with another point of interest (entertainment) is a positive

It is concerned with the things that made your grandma and grandpa happy, either at the thought of easier work, or an increase in those all too fleeting leisure hours of yesterday. "Undecided voters are making the polls with less than three weeks away from election day." Three questions came to my mind after reading this statement: why are these people holding back on their decision. Is it the perception into the issues which is unclear? Or is it the way the issues are presented by both the candidates, through televised debates?

Some people I have talked to, who are undecided, claim they are being bombarded with facts about the issues, and are turned off by both candidates. There are those who are confused on the issues, who have given up and feel there is no real choice. Some people don't care who gets in office; they don't even care about the issues involved.

Then, there is the undecided American watching the televised debates, perhaps not perceiving the issues but rather watching how the issues are being presented. They sit and watch hostility between the two opponents; they watch both candidated suffer from self-inflicted set-backs.

When I interview people, many times I'll get superficial reasons for voting for either candidate. I wonder how much perception these people have into the issues. To me, it matters not how the issues are presented, but what the people understand about the issues.

Glamour Magazine is looking for a senior woman who is interested in being their campus representative "to voice opinions on various issues, to sample and evaluate new products and to keep (Glamour) up-to-date on campus trends and developments". Good Movies: Sinking Fast! — Salisbury

This year we have tried to provide the very best in film entertainment; perhaps I should rephrase that: we have provided the very best in film entertainment here at Juniata. With three different movies a week showing on campus, we have literally offered what was formerly a year's worth of film in one term alone. Being film students-fanatics ourselves, we assumed, rather optimistically, that the student response would be a favorable one, i.e., that folks would show up and support the film series (or at least one of them). Obviously we misjudged the nature of student apathy (we thought that you didn't care about morality and mid-terms) and, as a consequence, we have had to shut down one series (the Monday night Thirties Musicals) and disappoint the faithful handful of film-goers who frequented the Cave once a week. Expecting more revenue than we have received, we overspent our budget. This was our mistake, but into debt by the grace of the student body go we.

If we are to have films at all next term we must show more return on our spending. We're not out for a profit; breaking even would be fine, but so far we haven't even made half of our projected expenditure. I hate to talk finances and grovel for your pennies, especially when the movies we are showing are excellent, varied, and truly worth the price of admission. I'd rather tell you about the art of the movies than the dismal financial state we're in, but if the apathy quotient remains as high as it's been, there can be no more films. Just consider that for a moment: this campus, this winter, no movies to ease the mental frostbite which inevitably occurs here. It's your choice. By saving the movies for next term, you might be saving yourself a lot of boredom, suicidal depressions, and the chronic state of winter-at-Juniata entropy.

We would like to sponsor a Beatles film festival sometime next term as a coffeehouse (i.e., serving from the tap in a comfortable, congenial atmosphere) and for that we need funds. If you're interested, please support movies now.

"Need Spending Money?"

By Randy Kochel

What does "financial aid" mean to you? If you are already getting some help financially, it probably means a lot. Perhaps you would not even be at school were it not for that help. However, financial aid probably means next to nothing if you aren't getting any.

The folks on the first floor of Founder's Hall in the Financial Aid Office are there for everyone on campus. Most likely, the many JC students who aren't receiving aid fail to realize the many financially-oriented services that are available. Ken Grugel, the Director of Financial Aid, is anxious to familiarize this group of students with the capabilities of his office.

In past years, there existed a program of deferred payments. Under this program, it was not mandatory to pay the term's tuition in its entirety before the term began. This program is being phased out — the bill must now be paid before the student can register. If one lacks sufficient funds to pay the bill, there is a new loan program that will help. Under its provision, the student pays what he can and borrows the rest at 6% per year interest. Later that term, when money is available, the loan is paid off and a small fee is charged. This assistance is not considered to be financial aid.

Emergency student loans are available by contacting the Financial Aid Office. Students can obtain up to $50.00 for any valid emergency purpose.

While attending Juniata, if college money suddenly runs out, there are many options you can try before dropping out or transferring. Student loans at 7% interest are available from many banks. See your bank or ask Ken Grugel about the procedure for getting this money. Money is given to students under the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant program of the federal government. Every degree-seeking student is eligible to apply, but the final decisions are based upon need. The deadline for applications for the next academic year is March 1977.

In the event that the student fails to qualify for any of the above assistance, he is still eligible for a 6% loan from any of the seven philanthropic foundations listed in the back of the college catalogue. One of these, the Frueauff Foundation, is specially for those students with a program of emphasis in a health-related field.

Don't give up hope of graduate school because you think you can't afford it. The Financial Aid Office can be of service in the search for the needed cash.

Need spending money? The Financial Aid Office is now the "clearing house" for all on-campus jobs, so see the folks there first. They know where all campus job opportunities are. For jobs off campus, check the Placement Center in the basement of Ellis College Center.

So stop over at Ken Grugel's office and check out the possibilities. It's easy, costs nothing to try, and very well might be worth your time.

What's Going on in Plato's Cave

By Brenda Geiger

This year, on the campus, there has been a new addition to the realm of our theatre world. It is known as Plato's Cave. All of you have received some information as to what movies are being shown, but not as many of you have actually visited the cave. I feel that it is a very worthwhile, enjoyable experience, but you don't have to listen to me, hear what your fellow students are saying.

Monte Kemmler feels that "The movie selection is really good and the idea is great. They need a little more work to make it more appealing because the atmosphere is "cold', but I hope the program continues in the future and succeeds." Denise Balmer, a regular Plato's Cave goer, said, "I like it, I come very Friday night. It's not very expensive, especially if you have a series ticket. There is a good variety with some off-beat films. The acoustics are bad, but if you like science fiction, you should come."

Donna Caton stated, "I love science fiction and this is a great idea. Last year we didn't have movies every weekend, and now there is more variety. The two showings give you plenty of time to work it in your schedule. You can watch the movie and still have plenty of time to party." "I'm not too crazy about the thirties' Musicals," said Bill Clemens, "but the science fiction is great. It should be publicized more, something more than just a synopsis of the movie." David Corman liked "the science fiction and the idea of Plato's Cave, especially when it appeals to a special audience." Newell Bascomb feels that "they thave a good selection, are fun to watch, and are usually run well. There is a relaxed atmosphere and popcorn is sold for 25¢ a bag." "There is a great variety. Some are interconnected, some are obscure, but they are all good," said Jim Donahue. "It's in a trial period and if it has a successful first term it has a better chance for grants to improve the surroundings for the second term." Jean Woodruff added, "Eventually they hope to turn the backroom' into a projection room, which will make it look

A Report on the Juniata Senate

By N.J. Rowe

At the October 13th Student Government meeting, the Budget and Management committee gave a report that brought some active discussion among the Senators. Two new proposals were brought up, and the Freshman class was granted money.

The Budget and Management committee chairman, Randy Good, stated that the committee proposed giving the Rugby club $30, Judo $150, and Tri-Beta nothing. His explanation was as follows: Rugby was reportedly getting $100-$150 plus equipment from the athletic department; the money given to Judo was to help meet expenses for their extensive travel plans; Tri-Beta was making adequate funds on their own efforts, such as the mum sale, and needed no assistance from Student Government.

President Brian Smith explained that the criteria for giving funds to a club was based on the club's financial needs and whether they took the initiative to meet their expenses on their own.

Vice-President George Trapp was concerned over "the huge diversity" between the money allocated to the Rugby and Judo clubs. He felt that the amount given to the Judo club would set a precedence for future years.

The proposed funds was finally put to a vote. George Trapp, Tom Adamson, Kren Stone and Craig Phillips voted against the proposal while all other Senators present voted in favor. The proposal passed as stated by the Budget and Management committee.

Senators Tom Adamson and Todd Kulp are looking into a new proposal to have a shuttle bus going to and from Penn State on Saturdays. There was some concern that the drivers of these buses might have to take a special driver's test. A second proposal was to have students go to the Huntingdon town council meetings every month. Both proposals are being investigated.

Brian Smith reported that the Freshman class has traditionally received money from Student Government on a loan basis, not just given as he had thought. The Senate, however, voted to grant the Freshman class $40 which does not have to be repaid.

Note: Several prople are curious as to how I chose the title for this column. Well, down in Washington when the Senate convenes, the spectators (and members of the press) watch the proceedings — you guessed it — From the Gallery!

Pro-Con:

Homecoming and Equality

A few students have complained that homecoming is biased toward females and feel that male candidates should also be picked. So a small survey was conducted on the male population of Juniata and the results were fairly conclusive. After a look of surprise, most reactions to the question, "Do you think guys should run for Homecoming?" were negative. For example one person reacted by saying, "I wouldn't like it. I mean that I wouldn't want to see just a guy run for it, but a boy-girl couple would be good. You could have a King and Queen that are a campus couple."

One football player said, "The hell if I would vote for any guy."

Another comment was, "It is kind of corny but it could happen. You could pick out the faggots in the school that way."

Other comments go. "I think it is jerked off."

"When males overtake female roles then it is time to transfer out of this school," said one Juniata female voice.

So overall it can be seen that the idea of men running for Homecoming is met by opposition by both the male and female populace. However, they were a few atypical comments that need be reported to give voice to both sides, although the one is clearly the majority.

One digusted male student who was fed up with the social scene said, "We have more handsome guys here than we do pretty females. I think that the candidates would be better looking if they were picked from guys."

The most questionable and strange answer was from a guy that said, "Oh sure, I think its great."

It takes all kinds and I guess we certainly have our share of different people here at Juniata, but then you knew that. Thank Providence that majority still rules. Men will not run for Homecoming in the near future or with the support of the student body.

Along Muddy Run

By D. Brown

There is an event on Juniata campus that is truly enjoyable, not only after the purchasing, but also during the actual purchase. Obviously, I'm not talking about the bookstore or Tote. What I am talking about is the "Slave Auction." This particular event, which is going to take place within the next two weeks, is an incident to which upperclassmen look forward. The reason is simple: if you buy a slave, you are able to have that slave perform all sorts of duties (I think I'll leave it at that). Also there is the enjoyment you experience while purchasing your slave and seeing others go through the process of buying slaves of their own.

The reason there is a Slave Auction is twofold. The first and probably the most important reason is so the freshman class can earn some money, and the second is so the upperclassmen can have their rooms cleaned before Parents Weekend.

For the benefit of those who have never been to the Slave Auction while living here at Juniata, and also for the freshmen, an auction is what takes place. A group of freshmen stand in front of an audience, so the bidders can see exactly for what they are bidding. The success of the auction hinges on three factors: 1) how many slaves the freshmen class can muster, 2) the number of people in the audience, and 3) the amount of money the people in the audience have.

Remember: all of the money taken in by the slave auction goes to the freshmen class, so get your check books out. Have an enjoyable evening by supporting the Slave Auction.

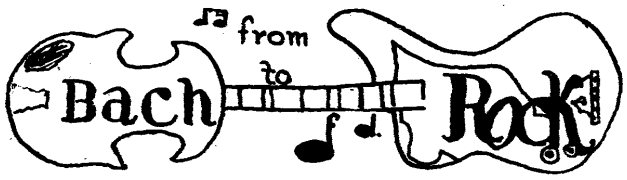
VOL. XXXII No. 5 — Oct. 21, 1976



By Chuck Kirby and Gregg Ralston

This week we will examine two more recently released albums on the music scene. The latest album by Orleans, "Walking and Dreaming" on Asylum records, features a wide variety of styles and songs. Most notable of the group's distinctive traits is a very distinct percussion section. A good bump number, "Reach," features some quite good organ work. The surprise ending yields a total change of pace, and a sound very similar to that of Elvin Bishop. "What I Need" is a definite and distinctive arrangement featuring excellent guitar work, an effective ending, and has potential for good dancing. "Waking and Dreaming", the title cut, really speeds along after a very slow, sedate start — almost as if there are two different cuts within the same number. There is a great guitar solo inter-mixed with some very subtle organ keyboards, ending in a very smooth fade out. For some good non-electric guitar work "Sails" fills the bill quite nicely in a short concise way to end the album side.

Side two starts with the current hit, "You're Still the One." It's a typical top-40 arrangement having good percussion with your typical run-of-the-mill love song lyrics. "The Bum" is untypical of the rest of the album. It may be rhythum and blues or even boogie, but it's definitely in the style of the Manhattan Transfer, featuring an excellent guitar solo with some great concluding remarks among a menagerie of guitars. If you like some top-notch brass work (trumpets in particular), "Golden State" will probably be your number. Finally, the absolute gem of the album is, without doubt, "Spring Fever!" It's top quality disco, kind of funky, and flows well with some notable guitar work. The outstanding quality of the number is probably the best saxophone work we've heard for some time. Truly great! Daryl Hall and John Oates, "Bigger Than Both of Us" on RCA is a real disappointment. It is a very, very poor attempt at heavy rock, something Daryl and John can't seem to handle or effectively grasp. The overall album flavor has a definite air of dissonance. "Back Together Again" has an initially good start with the sax, good overall orchestration, and very smooth and mellow refrains. The draw back is that it is too choppy. "Rich Girl" is just blatantly poor for Hall and Oats. "Crazy Eyes" utilizes a quiet start with the refrains flowing well, but once again it is rather choppy with a poor ending, leaving one standing there waiting for more that never materializes.

"Do What You Want — Be What You Are" has an excellent beat, is smooth, and free flowing. This is the typical Hall and Oats with great orchestration and a nice fade out. "Kerry" almost seems experimental in that the lyrics are not totally Daryl Hall's work.

The flip side offers more of the same. "London, Luck, and Love" is too jagged with many rough edges. The constant bass tone is boring and repetitious. "Room to Breathe is just definitely not Hall and Oats, and has to be the nadir of the album. It doesn't even remotely resemble any of their better past works. "You'll Never Learn" flows more smoothly and perks up a little with more distinctive overall quality. The only real salvageable cut, "Falling", is very quiet and mellow flowing along very smoothly. This number is definitely more like the old days of Hall and Oats with the addition of a synthesizer giving an effectively eery quality. Overall, the album is a real disappointment, knowing what Daryl and John are capable of, such as their "Abandoned Luncheonette" album, 'et-al. They should stick to that favorable mellow material — what they do best!

Here we go loop t loo

"Loop t loo" (sic) is the name of the student production set for Parents Day. It will be presented by Masque Club and friends in Oller Hall, October 29 and 30 at 8:15 p.m. "Loop t loo" is an original production created by Juniata College students and faculty. It is produced by Andy Murray who describes it as "a considerable variety show . . . and hour and fifteen minutes of mad-cap, multi-media, tom-foolery held together by thinly disguised theology." The production is designed to display a wide range of student talent from photography to pot throwing.

For Andy Murray, multi-medial production is familiar territory. He wrote and produced "Celebration for a Fuzzy Kingdom" in 1967. In Portland, Oregon, he established a multi-media troup which produced "7th Seal, Jr." and "Dust Song", both of which were broadcast and kinescoped by NBC in Portland and the latter of which won a national award as the best single religious production done by a non-professional group in 1970. At Juniata, he has assisted the Deputation Club in producing "As Little Children" which has had more than thirty showings in five different states and his myth symbol and ritual classes have presented two production, "Gross National Paradise" and "Adman and Eve".

"I like the multi-media," Andy says, "because it gives the performing community a chance to create its own material. In most forms of production one takes a given set of material which in turn determines the needed talents. Working with multi-media allows one to turn the equation around. It is possible to take what is available and incorporate that as a part of the total event. On the other hand, it is more than simply a talent show. There is usually a point to good multi-media work even if the point is simply the randomness of events. "Loop t loo", for example, is really about death and rebirth. Not particulary in a heavy or deeply philosophical way, but in a celebrative way. It is a meditation about the mystical way in which life (biological and relational) seems to continually regenerate itself, building new possibilities out of pain, and, at the same time, how death is an ever present reality even in the midst of the most exhuberent creation."

"Loop t. loo" will have eight movements: The Procession, The Orange, The Rainstorm, The Faces, The Balloon, The Commercial, The Children, The Pot. If you are in the mood for something a little different, don't miss it.

more like a movie theatre. If it is supported now, there is a better chance of this happening." Connie Walker feels that "They have really done a good job in the selection of the films. I really love science fiction. Now we can see movies three times a week and there is something to please everyone."

Doug Wood came up with another viewpoint, "Friday nights are boring and this is something to do. It relaxes me before a Saturday afternoon football game and takes my mind off back home." "I also came to see Rachael Welch," he joked. Jim Connor added, "We ran out of beer and there was nothing else to do." 'Cats', (he didn't give a last name), came because, "I heard it was good and I like the movies they play." Earl W. said, "I like science fiction movies and these are pretty good. The only problem was the acoustics were really bad and the seats could be more comfotable." Kit Salisbury summed up her feelings about Plato's Cave with, "Movies are it, period."

Come and find out what they are talking about tomorrow.

"Spiritwood" Performs

By Michelle Fistek

Last Friday night "Spiritwood" performed at the Pub Coffeehouse in the Women's Gym. "Spiritwood" consists of Lee and Larry Lawson from Lewisburg. They usually perform at other small colleges in the area. Lee plays piano and guitar and her husband Larry plays harmonica and guitar. Their voices blend together well, creating a pleasant sound. Their piano arrangements were especially interesting and beautiful. The Lawsons did some of their own music, and English folk song, some Janis Ian, and a Dan Fogelberg song. Their music was lyrical and rather low-keyed. The crowd seemed to want a wider variety of music however, pershaps some rowdier fare. The acoustics in the gym detracted from the music, sometimes it was easier to hear the people at the next table than "Spiritwood."

The turnout at the coffeehouse was disappointing. Everyone complains about the lack of activities, but when we do have them, no one takes advantage of them. Let's start attending these functions so that we don't lose them!

The Latest Reincarnation

By D.J.

This year the Juniata College Band is the largest it has been since its "latest reincarnation" three years ago. Under the direction of Ibrook Tower, the size of the band has nearly doubled since last year alone. But, of course, "the more the merrier!"

Although there is only one band, we are very versatile. We play as a pep band for home football games, as well as the usual concert music and jazz band music. In addition our band provides the background music for stage plays and musicals.

Rehearsals consist of working together to make music as well as having a good time. Although the music isn't very difficult, it's really satisfying to have a part in the final performance. Everyone loves applause!

If you want to hear us play; this year's agenda so far consists of:

home football games
Nov. 3&4 Seminar: children's play
Nov. 5&6 Siminar: Melodrama
Dec. 17 Christmas Concert
March 27 Spring Concert
May 22 Commencement

Rehearsals are held each Tuesday and Thursday from 6:00 to 8:00 P.M. in the Ellis Hall Ballroom.

Homecoming: Wow!

Fellow '76ers,

Hi, how is it going with you? Well Homecoming '76 is over and I'm dead tired. Oh, not from the busy day's activities, although those on Center Board who planned this weekend did do a very good job. By the way, Katie says hi . . . and wants to know when you're coming to visit. Anyway, the reason I'm so tired is from talking to everyone who returned for this weekend.

The weekend began for me on Friday night when everyone from our class and those other fine Juniatians met at Kelly's to begin the age old rites of homecoming. We know the real purpose of homecoming is just for good friends to get together and find out what's new since the last time we saw each other. It's strange — no matter what class you belong to, all of us alumni belong to one big gamily, and we were all happy to see each other again. . . That reminds me! Everyone at Kelly's was asking about you, so you were missed.

Well, back to the weekend. Saturday was a beautiful day for the game as well as the other events planned for the day. The Special Events committee of Center Board planned a small colorful parade in which each class of campus organization could have entered a mini-float. The theme this year was "World Cultures," and the Freshman class won first place in the float competition, while the Junior and Senior classes came in second and third, respectively. The mini-floats were just as creative as those forty-foot monstrosities we used to build. (I swear I used to dream of stuffing chicken wire after building one of those things!) The big events were the football game and half-time show, and the rugby match and the women's field hockey game-which we won! Remember Bonnie Makdad? She was crowned the 1976 Homecoming Queen by Cherie Dettmar-our own Centennial Queen. I must say the program was well done, and everyone I talked with enjoyed it thoroughly. The Homecoming Court consisted of Lisa Masood, Freshman attendant; Anna Lisa Mulhollen, Sophomore attendant; Carolyn Setzer, Junior attendant; and Katie Middleton, the Senior attendant.

Other than the half-time show, the rest of the time was spent talking among friends. One of the refreshing things was the lack of nostalgia in our conversations. Sure, I like to talk about the good old days, but not all the time. When I see people I haven't seen for some time, I want to find out what they are doing now and not just what we did in years past . . . we all remember the past.

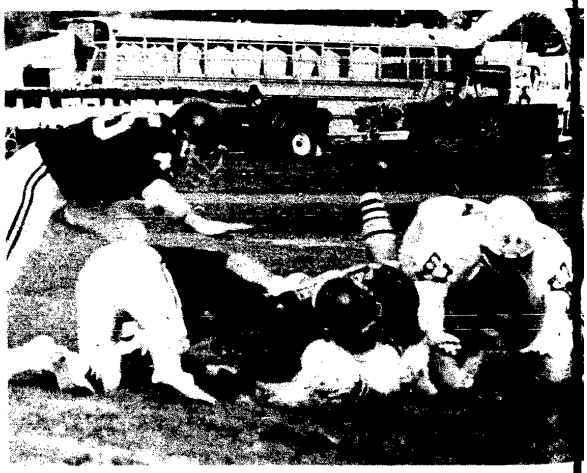
After the game (Juniata lost by one point), most of the alumni scattered into small groups to party and enjoy the company of one another. It was a funny feeling: seeing these people that we lived with for four years, now having families of their own or making their way in the outside world. I know that, even as we sat together like we always did, our lives are slowly developing into seperate paths; soon the only link many of us will have will be Juniata and the friendships we found here.

Sound sad? Not really — not one alumnus would want to return to this place as they entered it four years ago.

For Saturday evening's activity there was a presentation by The Great Kramer & Co. in Oller Hall. I heard he put on a good show, but few people attended . . per usual.

Well, its now Sunday afternoon and most of the alumni have gone and most of the college community have returned to their books. Homecoming can be sad when it is time to say goodbye, but how great it is to say "hello" again when we all return. We will return, and, for those who come after us, welcome to Homecoming 1977, 78, & 79.

See you next year,
Sam!



Alumni Note Differences

By Joann Sandone

Each year, Juniata College opens its doors with some type of change behind them. Whether it is a change in policy or just a physical one, there is no stagnance present at Juniata. One cannot help but think about what Juniata will be like twenty years after they leave, and if the changes will be a shock.

Homecoming Weekend 1976, presented a numerable amount of alumni with the opportunity to view this year's changes at Juniata. When questioned about changes throughout the years at Juniata and their ideas about them, replies were generally similar concerning the strictness and formalities. Bob and Sylvia Richard, class of 1954 and 1952 respectively, remember the days when formal dress was required to dinner. Men had to wear suit-jackets and ties, and women were required to wear a dress. Mrs. McCarren, class of 1951, recalls the straight-laced Juniata of former years, "I'll never forget the first night here, all freshmen girls were downstairs in the Women's Lounge . . . the Women's Dean of Students told us, 'You smokers may as well pack your bags and leave, you are not the Juniata type girl'."

Mr. McCarren notes that those were the days when cigarette papers were used for rolling tobacco. One aspect which Mrs. McCarren, who has had two daughters attend Juniata, noticed is that it (Juniata) is certainly more expensive!

Bill Martin, class of 1959 and presently Placement Director at Juniata, commented on the fact that at the age of 24, and a veteran of the Armed Forces, he was not permitted to go the Kelly's Korner. Even if it was for only a sandwhich, Kelly's was off limits because alcoholic beverages were served there. If Mr. Martin, or any other Juniata student was spied there he could face the prospect of saying goodbye to Juniata. Imagine a Tuesday night at Kelly's void of Juniata students!

But, as Mrs. Richards noted, "Juniata mirrors society, it is keeping pace with progress. Society has become more casual and so has Juniata." Today's students are prepared to accept more responsibilities because they've grown up accepting more, at an earlier time than their parents did. If students from the fifties were given the liberties today's students have, they probably would not know how to handle themselves. They were accustomed to strictness. (It didn't seen like cruel and unusual punishment to them as it does to today's student).

Bill Martin feels that today's students are more mature than those in the fifties and sixties. He feels that students are now more serious about their future, they want a job, while keeping self-fulfillment in mind. Unlike students of the early sixties, he feels that today's students realize that social changes and advancement can be accomplished by getting to the inner cause and being a part of the working society. A general concensus of the alumni interviewed was that the students today are more mature. They feel that this is partly due to the fact that present day students are not as much "under the thumb" of the administration, and are allowed to judge many more matters for themselves.

Through the years, Juniata has progressed along with society. Rules have changed and buildings have been knocked down and rebuilt. And every year changes come about. So, don't despair, maybe someday students will be permitted to walk in the halls with a drink in their hand.

Getting Along With Your "Roomate?"

It's that time of the year again! The days and nights are giving in to Old Man Winter, and forcing our young, vital, and energetic minds and bodies to fritter away behind a desk stacked eyeball-deep with books. Think of it: dreary and cold outside, dull and cold inside; your creativity stifled by four walls, boring text readings, and a hibernating roommate. You sit and stare at that bleak lamp on your desk and wonder if the sun will shine again before April ... and why does your roommate sleep and study all the time? Why doesn't somebody do something? The wind outside the window makes more noise than your dorm hall. And why is your roommate still sleeping?

What you need is a little deviation from your "yukko" daily routine ... it's almost Halloween, and October is the month for mischief ... and you wouldn't want your roomie and friends to miss that, now would you? That's right, let your stifled mind create a few pranks, just for excitement — and then make life more interesting for yourself and your poor, deprived roomie! Below are some suggestions (for starters) that have proven effective in the past.

1. "Haunted" room. If your roomie scares easily in the dark, you are in luck. Use the power of suggestion to make him think you are being visited by someone or something. Flying rubber bands or raisins can be used effectively to convince him that a poltergeist is on the loose. Try sneaking out of bed onto the floor to move furniture; better yet, reach up and grap a leg or an arm. (This prank is worth a scream or two!) Variation: suspend some creepy rubber bats or spiders from the ceiling and unscrew the ceiling light bulbs. There's nothing like having one of these little delights brush against your face while you are groping for a light!

2. Papered In. Moving away from "scare tactics," there is nothing comparable to a traditional "good morning" with toilet paper (or plastic wrap or aluminum foil) taped across someone's door. The patterns can vary from a simple parallel stripping to a complex weave, and, with a little expense, can be tastefully done in pastels or prints. The ultimate objective is to have the half-asleep riser witlessly walk into the barricade. Variations: empty beer and soda cans are excellent noise makers, and even bricks have been used effectively.

3. Bed Games. Remember summer camp and putting rocks and toads in the counselor's sleeping bag? Consider these as graduate studies: Short-sheeting 103; Collapsing Bed 201; Raisins and Special K 300. For an independent study, relocating a bed, desk, and closet in a bathroom or lounge can be a group experience in planning as well as interior decorating.

4. "Knock knock..." Door pranks are infinite in number. Among the popular ones are Noah's Ark (a wastebasket of water propped against the door) and shaving cream or toothpaste under the knob or on the floor. And, of course, there is nothing quite like coming face to face with a wombat!

It is doubtful that your roomie will sleep as much after experiencing any of your "creative spirit" ideas; and your friends will certainly be waiting for your next "visit". Have fun fighting boredom, but remember: don't try anything potentially dangerous — be silly, but safe; and should you happen to be sitting behind your desk and your sleeping roommate appears to be grinning or sprouting horns, prepare yourself! He certainly is not asleep!!!

Unturkey Is For Turkies

By Barbara Frezca

In last week's issue of the "Juniatian", the members of UNTURKEY displayed one of the poorest examples of "Jack Anderson Journalism" I've ever seen in their effort to recruit others to their vegetarian cause.

Before I continue, "Jack Anderson Journalism" is a term reined by our high school newspaper staff to describe a jounalistic technique employed by many columnists, organizations, etc. It refers to the support or augmentation of a weak argument with a few choice facts and grisly examples that make the writer's point of view seem all the more like the "right" point of view.

A vegetarian Thanksgiving dinner whose purpose is to save grain, that would ordinarily be used to feed livestock, for the hungry is an idea that is well worth the consideration of many of us who are able to eat like royalty compared to the millions of starving people in the world. It is also true that Americans suffer a high incidence of colo-rectal cancer and are often overweight because of a diet that is too high in meats and starches and lacking in fresh fruits, vegetables and whole grain fibre.

Even so, it is perfectly natural for man as an omnivore to eat meats. Meat is one of the ways in which we obtain complete proteins and saturated fats which are needed by the body in certain amounts; and can only be obtained from eggs, dairy products and animal tissues.

Animals which are raised as livestock are raised for one purpose only: their eventual slaughter. Their deaths are neither cruel nor unjust. But the decision to eat meats or not is one that an individual should be free to make without having to feel guilty about or having to rationalize the "rightness" of this decision to himself or to anyone else.

Your objections to the use of animals for research purposes in scientific experimentation opens a whole 'nother can of bean sprouts — and one which you obviously choose to ignore.

In the sciences, there are two methods for obtaining information: observation and experimentation. There are usually very limited circumstances under which human beings can be observed with relation to a given set of conditions; and even if this type of observation was possible more often, there would always be unknown variables involved because the experimenter has no control over his subjects or their environment. This is why experimentation is employed whenever possible.

Since it is difficult to conduct experiments without subjects, and the use of humans in many experiments is not only unethical but illegal, it is only logical that as close a substitution as possible for a human under a given set of conditions is used. Pigs are used in many experiments because anatomically their organs and organ structure are very close to those of man. Rats exhibit many primary social behavioral responses similar to ours, and are also suceptible to many of the same diseases as man. Primates have a highly developed cerebral cortex compared to other animals. Dogs not only have behavioral responses which are relatively easily patterned, but are easier to use for experiments where they must be strapped or remain still for long periods of time; which helps greatly when they must be harnessed to various testing devices.

Although the systematic death of laboratory animals may seem cruel to many persons, the information gathered from their deaths under controlled conditions may be instrumental in not only making our lives more comfortable, but may even save your life some day.

Blind fanaticism is not the way to recruit a MODES grad into an organization such as UNTURKEY — especially if he or she is involved in some sort of scientific research. Your statement that "all can be accomplished through vegetarian work" can easily be turned against you.

Did you ever stop to consider the fact that scientific experimentation with plants has shown that they may be capable of expressing emotions? If you decide to have a head of lettuce or a carrot for dinner, there's no way it can even cry out let alone struggle to get away. Because of this one could say that vegetarians are just as cruel, if not more so, than people who eat meat or use animals for research purposes. I suggest that next time you present an argument you back up every sweeping generalization with proof. Not all of us are turkies!

Getting To Know You

By: Elizabeth Borton
Thecla Coppolo
Sandra Taylor

We would like to introduce you to Howard Mermel, a seventeen-year-old high school student who is taking courses here at Juniata as part of the Huntingdon Enrichment Program. "They take the students who excel ... they waive the freshman classes. I do pretty well in school, my aptitudes are English and drama— I'm not really good in Science or Math. I got by, by the skin of my teeth, but I got all of my required courses out of the way." Howard is presently taking Speech Communications. "Speech communications is what I'd like to major in."

Howard's musical interests center around Paul Simon. "I just like his lyrics." Between attending high school and college, Howard finds it hard to discover spare time. "I don't have too much ..." Howard is the editor of his school yearbook and is attacking this position with a special forverence. "I'm editor of the yearbook — actually I'm the coordinating editor in chief ... I'm actually the creative consultant ... Our school is notorious for putting out a mediocre yearbook and we're trying to change it. We're revamping the entire thing." Howard is also involved in community theater and in his school band. "I was in one of the community theater's plays this summer — it was one of those Bicentennial things. Dr. Crouch directed it ... When I was in third grade, I started out on the clarinet and switched to the saxophone in my sophomore year in high school. I was in the district band and I'll be in it this year."

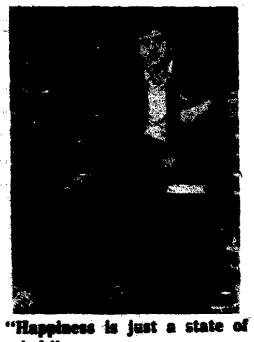
Howard plans to attend Penn State next year. "I'm planning on going to Penn State. I had thoughts of going to a bowl game with the Blue Band, but the way Paterno is playing this year I don't know. I'd like to major in broadcasting — network news — something like that. I'd like to act, but I don't see any future in it and I don't plan on going to Los Angeles to become a starving actor."

As far as being a high school student taking courses here, Howard says, "I felt funny at first — it's second nature to me now though. Living in a town with a college is strange ... the town has so few activities, the culture the college brings in is great. The town in my opinion has very little concept of culture ... In a small town like this everyone knows everyone and the college is like a separate community ... After I graduate from college I don't plan on coming back. Until I was in high school I didn't realize how small the town was. It's a nice place to grow up though."

To Howard, "Making life better for other people," is what makes life worth living. "I sort of live by the philosophy 'do unto others as you would have them do unto you' — but that really doesn't apply to life now ... I think happiness is just a state of mind — it's just putting everything in the right proportion — you have to put everything in the right perspective."

Howard's goal in life is to "go as far as I can in broadcasting — you can't really set a goal too high because if you can't reach it you'll be disappointed."

We would like to add that we feel that it is a wonderful opportunity for a high school student to be exposed to college academics if, and when, they are prepared to do so. "Educational opportunity" is so often a token term, and we are thankful that it does not apply to this situation.



"Happiness is just a state of mind."

Women's V-B Team Extends Winning Streak

By Greg Ransom

The Women's Volleyball team extended its winning record this past Wednesday by defeating the Bisons of Bucknell in the best of five matches (15-7, 9-15, 16-14, 15-13). Previously undefeated Bucknell, in their match agamst J.C., twice saw apparent victories dissolved into losses as the Indians rallied in both the third and fourth matches to upset the visitors.

J.C. won the initial match thanks to the powerful and consistent serving of Robin Morgan. Bucknell re-grouped for the second match and won quite convincingly as the Indians began to falter.

In the final two matches the Indian Six responded to the pressure which Bucknell had applied. In the third match Bucknell vollied to a 12-5 lead, while in the fourth the Bisons jumped to a 12-7 advantage. Juniata's freshmen Mary "Lissy" Sencindiver and Nancy Zinkham played surperb offensive and defensive during each of these "come-from-behind" victories.

Rugby Notes

The Juniata College club rugby football team took a 1-1 record to their Homecoming game against the Buffalo Valley club from Lewisburg, Pennsylvania. In a match characterized by good play and hard hitting by both teams, Juniata lost the match 16-8. Juniata did all of its scoring in the first half. The first try was scored by senior Steve Shultis on a short plunge from the four yard line. The second try was scored on an excellent play by Jim "Moose" Kistler who blocked a kick knocking the ball into the opponents' endzone and then fell on it for the try. Both conversions were missed by Juniata. Since only an "A" game was played, the second half for the Juniata club was marked by massive substitutions with the remaining ruggers. A majority of the substitutes were comprised of rookies who did not have much playing time. Although these ruggers lacked vital experience in rugby, they showed much character in their style of play and determination.

Buffalo Valley scored one try and a field goal in the first half. They then scored three field goals in the second half.

Alumnus Greg "Rookie" Stoyer played for Juniata in the second half. Alumnus Lee Flinner served as game referee. Juniata will host the Indiana University of Pennsylvania rugby club for its next match on October 23.

"Then, with less than Four Minutes left to Play, it Happened"

By Greg Ransom

Lycoming College came to Huntingdon with one thing in mind, to upset the Indians and hopefully gain a rating for the Lambert Cup Award. The game was just as close as predicted. If there was any advantage it went to J.C. since they were the home team, although Lycoming's nationally ranked defense made themselves at home.

The Indians scored first in this contest on a field goal by Stan Nosal. After several series of plays by both teams, Lycoming began to move the ball, but this drive was stopped by Marx Alex, who successfully intercepted the Warrior pass to end the first substantial drive of the game.

Juniata recieved the first major break of the game, recovering a Warrior fumble on the Lycoming one-yard line. On the following play Allen Lipsein dove over the left tackle for paydirt. Nosal added the conversion kick and J.C. seemed to be on their way to a decisive victory.

Lycoming, after receiving the ensuing kickoff, moved the ball the length of the field, and at the half the score was 10-7 in Juniata's favor.

Again in the third period it was Stan "the Man" Nosal who began the scoring. This field goal of thirty yards placed Stan first on the all-time field goal kicking charts here at J.C., surpassing Mike McNeal who had previously kicked twelve field goals in his career.

Now with the score 13-7 it seemed as though Juniata's defense was beginning to take command of the game. Then, with less than four minutes left to play, it happened. With Lycoming in a third and five situation the Warrior quarterback threw a short pass to his wide reciever. This short-yardage play, however, went the distance and won the game for the Warriors as an Indian defender missed a tackle, freeing the visitor of any obstacles to the goal line. Now the Indians were behind for the first time of the afternoon 14-13.

JV Gridders Triumph

By David Robison

Following an opening game 20 to 7 setback to Gettysburg, the JV football team scored a 32 to 27 come-from-behind victory over Shippensburg. Coach Rossie led the team, in the absence of Mr. McNeil, to victory on Shippensburg's field.

The game's winning drive began on JC's own seven-yard line with just 3:27 left in the game. The key play was a "fourth down and 25 yards-to-go" pass completion to Todd Blankenstein. The touchdown was scored by Pat McGoldrick with just 24 seconds left on the clock.

Coah Rossi felt that the offense played well, led by quarterbacks Tony Ricciardulli and Wayne Emerick. Doug Wood was the leading ground gainer with 37 carries for 138 yards and 3 touchdowns. Steve Ciesla and Jim Jones had good games as receivers with the latter scoring a touchdown. Coach Rossi also sighted Kent Driebelbis, a defensive end, and Fred Byler, a linebacker, as having good games defensively.

Hockey Team Wins 2

By Marge Morgan

Last week was a very profitable week for the Women's Field Hockey Team. The team won both of its games to increase its record to 3-2.

On Tuesday, October 12, the team hosted Williamsport Area Community College. In the first half the varsity squad outclassed the Williamsport team and played to a 9-0 half time lead. The Junior Varsity squad played in the second half and scored 2 more goals to give Juniata an 11-0 victory. The scorers were Alison Reeves (3 goals), Bonnie Books (3), Ann Cromer (2), Janet Bechtel (1), Shawn Hansen (1), and Cindy Hastings (1).

In the Homecoming game Juniata beat Lycoming College by a score of 2-0 to gain its second victory and its second shutout of the week. Despite slippery conditions, the attack managed to control the ball during most of the game. The goals were scored by sophomore co-captain Alison Reeves and freshman Lisa Masood.

The team has 2 home games this week. On Wednesday the team hosts Dickinson College and on Saturday the State College Field Hockey Club will come for a game. Come out to the games and cheer the Indians on to victory!

move. I thought it worked well, but wish more students would make themselves available to it."

Mr. Berrier, Associate Dean of Student Services, said he thought that the alumni "will be very impressed with the production and the performance of the coffeehouse, and how well the servicing went. I hope that type of attitude will be contagious."

Berrier felt that the new atmosphere would "help the whole climate of the campus." He hoped that those students who would not normally come to an event would make themselves available to the coffeehouse, because it was a great place to socialize. His personal views on the subject: "I loved it ... I thought it was fantastic."

Wayne Justham, Assistant Dean of Student Services and Director of Programming, agreed with Berrier when asked his views. He gave an ear-to-ear smile and a "Great!" "I'm really pleased the way the whole thing went." He expressed the concern that students should understand that the purpose of the new coffeehouse was. He claimed that for the October 15th coffeehouse, they were "anticipating a bigger crowd."

Unfortunately, that hope really did not come true; the second coffeehouse showed a sharp decline in attendance. There could have been several causes: the Homecoming weekend cut a little deeper into student expenses than usual; the night was rainy with the George Foreman fight and the Vice-Presidential debates on television; class members were frantically putting finishing touches on their floats; some students did not particularly like the group ("Spiritwood"); more people are likely to stop in a dorm lounge than the women's gym where it was held.

Students who did attend the second coffeehouse, however, had mostly positive reactions. Kathy Splane said, "I loved it ... the atmosphere is really nice." Lynn Manseau and Cherly Ondechek agreed.

Tom Whittles stated "I think it's great." He came because "I heard a lot of people liked it." He did express some disappointment in the entertainment, however.

"I think it's a good idea," claimed Mike Salisbury. "Getting waited on is a nice thing."

Lee and Larry Lawson, of "Spiritwood", got there first experience playing at a coffeehouse serving beer here at Juniata last Friday. They claimed that they had played at bars, but never a college campus where beer was being served.

Lee stated, "It's different ... a good idea." Larry, her husband, agreed. When asked from a performer's standpoint if the beer changed the response from the audience in any way, Larry claimed, "I don't think beer influences (the audience) at all. (They) can't sit here and get blasted ... they can enjoy themselves."

From the views of students, administration, and performers, the new coffeehouse atmosphere was seen as a success. The alumni, although not directly contacted, would most likely see it as a positive move. Is the new coffeehouse here to stay? From the comments of the various interviews, it would seem so. But, only time will tell.

and wide, we have uncovered some of the most preposterously extravagant aggregations, spanning the spectrum of such traditional hobbies as numismatics and philately (coins and stamps for you novices), to the more unconventional conglomerations of insulators, ivory miniatures, country store items, and other such obscure memorabilia. Our endeavor is to bring "the age of enlightenment" to Juniata; to expand the average student's assemblage of empty beer cans, wine bottles, and rocks. As many crammed warehouses will attest to, collecting is not only asinine, but habit forming. After all, someone has to do it.

Questions-Answers

By Mark Wiener

I've been getting a lot of different questions concerning Food Service, so I went to the manager, Ed Straub, to help me answer them. One concerned the posted menus; the reason there hasn't been any. Ed told me that the printing and posting of the menus had always been the job of Student Government, but they hadn't come to him this year. (I went to see S. G. about the matter several times, but there was never anyone there.)

Someone else wondered why there was usually only one tray receiving window open, especially during the lunch rush hour. Ed said he had been working on the problem, but he can't find enough people willing to work a lunch time shift. So if you're not busy then and want a job, go see Ed.

Why haven't we seen much of that ever-popular macaroni salad? Well, it just hasn't been on the schedule that often. And you're in luck, Gary Mollers, Ed has been trying to get a supplier for yogurt. He may also be able to satisfy all you bagel lovers out there.

One thing Ed wanted me to mention was his every other Tuesday food meetings, open to anyone with suggestions and complaints. They have been poorly attended in the past, and chances are if you don't make your suggestions known to him, nothing is going to happen. So next time you have a question, (like, "Is it edible?"), take it to Ed.

GOOD MOVIES

By Salisbury Donahue

This Friday, Oct. 22, The End of August at the Hotel Ozone will be screened down at the Cave at the usual times, 7 and 9 p.m. This particular film involves the powerful retelling of a familiar sci-fi scenario: Man has once again all but destroyed himself with a nuclear war the the survivors, in this case a band of beautiful young women, must try to pick up the pieces of their lives, or, especially in this case, life itself. A beautifully filmed, chilling account of things to be, Hotel Ozone will satisfy even non-sci-fi tastes.

On campus this Tuesday in Alumni Hall, 8:15 p.m., Mel Brooks comes up with his first (and I think his funniest) film, The Producers. Zero Mostel and Gene Wilder (later the Waco Kid in Blazing Saddles) combine into one of the craziest comedies ever made. The plot is simple: Zero is a theatrical producer, Wilder is an accountant; Wilder figures out that Zero could make more money backing a failure than a hit. They go to it with a vengeance, screening dozens of terrible scripts until they hit the one that's sure to fail and bring them millions: "Springtime for Hitler," a musical about Adolf's zest for life written by a manic ex-Nazi who hides out with his pigeons on a rooftop somewhere in Manhattan. How could "Springtime" possibly back-fire into becoming a success? Only Brooks could do it: only Zero and Wilder would submit to it. Admission is, unfortunately, $1.50, but once you start watching it, you'll know it's worth it.

From the Juniatian of March 8, 1952.

ENTERING FROSH: I want to be a chemist. END OF FR. YEAR: I think I want to be a chemist. SOPH. YEAR: Why worry about it; it will take care of itself. JR. YEAR: The devil with chemistry; I'm going into the Army anyway. GRADUATION: Hey, I've got to go to work!

ENTERING FROSH: I came to college to study and improve myself. END OF FR. YEAR: The work is a lot harder than I expected, but it's worth it. SOPH. YEAR: This studying is getting me down. I think I'll live a little more next year. JR. YEAR: Why study? I'm going into the army next year anyway. GRADUATION: I wish I'd spent more time studying and less time at Skip's.

ENTERING FROSH: I'll stay out of activities until I get settled. END OF FR. YEAR: I foined a club and I really like it. SOPH. YEAR: I'm in so many activities, I can't find time to study. JR. YEAR: After all, activities are really more important than studying. GRADUATION: But, sir, I tell you my grades were low because I did so much extra-curricular stuff.

ENTERING FROSH: I'm still in love with my high school sweetheard. END OF FR. YEAR: These college girls are really the greatest. SOPH. YEAR: I'm really in love at last. JR. YEAR: I've gotten so many shafts lately I'm going to start selling bows and arrows. GRADUATION: Maybe my high school sweetheart will have me again.

ENTERING FROSH: I shall marry only a sweet, intelligent woman. END OF FR. YEAR: I'll marry only a good-looking woman. SOPH. YEAR: Sometimes, I hope to marry a woman. JR. YEAR: I think that I better marry a rich woman. GRADUATION: Darling, I sometimes wonder why I asked you to marry me.

ENTERING FROSH: Sex is something that can wait until I get through college. END OF FR. YEAR: I've been hearing that girls have a lot more to offer than intellectual conversation. SOPH. YEAR: Sex is all right. In fact, I really need more of it. JR. YEAR: Now this is an activity that is really worth-while — it certainly beats studying. GRADUATION: Why get married? I'm happy.

Artist Series Tickets Available

Complimentary tickets for the Juniata College Artist Series will be available to students, faculty, and staff at the Ellis Information Desk on Tuesday, October 26 and Wednesday, October 27. This two day extension of the complimentary period is provided because of the confusion that occurred when the tickets were originally issued. After the October 27 deadline there will be no complimentary tickets available.

Exhibit an Interest

By Margaret Broadwell

"Study abroad is an incredible experience." I'm sure you've heard this before. A chance to meet exciting people, encounter unique adventures, and become a more rounded person would intrigue just about anyone.

Unfortunately, not many pursue their interests. Some have the idea that "study abroad is just for language majors." This is incorrect. Any student with an interest has the opportunity.

If you're even slightly interested, show up for a Foreign Exchange Exhibit in Good Hall-room 102, Oct. 30 from 9 to 5. Don't come expecting to see mummies from Egypt, because "this is not so much a museum, as it is a show and tell." You'll share in slides, pictures, and many foreign objects, but more importantly, you can meet those with experience. Both students and faculty will be available, so ask questions — find out. Don't deny yourself the possible exceptional experiences that the future may hold for you.

Halloween Parade Offers Cash Prizes

Anyone interested in participating in the Huntingdon Jaycees Halloween Parade should contact Chuck Moore at 643-0350 or 643-1778. The parade will start at 6:30 p.m. on Tuesday, October 26, with the theme "Witches and Goblins Deal with the Spirit of Orange." There will be cash prizes for individual mummers and also for groups sponsoring the winning floats. The float prizes are first prize $100 through $25 for fourth prize.

'The Coat and Tie is a Drag'

By SALLY BRICK

At Juniata, education outside the classroom takes many forms. For pre-law students it is in the form of a unit called Legal Internship. This provides selected students the opportunity to apply previous knowledge to actually working with an attorney.

Presently, seven interns are involved in the program. One student, Stewart Lazowick, has arranged to work on an independent study variation of this unit in Altoona with Patterson, Evey, Routch, Black & Behrems, Attorneys at Law. Geoff Casher works in Huntingdon with the Public Defender Joseph Mullin. George Trapp assists District Attorney Stewart Kurtz in the office of Kurtz & Crafts. Michael Martin studies with the firm of Henry, Corcelius, Gates & Gill. Mike Sencendiver is in the county courthouse with Judge Terrizzi. Max Smith works with Charles Swigart and Ellen Snyder is with Newton Taylor and Bob Stewart.

Designed to provide insight into the legal profession, the program encompasses a great deal of study and work. Course requirements include 24 hours of office time per week, six hours of reading per week, bi-weekly discussions with others in the program, a final paper citing the value and gain from the program, and evaluations by faculty and advising lawyers. Office work includes a number of activities, such constituting more information about legal procedures, such as learning to research titles and briefs, learning to draw up initial wills, drafting letters, observing office management, and discussing and observing courtroom procedures, cases and legal strategies.

Selection for this unit is determined by a committee review. Each student submits an application which is acted upon a committee made up of Ralph Church, Ken Crosby, Greg Giebel, Harry Klug, Lee Nollau and William Vocke. Prerequisites consist of completing two introductory and four intermediate pre-law courses, along with permission from the council.

I had the opportunity to interview many people involved in the program and all of them were enthusiastic about its value and success.

Professor Vocke summarized the goal of the program by saying that it "provides firsthand, practical knowledge in an attempt to tie with classroom theory." He also claimed (as did many others) that it was the best experience for pre-law students, and that it was also excellent experience for anyone interested in political science.

Attorney Stewart Kurtz provided some background information about the program. As an independent non-credited project, a student worked for a term in Mr. Kurtz's office in the spring of 1975. This student's idea sparked the program, which started last year and is still being continued. Mr. Kurtz has had five interns working in his office and has en-

Antiques at Juniata

By PAM and ERIC

For those of you who were inundated by our last article, what we are referring to are simply antiques and collections. Sorry if we swamped you. This week we will be dealing with a collectible commodity, those distinctive little contrivances located at various intervals on telephone poles, more precisely, insulators. These functional apparati were designed to provide insulation between the electrically active wires and the supporting structure, hence their name: insulator. They are composed primarily of two different types of material, porcelain and glass. These little devils range in size from tiny, common household varieties, to more industrially magnanimous proportions. Flat to rounded, they provide interesting conversation topics after dislodgement from their native locales. Insulators are a source of satiating a collecting mania.

Obtaining the insulators can be done in any number of ways. The most economical means is by having a relative who works for the electric or telephone companies pilfer them. Willing employes can be coerced into deftly "procuring" these objects d'art. These fascinating trinkets can be salvaged from their ultimate demise by a kind-hearted patron of the arts. If not, one must revert to more conventional techniques of obtaining

The Super Dice Are Here!

Pennington, N.J. — Rolling across U.S. campuses this fall are the amazing Super Dice. College students are finding that these 12-sided dice more than double the excitement and fun of regular dice and board games. Each set contains three dodecahedrons — one red, one white, and one blue — plus instructions for six Super Dice games.

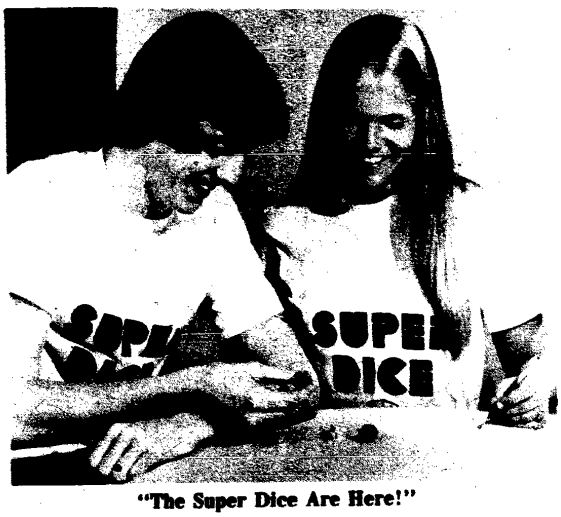
One advantage of Super Dice over ordinary dice is that each Super Die TM contains all the numbers from 0 to 9. Two Super Dice include all the numbers from 0 to 99. Three cover 0 to 999.

Designed by a lawyer playing dice games with his children during rainy afternoons at the beach, the Super Dice game pieces are slightly larger than ordinary dice. Eight sides of each die are reserved for the numbers 2 through 9. The other four sides are wild cards that can be used for purposes that vary according to the game being played. One of the four sides can be read as a 1 or an ace; the second as a 0 or 10; the third as a plus or 11; and the fourth as a minus or 12.

The plus symbol provides the opportunity for adding or doubling. In the Baseball Batting Averages TM game, for example, rolling a plus makes a single into a double. The minus can be used for subtracting — or for moving backwards on a game board. In the Academic Honors TM game, a minus sends the player back to school for remedial work.

The three Super Dice colors can represent different things — again depending on the game — and should be read in the order: red, white, and blue. In the Advance Hotel Bookings TM game, the number on the red die represents a specific month (1 through 12) of the year; the number on the white die indicates millions of dollars of revenue booked in advance; and the number on the blue die shows public opinion ratings of the conventions being booked. In the Stacking Boxes TM game, red equals height; white equals width; and blue equals length.

Instructions for these four games and two others — Work, Sleep, and Play TM and Floating Craps TM — accompany each set of Super Dice. The sets can be ordered for $6.95 each plus 50¢ postage and handling from Super Dice, P.O. Box 300, Pennington, N.J. 08534. N.J. residents should add sales tax.



"The Super Dice Are Here!"

They've Done It, Again!

This year, as in the past six years, the Freshman Drama Seminar of Juniata College will be presenting two types of plays — a children's comedy and a melodrama — as the opening of Juniata's theatrical season.

The first performance will be the favorite children's tale of Cinderella, on November 3 and 4, at 1:00 p.m. This comedy interpretation of Cinderella pits the dashing prince against two evil-plotting, selfish heralds (Gherkin and Jerkin); a difficult-to-please mother; and two not so beautiful step-sisters. Cinderella is open to the Juniata campus and the general public on November 4, at 1:00 p.m.

"Double Feature" is the name of the game with the melodramatic presentation consisting of two tales from America's classics. He Ain't Done Right By Nell is a melodrama in which the good guy (Jack) must overcome the dastardly deeds and schemes of the villain (Hayes Hilton) in order to win the hand of the fair maiden (Nell). Lighthouse Keeper's Daughter gives the audience the silent treatment as this tale of comedy is done entirely in pantomime. There is hilarity aplenty in this journey through melodrama.

These two melodramas will be presented on November 6 and 7 at 8:15 in Oller Hall. For an enjoyable evening without cost, come and see He Ain't Done Right By Nell and Lighthouse Keeper's Daughter. Hope to see you there.

Recreation Committee Organizes Activities

By NANCY J. ROWE

The Recreation Committee of Center Board is "going to take some changing this year (to) fight off student apathy," claimed committee chairman Mitchell Wells. Wells' committee will be continuing events from past years, and organizing new activities. Their success will depend on the interest and participation of Juniata students.

There is one traditional event sponsored by the Recreation Committee for each season at Juniata. They have already sponsored Mountain Day, which was seen as a success by Wells. The winter will bring the ACU tournaments where intercollegiate teams compete in sports such as ping pong and pool. Spring is reserved for the Raft Regatta.

Mitch Wells hopes to bring back some events that have been discontinued in recent years. These include such activities as the car rally and the snow sculpture tournament.

Chairman Wells said his committee has acquired more equipment for the college this year. New paddles and life jackets have been obtained for the canoes, which Mitch stated can be rented out by students. They have also provided more ping pong paddles, and had the pool tables in Ellis recovered at the end of last year.

The game room in Ellis is a major concern to Wells. He would like to work more closely with the R&R Co. who control the pinball machines. He wants to have "a steady flow of machines come in and out" to provide more variety. He hopes that this variety may alleviate the problem of having the game room too "male-oriented."

There has been a marked increase in vandalism in the game room this year, and the committee has activated a "get tough" policy with more security checks. This policy is reported to have cut down the vandalism drastically. Wells has several ideas on the causes of the vandalism.

There have been complaints about the removal of the foosball machine from the game room. According to Wells, it was removed because players stuffed it with paper to avoid having to pay. It will be returned in addition to a glass-covered one, in hopes that the latter will stop the misuse.

Another new proposal is to try to set up ski trips for students. In the past, such trips have been sponsored by intramurals, and interest has fluctuated. Wells stated that his committee has to know the student interest before the proposed program can start.

Wells has received "tentative information" from several ski areas. Seven Springs, two hours south of Huntingdon, came up as the most likely place for trips. Mitch, an avid skier himself, is impressed with their facilities.

He also proposed having joint trips with Penn State, and is contacting their student organization. The joint venture, said Wells, "might be a greater possibility" because it will cause greater interest and cost less money.

For spring, Wells proposed to have intraschool tournaments. Mitch suggested a tennis tournament, possibly at night, in three categories; beginner, intermediate, and advanced. He also suggested creating frisbee teams for the tournaments, pointing out that frisbee does have rules and regulations, and can be played in teams.

Chairman Mitchell Wells and the Recreation Committee are optimistic about their proposed plans. Mitch again pointed out, however, that the success of their plans "depends on the student response and their interest."

Centerboard discusses JC activities. Concerned? Where wre you last Tues. night?

Along Muddy Run . . .

Beer being served at a campus event has got to be one of the greatest progressive strides the administration at Juniata has ever made. No doubt the students of the sixties thought that the allowance of cigarette smoking being publicly permitted was a great progressive move on the part of the administration. Naturally, when an administration takes a step like this, they come up against road blocks, usually in the form of alumni. As yet, we have not had repercussions from the coffeehouse tap system, and that's good. However, let's try to foresee what the next step an administration might make.

Twenty or thirty years from now, you will be an alumnus of Juniata College, and whether or not you think you will go along with the times, one could hazard a guess and say that you will have different ideas from those held by the college sect of those times.

What will be your reaction when you pick up a copy of the "Juniatian," (long after graduation) and, headlined, you read: "New policy on the Line this Weekend." You read on to discover that Juniata is experimenting with a new campus policy as to whether or not grass can be smoked at coffeehouses: A coed of the times states, "The atmosphere is great, there is a bong on every table and everybody has a really great time."

When asked what else is served at the coffeehouses a student says, "Oh, they have beer and whippets, naturally you have to decide what your pleasure is before you go. If you want beer, it costs you two dollars. If you want whippets, it costs three dollars, which includes a box of ten whippets; but if you smoke grass, you bring your own. They supply the bongs."

"To think that an administration would allow such a thing to take place in public!" might well be your reaction twenty years from now. If this were to take place tomorrow, your reaction could very well be the exact opposite. Obviously, this will never take place until the government has reason to believe that grass isn't all that bad. But until then we can only be thankful that our administration has permitted beer to be served at coffeehouses.

Joseph Mullin, who is working with his first intern this year, is pleased with the program. It has helped him by "having someone asking questions" and possibly "seeing new points, and ideas or things I missed." Mr. Mullin suggests that the program be changed a little to allow students to "switch among the various offices" because each attorney has a different kind of practice.

For Charles Swigart, it is a valuable program which teaches the students to "be more practical about their career and vocational plans;" It also "allows for experience of a wide variety." Mr. Swigart sees one difficulty in the program which cannot be overcome: "At first it is hard to involve the student fully in the practice because he has not had the benefit of going to law school" but he also noted that the student gains valuable, practical legal knowledge throughout the term. He admits that both he and the intern learn, but the education for himself cannot be described. Mr. Swigart also greatly enjoys being in contact with the students and college in this way.

Three of the interns, Geoff Casher, Michael Martin and Max Smith, explained how they are benefiting from the program. All of them would like to pursue a career in law and they feel that this experience is helping to convince them of it. They attained the "practical experience of law," acknowledging both the "exciting and boring parts." They gained insight into this "ethical profession" by realizing that lawyers are "more human than we thought" and "hard working, concerned people." The only problem with the program that they could see was that it was very "competitive," with many applicants and not many openings; however they also pointed out that the program had to be small for practical reasons. The three students were very grateful to the firms which took part in the program. Max concluded the conversation by expressing one slight difficulty in the program: "The coat and tie is a drag."

them legitimately. Antique shops and flea markets provide an excellent means of securing these artifacts — unless one is part koala, adept at shimmying up telephone and R.R. poles.

These electrical cushions are also capable of other, quite unexpected, uncomprehensible uses. With a subtle gift of creativity, these globules of glass and clay can be transformed into such decorative and imaginative items as plant hangers, ash trays, door stops, mushrooms (not for J.C. omelettes), candle holders, cumbersome vases and goblets, and other such unwarranted utilizations, not beyond the ability of the most mediocre of elementary school art students. Besides these primeval usages, they serve no purpose other than their original function, or collecting dust on out-of-the-way shelves.

Yes, many people collect insulators, but don't give up hope. They are not quite as difficult to obtain as chicken lips, or quite as rare! Many insulators lie dormant affixed to poles, just waiting to be heisted. So don't despair, you too may eventually possess one of these artifacts of American memorabilia. If not look in the showcase.

HOW TO KISS A CO-ED

For Guys Only: The following instructions on how to kiss a coed appeared in a Juniatian article by Doctor Pangloss on November 5, 1948.

TAKE IT EASY — LET HER KISS YOU. This method is resorted to by very dominant chaps who, pillowed on some portion of their date's anatomy, attempt to look soulful. The girl thereupon kisses them upon the forehead or on top of the head, depending on whether the chaps have washed their hair recently. It helps somewhat if the man has been reciting poetry, and is carried away by the sound of his own voice.

AH HA — YOU'VE GOT HER CORNERED. Sometimes referred to as the "wall press," this style demands a rigid surface behind the girl. Walls are preferred, but nearly anything will do. This kiss is used most often by disappointed men, or those who fear rebuff. They simply back the girl up to the wall of their choice, and that's that. If she doesn't cooperate, she gets a crack on the skull.

IT'S RIGHT THERE FOR YOU. This procedure is nearly always used by either neophytes or advanced students. The face of the girl is grasped firmly in both hands and the kiss is planted upon her. Known also as "the set-up," it eliminates the bobbing and weaving target which is so troublesome to the beginner. The past master, adjusting the co-ed by her earlobes, knows what he wants from experience, and usually has it made to measure by his method.

LOOK! NO HANDS. In this circumstance, the male is on the defense until the last, but finally submits to biological motives. He nevertheless does not become the aggressor. He simply stands there and lets her kiss him (see first method) without the slightest response. Splendid self-control is here evident. He does no work — just so much velvet.

WRESTLE YOUR WAY TO HAPPINESS. When the girl straightens up from this one, you can hear the vertebrae crack. This is very dangerous because sometimes the male comes up for air in a permanently bent condition. It is also risky when the man leans a little too far forward, and loses his balance. The trick of the whole thing is to see how far the girl can be bent without snapping something.

YOU WON'T MISS A THING. Social awareness plays a big part in the execution of this particular style. The man is usually out with the wrong girl. Maybe his roommate's, or someone else's. He is constantly on the lookout, and glances around the room during the kiss. Potency of the kiss is registered by the rapidity with which the eyes revolve.

TAG, YOU'RE IT. This is only for the very patient man, and involves a great deal of maneuvering. Finally the girl lets him kiss her — but not for long. Just as he is beginning to light up on the forehead and say "tilt," she discontinues the action and turns away. It is considered good form for the girl to giggle at this point. Sometimes she buries her face in the lapels of his coat to avoid kissing. This, though, is apt to be rather tough on the lapels. Lipstick is hard to get off tweeds.

THE PICK-ME-UP. This technique seems to be a ridiculous waste of power, which might otherwise be used in the kiss. The man, carried away by the emotional consequences of kissing, tightens his grip on the girl and starts to straighten up. If the girl is much shorter than he, she soon finds herself a few inches off the floor. She then kicks him in the shins until he lets go. If the man is shorter than the girl, it is considered unmannerly to kick her. He just waits until she gets out of breath.

A Report on the Juniata Senate

By NANCY J. ROWE

Where is the students' money going? Student Government may now be able to find out. An Energy Conservation Committee, new club funding procedures, and two prospective lectures were also discussed at the October 20th Student Government meeting.

The meeting began to arouse interest when a report on Juniata's Budget Committee was made. It was stated that the 1977-78 tuition would be raised $310. Compared to other private colleges in Pennsylvania having the same curricula, Juniata is said to have one of the lowest tuitions, however.

Tuition increases came up at a recent Board of Trustees meeting which President Brian Smith attended. Brian claimed that the trustees were a "very receptive group" and thought they might initiate a "big push" on campus next year to keep tuition costs down.

College expenditures has also been on the minds of the Senators for several weeks. Negotiations were going on between the Student Government and the administration concerning "opening up the college budget" so that students could see where their money was going. Out of respect for both parties, it was decided that until agreements were discussed, the proposal would not be reported in this column.

A tentative arrangement has been reached. It was reported by Brian Smith that several students might be able to voice opinions regarding what areas they believe have priority in respect to their money. It is unclear at this time if students will be allowed to attend all Budget and Priority meetings; however, it was assured that their opinions would be viewed.

It was announced that energy costs in fuel or natural gas at Juniata may increase 1¢ per cubic foot. As a result of this report, Student Government may set up an Energy Conservation Committee in conjunction with other groups involved with the price increase.

The Senate approved a proposal to make it mandatory that all clubs wanting funds from Student Government next year have a charter and turn in a proposed budget. The current policy of club funding for athletic versus non-athletic clubs was described as "discriminatory."

Two speakers may be coming to Juniata via Student Government. The Senate is contacting Peter James, an ex-CIA agent, to lecture on American espionage. A second lecture may be held by an advocate of marijuana reform laws.

Proposals are like cornflakes . . . Let's hope for the best!

V-ball Club wins Varsity and JV's

By DAVID ROBISON

Monday night the women's volleyball club traveled to Susquehanna to play a new Susquehanna club. Susquehanna's inexperience showed through in both the varsity and JV matches, with both lasting only two games. The varsity won 15 to 4 and 15 to 2, while the JV won 15 to 1 and 15 to 2. Susquehanna stuck basically to a bumping game and did not use their height to spike. Susquehanna also had trouble returning JC's powerful serves.

Last Wednesday night, in a hot gym, the JC team faced Penn State-Altoona. The JV played first and won in three games. JC lost the first game 15 to 13. The second game was won by JC, 15 to 4, on good team hustle and strong serves by Kathy O'Neill. The third game was a show of offensive strength by JC as they won 15 to 2.

The varsity, sparked by their powerful serves, won in two games. The first game was won 15 to 6, and the second 15 to 7. The team played well, but according to the coach JoAnne Reilly, not as well as they could have. All seven of the regulars deserve recognition for their outstanding play. They are: Marge Morgan, Cindy Piccirilli, Priscilla Grove, Jane Robinson, Lissy Sencindiver, Nancy Zinkham, and Robin Morgan.

The team will be selling shakers at the Parents' Day football game to raise money to go to the MAC championships. The championships are being held at Franklin and Marshall College on Nov. 5 and 6. Please support your volleyball club by buying a shaker.

Women's Hockey Pulls Ahead with Winning Record

By MARGE MORGAN

The Women's Field Hockey Team lost to the rain last Wednesday, when inclement weather forced the cancellation of a game with Dickinson College. Juniata was looking for a good game with the usually strong and fast Dickinson team and was disappointed by the cancellation. However, the team did get to play the State College Field Hockey Club on Saturday, despite over-night frost which caused the field to be very slippery.

The State College Club is composed mainly of women who are no longer eligible to play on scholastic teams. The Club also included one male wing who played briefly.

The game was characterized by State's tight marking of the Juniata attack but the Indians managed to control the ball during the entire game. The persistence of the Juniata attack paid off as the team won the game 3-0. Juniata took a 1-0 lead into half-time on a goal by the team's leading scorer, Alison Reeves, assisted by Bonnie Books with 15:09 left in the first half. Alison also scored the other J.C. goals with 20:30 and 1:45 left in the game. The final goal was a somewhat controversial shot which one official claimed was hit with the rounded side of the stick.

Juniata's next game is scheduled for Friday, Oct. 29, at Susquehanna University. The last home game is at 3:00 on Tuesday, Nov. 2, with Indiana University of Pennsylvania. Come and show your support for your hockey team!

Rugby Team Wins 'A' Competition

The Juniata club rugby football team bounced back from a loss the preceding week and beat the Indiana University team 16-6 in the "A" game. Juniata played quite well in the first half, with the wing moving the ball upfield freely. Juniata did all of its scoring in the first half with three trys and two conversions. Terry Keenan scored all three tries: the first try came on a short five yard run; the second try came on a thirty yard dash by Keenan; and the final try came when Keenan fell on the ball in the end-zone after Vince Yaniga blocked a kick. Terry "Turkey" Overly kicked two out of three conversions.

Juniata lost the "B" game 9-4. Scoring for Juniata was rookie Greg Boake who ran 25 yards up the sideline for the try. Indiana scored with a try, a conversion, and a dropkick field goal. Juniata will play its final match of the fall season when it will host the Carlisle "Gaelics" on November 6.

'I Care About These Kids'

By SHERRY HELDIBRIDLE

One of the many new faces on campus this year belongs to Mrs. Jane Brown. This is her first year as Senior Nurse at the college Health Center. Receiving her degree from the University of Pennsylvania School of Nursing, Mrs. Brown was previously employed in Obstetrics and the Operating Room at J.C. Blair Memorial Hospital.

As Senior Nurse, Mrs. Brown is in charge of Health Services at Juniata. She has office hours from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday. She takes care of minor health problems and dispenses medication. Her duties also involve running any health programs here on campus.

Her interest in young people is a major reason Mrs. Brown applied for this job. She enjoys working around college students and the college atmosphere. Also, with a set schedule, she can spend a lot more time with her family than she could working at the hospital.

When asked if she likes Juniata, Mrs. Brown replied, "Very much. I really feel there is a special group of young people here." She feels Juniata is a good school, that it cares about its students. "Kids have excellent opportunities here in education, cultural aspects, and sports programs. And the surrounding area is great if you like the outdoors."

The main problem with the health center seems to be that students lack faith in Juniata's health services. "In spite of past rumors, we give adequate and competent health care," assured Mrs. Brown. She encourages students to come to the center if they need medical attention.

Mrs. Brown pointed out that, "after office hours, Carolyn Fink, an excellent registered nurse, is on duty from 6:00-8:00 p.m. Monday through Friday, and from 9:00-11:00 a.m. on Saturday. She's also on call for emergencies."

If students have any suggestions on improving the health services, Mrs. Brown is interested in hearing them. Again, she wants young people to make use of the health center. As she puts it, "I care about these kids!"

Peace Journal Published

HUNTINGDON, PA. — A new journal, "Juniata Studies: Peace, Justice and Conflict," was published today by Juniata College as part of its continuing Centennial celebration. Juniata President Frederick M. Binder announced the publication.

Edited by Ralph B. Church, associate professor of English, and Dr. Klaus Kipphan, associate professor of history, the journal is an outgrowth of the Peace and Conflict Studies program established at the college in 1973 with support from Dr. John C. Baker, then chairman of the board of trustees, Mrs. Elizabeth E. Baker, and then-president Dr. John N. Stauffer.

The eight journal articles and one poem "illustrate the wide didactic, aesthetic and scholarly interests of our participating faculty members," said Dr. Binder. All contributions, he added, are from Juniata faculty members involved in the Peace and Conflict Studies program.

In introducing the journal, Dr. Kipphan said "We believe that these contributions represent a microcosm of our struggle for meaning and purpose. We have no panaceas to offer, yet we hope that through the civilizing influence of an educational process oriented around the ideals of peace, justice and social responsibility we can contribute toward the building of a better life for all men."

Dr. and Mrs. Baker, in an introductory statement, add "This college, founded on religion by the Church of the Brethren and still retaining its influence, is a natural place to study peaceful solutions to conflicts. May the influence of the "Peace and Conflict Studies" program at Juniata spread far."

The eight journal articles, all written expressly for the publication, are:

There's more to Tri-Beta Than Selling Mums

By JUDY LEE YOUNG

By now, everyone should be aware that a group called Tri-Beta often sells chrysanthemums in the Ellis Lobby for various events. However, this was all that most J.C. students seemed to know about the group.

Tri-Beta may sound like a new vitamin supplement in your Cheerios, but, actually, it is the National Biological Honor Society and currently holds the honor of being the only national honor society represented on campus. (The college itself must apply to the national center to gain membership.) Our Juniata sector is known as the Lambda Epsilon chapter.

Dave Bowman, a biology education major now involved in student teaching, is the president of the Juniata chapter. He stated that the main purpose of Tri Beta is "to give biology students a broader look at things, to give students a chance to hear speakers they wouldn't otherwise hear." The forty-eight current members are studying such fields such as ecology, medicine, dentistry, and biology education, and some are heading toward biology graduate school.

Last year a noted speaker was William Keeton, who has written several textbooks and spoke about research he has done concerning the migration patterns of birds. Often, professors from other schools who are doing research will be asked to speak on campus. Speakers are chosen with the aid of Dr. Fisher, the TriBeta faculty advisor. Most of the fund-raising activities of the group go toward providing these guest speakers for the student body.

However, TriBeta has other more socially-oriented activities as well, such as the Muddy Run cleanups and the bi-monthly group meetings held in the biology wing of the Science Center. On Tuesday, November 9, TriBeta will be meeting to hear from Juniata students who have done research. They will be discussing their work and the value it holds for them. This is an open meeting, as are their regular meetings. This winter there is also a possibility that toboggan parties will be scheduled.

If you would like to help "encourage and promote research in the biological fields," and are interested in becoming a member of TriBeta, application forms are available for the first two weeks of each term in the lobby of the Biology wing. To qualify as an active member, you must have completed at least three biology units and be maintaining a 2.0 average (by the Juniata 3.0 scale). However, one completed biology unit and a 2.0 average are sufficient to qualify you for associate membership, becoming full membership upon the completion of two more units. Why not try TriBeta?

Concert Support Asked

By PAUL ENDRESS

In many ways, last week's STYX concert was a huge success, but in one very important aspect it was disappointing. The aspect I am referring to is student support. Only a little over 600 student tickets were sold as opposed to almost 1400 non-student tickets. Even considering that there were about 300 students off campus that weekend on school related activities (including the geology and biology field trips and the football game), about one quarter of the students did not come to the concert. There are a variety of reasons for this but most are overshadowed by our desperate need for student support. There certainly wasn't anything else to do on campus the night of the concert, so even if you didn't personally like the music of STYX it would hopefully be worth $3.75 to see the first full-scale concert here at Juniata in years. The concert committee is for and by the students, and it needs student support in order to undertake a major concert event in the future.

In the next couple of weeks, we will be distributing questionnaires to the student body in an effort to determine what the majority of the students want. Even if we don't get the band that you personally want to see for the next concert, please give us your support. These concerts can be made financially successful by seeking non-students, but these concerts are for you. If you don't support them, there can't be any more.

Currently our plans call for at least two more concerts this year and possibly a free one for students in May. The next concert is being planned for the middle or end of February depending on the availability of the band. It takes three to four months to plan a concert and we will be enlisting student support within the next couple of weeks. We will be distributing volunteer forms to all students and if you can help in any way we ask that you return the form to us. It takes at least 60 student volunteers to put on a show the size of STYX, and more for a bigger one. Once again, we need your support to make it work.

Because of the financial success of the STYX show we are now in the position of being able

A Report on the Juniata Senate

By N.J. ROWE

The last Student Government meeting of October was a rather disappointing one. Several proposals from past meetings now look grim, and the new proposals seem to benefit mostly the Senate itself.

The first proposal, having a ten by ten television screen in Ellis Hall, hit a snag; no one seems to know where the screen is. It was also stated at the meeting that it was a problem to decide what television events to show.

Another proposal of having shuttle buses to and from Penn State has also run into problems. It was decided that using the school vans was "not feasible." Thus, if the proposal were voted into action, students would have to pay fares for a chartered bus.

One proposal that seems to be working satisfactorily is the creation of an Energy Conservation Committee to help save energy on campus. Freshman Senators Todd Kulp and Judi Gross will be working on this committee.

It was also decided that Student Government would start dorm visitation again this week — Center Boardless.

Students had inquired about having cigarette machines in the dorms. This proposal was quickly killed when it was voiced that the idea would not be profitable. It did, however, bring up some discussion on this "profitable" machine.

Student Government makes 7¢ profit on every pack of cigarettes at this time. R&R Co. who control the cigarette machines gave the Senate an ultimatum: the price for each pack can stay at 65¢, but the Senate's profit would drop to 6¢; or the price can be raised to 70¢ per pack which would give the Senate 7¢ profit. The majority of the Senators seemed more concerned with the profit than the student having to make up for it. Although the profit would be funneled through Student Government back to the students, the immediate effect would be that students would resent the Senate for their control.

President Brian Smith also suggested that Student Government get involved in a "big project" that could benefit the school or community. If they did succeed in whatever their "big project" would be, the 1976-77 Student Government would be remembered in future years.

— Was that a student I heard crying for recognition? Or just an elite proposing to adjourn?

Psycholinguistically Psychopathic

A psych student recently confessed to me that he didn't know the existence of a course in Linguistics at Juniata: LL 100 — one of those Humanities courses with a scientific approach, of all things. He didn't know either that there are full-fledged subdisciplines, such as Psycholinguistics and Sociolinguistics.

I wondered whether he had disregarded the guidance of his departmental advisors, only to find out that he could show me a "P.O.E. Guide of the Department of Psychology" with "specifically recommended," "generally recommended" and "additionally helpful" courses. Intro to Linguistics was neither specifically nor generally recommended; it wasn't even considered a helpful course. And then to know that much of experimental psychology is actually experimental linguistics, at least if you are looking for a human being — the human side of the animals that we are . . . Or am I misguided by Dwight Bolinger of Harvard University? Let me quote:

"No two disciplines are more closely related than linguistics and psychology. Both deal with language, one by definition and the other by necessity. . .

Psychologists were a little late (sic!) in accepting the nature of language as a concern of theirs because it once seemed to belong more to sociology (sic!) . . .

Two developments in linguistics shook psychologists out of their indifference. The first was the blow to their

Last weekend was what could be considered extreme pleasure or dullness, depending on how you spent Parent's Weekend. One of the most interesting positions to be in is from the sidelines, watching how people take a complete turn-a-round, in some cases, when parents step foot on campus.

If one were to start at Freshman year and take an objective look at the way Parent's Weekend changes from that first year until the last Parent's Weekend senior year, the results prove to be very interesting.

Freshman year the parents come to campus anxious to see everything. They want to go to the slide shows, the symposiums, the Parent's Breakfast Sunday morning, and eat with your friends in the dining hall the rest of the time.

By sophomore year they have seen the slide shows, the symposium and decide that they don't want to get up early Sunday for breakfast, so you have lunch. Unfortunately, they still want to have a couple meals in the dining hall.

Junior year they are pleased just to see the football game and the evening program in Oller Hall, but they specifically state that they don't want to eat any meals in the dining hall.

Senior year is the best year of all. By senior year, you decide that since you're at school and most weekends at student parties, why should Parent's Weekend be any different? The next thing to find out is whether or not your parents want to party. You make the suggestion and suddenly you see a sparkle in their eyes and they say, "That would be just great."

The weekend comes and after a late dinner, the party commences, slowly at first but eventually it picks up and everybody is having a really good time, and after it's all over you hear comments from the parents to the effect that they should have thought of this three years ago.

The next Parent's Weekend, if you are going to be a junior or sophomore, don't wait till senior year to show your parents a good time!

I have seen articles in the past two issues of "The Juniatian" that have accused the Juniata College student body of being apathetic. If apathetic means not having a lot of money, disliking science fiction and musicals, not going out in the middle of the week when there are books to do, and not wishing to sit uncomfortably for two hours, then the students at Juniata are apathetic. But if apathetic means feeling no emotion; impassive; not being interested or indifferent; as it does, then it is a false accusation.

After reading the article on Plato's Cave in the October 21 issue of "The Juniatian," I became concerned with the actual reason for the failure of Plato's Cave. I asked a number of people if they went to the movies shown in Plato's Cave. Nobody I asked went regularly, so I asked why. The four responses I received were, "they're too expensive," "I don't like science fiction or musicals," "They never show them at a convenient time," and "I don't like seeing a movie in Plato's Cave; it's too uncomfortable."

Center Board is losing money, so they feel they have to charge high prices. This isn't good business practice. When one has a product for $1.50 and realizes that it's not selling, then common sense should tell that party to bring the price down. The failure of Plato's Cave is largely due to high prices.

As for the types of movies shown, may I suggest a Three Stooges film festival, Abbott and Costello, the Bowery Boys, Marx brothers, Woody Allen, Jerry Lewis, Monty Phthon; last year's attendance to comedies should show that comedies are the favorites of Juniata students. Pick films from the box office hits, which are too numerous to list. There are not very many people on campus who enjoy movies like "X53Z1F14" or "The Giant Egg Plant That Ate New York City," as shown by the attendance. Show movies on Friday, Saturday or even Sunday nite but not on a Tuesday. Hold them in a comfortable place. Hold them in Oller or Alumni, preferably Oller due to better visibility and better seats. If money is still a problem, which it probably will be, dig up that popcorn machine that makes the popcorn for the football games and sell popcorn at the movies. Open up a complete concession stand.

I conclude that the failure of Plato's Cave is due to the movie committee's ignorance and not student apathy.

The second article reporting on the Recreation Committee in the October 28 issue of "The Juniatian" upset me when I read that Mitch Wells, chairman of that committee, was going to do some changing in Center Board Recreation in order to "fight off student apathy." There is no reason to fight off student apathy because it doesn't exist in a majority of the students here at Juniata. You have good ideas for this year and I give you credit but don't accuse the students of being apathetic when all 1200 of us aren't out flingin' frisbees around when you set up the frisbee tournament or when all 1200 of us aren't crammed into the game room to play pool, ping pong, or pinball.

Dear Editor,

What is it exactly that is taken into account when considering prospective students for admission into the Juniata College Community? Is it their grade point average, SAT scores, citizenship, and leadership qualities, or does it rely more on "what high school do you come from," if you know what the "33" on the back of a Rolling Rock bottle means, or whether you favor the Bi-Centennial brew from Wilkes-Barre to Ernest & Julio's best vintage bubbly. Toby, please get off the rug.

Are they concerned with the present-day moral and academic possibilities of hopeful applicants, or are they basing their decisions on your knowledge of; music of the 50's, how big brother takes care of little Johnny, or what Mary always said? Toby — get off the rug!

What we are asking is — what factors are emphasized in the decision of acceptance or rejection of those wishing to enrole here at Juniata.

In conclusion, we would like to know if these people that make the decisions of acceptance or rejection would be willing to walk a mile for a Camel? That would be a lark — True? Toby, get the heck off the rug!!

Respectfully,
Two little Tommys

Contrary to popular belief, we're not of the opinion that our dear Juniata Memorial Gymnasium can be equated with the acoustic qualities of, say, Yankee Stadium, the Spectrum, the Capital Centre, or Winterland in San Francisco. Could it be that Starship and Styx played a might too loud for the given conditions? YES! But then who needs eardrums? It's the thought that counts.

In spite of all else, before or after the concert, the Starship group was very mediocre (to be nice about it); while the feature of the evening, Styx, definitely lived up to all our expectations.

Starship's first number was impressive, but their overall musical style, onstage performance, and physical appearance very quickly implied a marked influence of Kiss and their generally questionable style. (Obviously it is not now our purpose to comment on Kiss — what fool from the city likes to slop pigs?!) The renditions of "1st I Look At The Purse," from the live J. Geils Band Full House album, and "Train Kept A Rollin' ", from the Aerosmith Get Your Wings release were fairly well done and acceptable. It was obvious which songs were being played. With regards to their own material, it was very repetitious, driving, and generally too much past the first number, with the influence of Kiss being fairly apparent.

Then came Styx! Their choice of numbers to lead off the night was excellent, with special emphasis on "Lorelei" which totally set the mood. Styx's greater experience as a professional band made their stage show much more pleasing both to eye and ear regardless of the excessive volume. The vocalists seemed much more willing to communicate the upcoming numbers, and rap with the crowd than did Starship's vocalist. (Our compliments to the spotlight men and light-organ operators who provided such excellent effects on "Crystal Ball" and "Lady Blue.") We further cite some excellent soloistic work on such numbers as "Midnight Ride," "Lady," and "Light Up." In summation, as compared to the Hall and Oates concert of two years ago, Styx seemed to be more genuinely concerned with pleasing the crowd, and making a good professional effort notwithstanding the relative characteristics of the college and town. Again, our hats are off to Styx for a fine evening of entertainment in concert!

Getting back to the usual aspects of our column, we'll take a look at the Dreamboat Annie album by Heart (Nancy and Ann Wilson) on Mushroom Records. The LP is very good and definitely warrants praise and recognition. The current hit "Magic Man" is the pearl of the album. The pulsating beat, and guitar solo work are absolutely fantastic; this includes the acoustic guitar! There is an overall driving quality that can really make you move. The synthesizer work is good, and blends in very well to the overall contest. The clear vocal quality is tops and something one doesn't always find in a lot of albums. All the orchestration is equal in terms of sound, with no one instrument drowning the other out in a very smooth flow. "Dreamboat Annie (Fantasy Child)" is very quiet, and serves to break the album up quite well as it moves into the past hit, "Crazy On You." This one is deep in a very rich vocal quality and is quite lyrical. It flows along very smoothly as the bass guitar comes through in a subtle, but very effective manner, giving in to a haunting ending. "Soul of The Sea" tones the LP down again in a mellow way, very resemblant of Joni Mitchell, with an effective combination of electric and acoustic guitars. Background sound effects play a major role here, and add a mystical quality to the number. Side two offers more variety along the line of a hard driving, guitar-oriented number such as "White Lightning and Wine." A meaningful and mellow number is "Love Me Like Music (I'll Be Your Song)"; just listen to the words. "Sing Child" tops off side two. It's a mixture of old Chicago and Jethro Tull, really driving it home! The bass guitar solos are excellent throughout, as are the regular guitar solos. Overall, the trademark of the album is the sudden and effective changes of styles within the various songs, especially in the cuts "Dreamboat Annie Reprise" and "Soul of The Sea."

Getting To Know You

By: Elizabeth Borton
Thecla Coppolo
Sandra Taylor

We would like to introduce you to Mrs. Frederick M. Binder. We had the pleasure of talking with her last week and because it was such a delightful experience, we'd like to share it with you now.

"I was born in Philadelphia. I grew up in the suburbs of Philadelphia. It was at Ursinus that I met my husband. We were married as soon as I finished school, he was then in the Navy. We were married in 1943. While my husband was overseas in the South Pacific, I taught school in Sommerville, New Jersey — I taught history. I rejoined him and we lived in Newport, Rhode Island for a while and then came back for one year to Sommerville where they had held my job. By that time I was pregnant, so I gave my job to my husband, that was the one year that he taught in public school."

After her husband completed his doctorate at Temple they moved to West Chester, and then to Greenville where Dr. Binder was on the Thiel College faculty. They stayed there for four years and then "in 1959 we went up to Oneonca, New York . . . where he became president of Hartwick College, we were there for ten years . . . 1967-1968 we lived in Yugoslavia..." Dr. Binder was the first American to teach history there. "It was a very interesting year . . . It would be fun to do again."

After returning from Yugoslavia Dr. Binder was the Commissioner for Higher Education for the State of New York. It was during this time that the Binders found that they were missing something in their lives. "We really missed the college campus . . . We'd been all these years on a college campus — ten years in one place — which we loved very much . . . We thought, well maybe this is the time to break away . . . Basically I think the reason we went back to a campus was that we both missed the campus . . . We really found that there was this void in our lives . . . When we had the opportunity to go to Whittier (a college in California), we decided to go. Of course that was a long move for us . . . there were many things we liked about California but I think we remained at heart Easterners, there is quite a difference."

They remained in California for five years and then they came back to the East and Juniata. "I think basically we were homesick for the East and our life in the East . . ."

Redecorating is one of Mrs. Binder's major interests. She also likes, "to garden and travel, and some handwork. I like to play bridge. I love spectator sports but I don't indulge in too many of them!"

"What makes life worth living? Well I would have to be with other people, in some meaningful way. This would involve my family and other people as well as my family. I would have to feel that in some way I was giv-

Freshmen on the block at the Slave Auction.

By STEVE SVARCZKOPF

Wednesday was the final initiation of this year's Freshman Class. This time the humor was directed at both the guys and the gals with the females taking the brunt of the fun. As most of us know, tradition dictates that the Freshmen sell their services as "housekeepers for a day" at the expense of the upperclassmen. This event serves a dual purpose. Not only do the upperclassmen get a clean room to present to their folks, but also the Freshmen get the proceeds which are supposed to set them on their merry financial way.

This year's effort was coordinated by Calvin Rhodes and Bill Bloss with the effervescent Greg Ransom as the auctioneer. The nine o'clock effort began the traditional fifteen minutes late (nine-fifteen). After a few moments of mass confusion, it was decided that the entire crop should be reviewed prior to any bidding. The first one-half hour was very slow with most of the bids coming in increments of nickels and dimes. However, after the first big sale — over four dollars — the bids became more frequent and the increments were also larger.

Greg showed his "cool" by picking up the pace when the bidding was slow; and, when the bidding got hot, he prodded people into raising the bid, rather than dropping out. He also showed great skill in auctioning off better than seventy slaves for a total of $131.53 in only an hour and a half.

Many thanks are to be extended to the upperclassmen who showed their financial backing for the Freshmen (and to the poor Freshmen who were "lucky" enough to clean the rooms of those who wanted to impress their folks with their ability to maintain a clean room without "parental supervision.")

The curtain opens on a considerable variety show.

This year's Halloween dinner

There was a regular "tasty" meal which had a special feature — a food fight. To the disgust of some, especially the cafeteria workers, who later had to clean up, and to the joy of others, people were being bombarded with all types of food.

Congratulations to the cast of "Loop 't Loo" for a job well done!

Then came the costume parade around the cafeteria. All types of costumes were seen — Ms. Reindeer; a princess; the miners; the Carbon boxes, (whom the crowd didn't appreciate very much); the Gumbies; the ape and his master; Evelyn as our mop lady; "Big Bird" as a bleached blond; the three members of the "Family"; and the pea and the Jolly Green Giant; plus many many others.

Awards were given for the best costume, for the most original, for the most beautiful, and for the ugliest. The prize: a steak dinner in the President's dining room. Then came the pumpkin contest; all different kinds of carved faces were seen. The prize: free food from Tote.

For the crowd and for the participants, the Halloween dinner was great fun.

Indians plow over Aggies

By SCOTT PEARL

Before a chilled Parent's Day crowd of 4,200 fans, the Indians of Juniata defeated the Delaware Valley Aggies, 20-6. The swift running of sophomore halfback, DeQayne Rideout, was the main attraction, as he picked up 108 rushing yards and two touchdowns. Rideout's first touchdown came midway through the first quarter on a sweep play, scoring from twenty yards out. The touchdown was set up by a recovery of a Delaware Valley punt-return fumble by JC's Stan Nosal on the twenty-three yard line. Two plays later, Rideout scored and Nosal booted the extra point. Rideout scored again midway through the second quarter, capping a 65-yard seven-play drive. He danced down the left sideline for a thirty yard touchdown, outrunning many Aggie defenders. The Indians went into the locker room at halftime holding a 14-0 lead.

In the third quarter the Indians tried to add to their lead as Stan Nosal attempted a thirty-eight yard field goal. He had the distance, but the kick was wide to the right and the Aggies took over the ball. Delaware Valley did manage to score early in the fourth quarter as Keith Truskin caught a Ron Hareka pass for a touchdown from ten yards out. The Aggies' extra point attempt was blocked, however, by freshman Jim Altimare, keeping the Indian lead at 14-6. Juniata put another six points on the board in the very next set of plays. The Indians drove downfield after freshman Jim Jones returned the kick-off nineteen yards to his own twenty-seven yard line. Senior quarterback Dave Wichrowski was injured, however, when he completed a sixteen yard pass to sophomore fullback Gary Lyter on the Delaware Valley thirty-six yard line. He was removed from the game and freshman Wayne Emerick came in to replace him. Later, the Indians scored four plays on a twenty-nine yard "end-around" pass from senior Ed Flynn to sophomore Tom Gibboney with 4:31 remaining in the game. Stan Nosal missed the extra point kick, making the score 20-6. The Aggies tried desperately to score, but the Indian defense rose to the occasion, not allowing much of an offensive threat.

Defensively, the Indians turned in a very good performance, allowing only forty-nine yards rushing by the Aggies. The standout, however, was junior safety Bob Devine who had three interceptions, tying his own record for most interceptions in a single game. His first interception came late in the first period, setting a new career record with his eighteenth interception. His other two pick-offs were collected in the second quarter, building his career total to twenty interceptions since he has come to Juniata. Other defensive standouts were senior middle-guard Stu Jackson, who collected a team-leading thirteen tackles and freshman linebacker Larry Shepard, who got eleven tackles, all in the second half of the game.

The Indians will try to finish their season with a very respectable seven-win, two-loss record this Saturday, when they travel to Wilkes-Barre to take on the Colonels of Wilkes College at noon.

X-Country Ends Season

By MIKE BODLEY

The Juniata Harriers, in their last meet of the regular season, fell to both Delaware Valley and Lock Haven. Although the meet was a big disappointment, the team's overall record stands at six wins and four losses, a good record for a young, inexperienced team. Top finishers for the team were Scott Malay, Marty O'Leary, Mike Bodley, Bob Butler and Dave Parker. The team is now training and looking forward to a very strong showing at the Middle Atlantic Conference (M.A.C.) Cross Country Championships on November 6th,

The team would like to thank everyone for their support during the season and it hopes for the same support at the M.A.C.'s. Team members are: Seniors Dave Parker, Austin Robison, Sophomores Mike Bodley, Casey Koller, Freshmen Chris Nagel, Jamie Foster, Scott Malay, Bob Butler, Tim Jackson, Dave Kemmer, and Marty O'Leary. Women runners are: Lia Fong, Mindy Anderson, Janet Kelso, and Teddy Lyras.

Freshman Scott Malay is first JC runner to cross finish line in last Saturday's meet.

Judo Club Makes Progress

By GARY LEE BAKER

The Fall term is almost over and things at Juniata are rolling — including the members of the Judo Club.

Under the direction of Dr. Robert L. Fisher, the Judo Club has approximately thirty members. The experience lies with these fourteen veterans: Glenn Eagens, Barry Eppley, Barb Frezza, Brian Kerr, Bruce Klabunde, Holly Kutkowski, Gary Lake, Dennis Lasorda, Don Page, Steve Rust, Steve Shultis, Don Stone, John Whetmore and captain Steve Winters.

I asked Dr. Fisher whom he expected to do well for the club. He said, "All the brown belts are strong, Steve Rust and captain Steve Winters." Barry Eppley and John Whetmore will handle the light-weight division; Dennis Lasorda and Brian Kerr will be at 165 lbs.; Don Stone and Don Page will handle the heavyweight division; and Glenn Eagens at light heavyweight (205 lbs.). Dr. Fisher sees potential in freshman Carl Brown whom he describes as having "much natural ability." He also says Rick Loeliger has potential in the 156 lbs. weight class.

Dr. Fisher is optimistic about this year. He feels it will be the best year since 1968 when Juniata took second place in the Eastern Collegiates and sixth in the Nationals.

Judo is a rough sport. In order to talk to Dr. Fisher, I had to sit through the practice. I saw both guys and gals take some good slaps to the mat. In order to win, one must choke his opponent. I wondered, "What makes a person want to go out for such a hostile sport?" So I asked. Junior White belt Dan Bell said, "It's an extraordinary experience that you don't find at most institutions and so I decided to take advantage of it. It's also something different, something new to learn." Sophomore white belt Lee Hungerford said, "I come out because I like physical exercise but I have never been interested in the conventional team sports offered to me such as basketball, softball, field hockey and so on." Freshman white belt Carl Brown replied, "It's something different; something I never tried before. It keeps me in shape and it's fun. Senior second degree brown belt (and before. It keeps me in shape and it's fun. Senior second degree brown belt (and captain Steve Winters said, "It's something I always wanted to learn and it's something that once you learn can be used for the rest of your life. It's somewhat of a philosophy, too; it's a sport but there's more to it; it's a segment of a whole different culture."

This season the Judo Club will face Clarion, Slippery Rock, Bucknell, and Penn State. The club will also participate in various tournaments. In April the Club is traveling to California's San Jose State for the National Collegiates. (San Jose State is also where the pre-Olympic trials are held.) In March they will go to the Military Academy at West Point where the Eastern Regional National Judo finals will be held.

It would be well worth your time to support the Judo Club by attending the matches. Judo is an exciting sport to watch. You might even learn some throws or defensive moves which could prove handy in next year's Storming of the Arch!

Volleyball Club Loses

By DAVID ROBISON

Last Wednesday, instead of attending the Halloween Dinner, the volleyball club travelled to St. Francis College for a match. They might have been better off attending the dinner because the match lacked the volleys that give the sport its name. The referres called almost all returns of serves illegal, so the match was all serves and no play. The varsity lost 15-13 and 15-3. The JV lost 12-15, 15-13, and 15-7.

Afterward Coach J. Reilly commented, "It was a referee's game. They were too technical: they called things neither team had ever heard of. It made the game not very enjoyable. And the refs called the second game tighter than the first."

Don't forget to support the volleyball club at MAC's on Nov. 5 and 6, at Franklin and Marshal College.

Hockey goes to 5-2

By MARGE MORGAN

The Women's Field Hockey Team increased its seasonal record to five wins against two losses with a 2-1 victory over Susquehanna University last Wednesday. The team has now won five straight games and is the "winningest" team in Juniata's brief field hockey history.

Despite the thirty-degree weather, both teams played very well and were very evenly matched. Juniata usually plays thirty-minute half games but both teams agreed to play 35-minute halves. Therefore, the game was ten minutes longer than it should have been.

The Indians took the lead with five minutes into the first half with a goal by co-captain Alison Reeves. The score held at 1-0 until freshman halfback Marj Porter, playing in her first varsity game, scored with six minutes left to give J.C. a 2-0 lead. Susquehanna then went to work and scored their only goal with three minutes remaining.

Both teams played well and had other opportunities to score but were unable to do so. Coach Alexa Fultz noted that junior goalie Claire Swavely played an excellent game with many beautiful saves.

The Indians last game of the regular season is a home contest against Indiana U. of Pa. on Tuesday. The team will close its season on Friday and Saturday at the M.A.C. tournament at Franklin and Marshal College.

"Peace Studies in the Social Sciences — or — You Can't Teach Peace," by William C. Vocke, assistant professor of political science.

Alexander T. McBride, assistant professor of art and director of Juniata's Shoemaker Galleries, drew the cover design and contributed the art work for the journal.

The publication, said Dr. Kipphan, also continues a series of special contributions which the Peace and Conflict program has made to the college community each year. Others have been a Colloquium on Military Spending and last year's controversial Dick Gregory lecture.

The Peace and Conflict Studies program, plans for which were developed by a student-faculty committee, has involved more than 200 students in its coursework through this year. In addition to an introductory unit, program courses have included International Politics, Friends and Brothers: Studies in Historic Peace Churches, War and Conscience in America, and Arms and the Man: Studies in War Literature, among others.

In addition to the Bakers and Dr. Stauffer, Dr. Kipphan cited Dr. Wilfred G. Norris, dean of academic affairs, for vigorous support of the program.

"Juniata Studies: Peace, Justice and Conflict" will be on sale in the Juniata College Bookstore.

ing of myself, feeling somewhat needed and useful. I can't imagine that I would not be involved with a lot of people. I wouldn't be happy otherwise . . . In light of the world today, perhaps I should be disappointed in my life because we have fulfillment so much on 'woman fulfilling herself'. And yet I don't feel disappointed with my life because I've had a full and interesting and happy one. My life has been very much a part of my husband's life, so that on my own I don't know that I have many accomplishments to my credit, but if I have helped his life and his career then that's fine — and I feel I have. I have also two lovely children who are bright and happy, and seemingly well-adjusted, and who have never caused their mother or father a day of heartache that I can honestly say . . ."

"I have sometimes wondered about the 'ifs' in my life . . . My teaching has passed me by, if I went back I would be so rusty. Yet I don't consciously sit down and yearn for these things, these are just things that occasionally come into your mind. I sometimes wonder if I might have been wise to follow decorating professionally, but I don't think I ever would, I think I might have an antique shop someday — I do like antiques! . . . I think college administration is a joint operation and the important things are probably done by the man but his wife is really part of the picture . . . If you take your job seriously as First Lady on a college campus . . . you're just terribly busy, you really don't find time to do too many things. That includes as far as I'm concerned, being a part of the community — to me that's an adjunct to my role . . ."

The adage, "Behind every great man there is a great woman," is certainly appropriate in the Binder's life. Not only is Mrs. Binder considerate and charming, but she is also devoted to her husband and children, putting them first in her life. We feel very fortunate to have had the opportunity to spend an afternoon getting to know a woman whose grace and warmth are surely assets to both our college and our town to bring top names to Juniata. The following is a partial list of names that are real possibilities for this winter and will be listed on the questionnaire. Whether or not we get a particular act depends on several factors. First and most important will be the preferences indicated on the returned questionnaires. Other important factors will be the availability of the band and the prices we are able to negotiate with them. We are now in a position to negotiate with bands such as Aerosmith, Kansas, Foghat, Queen, Charlie Daniels Band, Dave Mason, and Boston. Other possibilities include Rush, Orleans, Fireball, Gary Wright, REO Speedwagon, and Montrose. If jazz is shown to be a desire on campus we could consider somebody like Chick Corea. We have already explored the possibility of Boz Scaggs, but his price is simply more than we have.

There will be another concert, but whether there are more will depend on student response to the winter show. So, please Juniata, we want to do it for you, but we need your help to do it. The alternative is a return to the apathy and boredom of previous years.

professional pride on seeing linguists grow more and more confident in their descriptions. A psychologist likes to be able to predict behavior, and linguists were gaining an uncomfortable lead, not only claiming that language was "rule-governed behavior" but getting better and better at stating the rules. The other development was the increasing awareness of universals. The differences among languages began to seem superficial, like the differences in mating rituals between two tribes where the fundamental sex drive remains the same. Psychologists felt that they had to join with linguists in resolving this apparent conflict between our genetic and our social heritage . . . We believe the coming focus of psychology will be language — the learning of a child's first language, learning a second language and the relation between language and thought."

Sorry, that I can only guide you into Intro to Linguistics, offered during the Winter Term, through a back door at this late date. But then, it is never too late to become human.

Andy Murray, campus minister plus . . .

By JERRY KEENAN

Andy Murray is a member of a "helping profession" in his role as Campus Minister.

Wait a minute! Do not let the word "minister" mislead you. Andy does not practice his "helping profession" in a cold, drafty cathedral by breathing hell-fire and damnation down the backs of all whom he comes in contact with. Rather, his somewhat cluttered office houses a man deeply interested in the problems and concerns of the Juniata community.

Andy defines his "helping profession" as helping people to cope with both times of sorrow and times of joy in the hope that they will lead a happier life. To accomplish this, Andy's job is split in various ways. In addition to performing the traditional duties of a minister, Andy serves as a counselor, teacher, and all-purpose man.

In his role as counselor, Andy tries to help people through difficult times. The problems that he discusses with students are of varying degrees of severity, but nothing is too large or too small to be discussed with him. Andy, however, is not a therapist. He cannot offer any set solutions, nor cure any ills. One thing he can do, though, is to offer complete confidentiality for all discussions between a student and himself. Even the law cannot ask what was said.

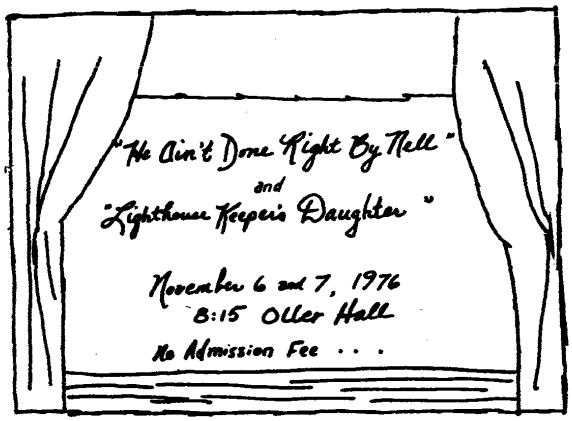
Andy also teaches several courses. Presently he is teaching Peace Studies, and in past terms he has taught a variety of religion courses, some Freshman Seminars, and a few HEA's. Andy would like to cut down on his teaching responsibilities, however, to devote more time to his position as Campus Minister.

Beyond counseling and teaching, Andy is also involved in a variety of other activities on campus. He is strongly interested in multi-media, and has staged a number of such shows. In addition to his theatrical work, Andy enjoys helping out with religious clubs on campus.

Away from Juniata, Andy enjoys music (he has recorded an album of country songs entitled "Summertime Children") and sailing. His main extracurricular interest, though, is being a husband and father.

Andy comes from a purely country background. He was born and raised in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia. He attended Bridgewater College, and then went on to enter a seminary in Chicago. Upon graduation from seminary, Andy held his own parish for three years before coming to Juniata. This year marks the sixth year that Andy has been Campus Minister.

Do not be afraid to go and talk to Andy Murray about a problem. His office is on the third floor of Ellis right next to the Pinball Room. He is neither a preacher nor an evangelist in his capacity as Campus Minister. He is merely a human being interested in helping other human beings.



Circle K Club

Hello, J.C.!! We, the members of the Juniata Circle K club, would like you to get to know us. Circle K is an international collegiate service organization, the world's largest student volunteer group with over 700 clubs throughout the world. To think, we have one right here at J.C.!

We are a "people" organization. Why? Because people are the cause of problems. Because people are the cure for problems. Because the most important creation in the world is people. Circle K wants to help people find a better life, and live that better life in a better world. And we, as students, are in a perfect position to get involved in this pursuit, for others and for ourselves.

We are involved in the community — United Fund, Kiwanis (the sponsor club), and the Salvation Army. On campus we sell football programs; help with orientation, ushering, and CROP; and we work with people, of course.

If you want to be a part of this movement, then come to a meeting; but when you come, be prepared to involve yourself in something meaningful and fun. If you are a student who is interested in helping others, then get involved. It's a challenge. It's action. It's fun. It's concern. It's Circle K!!

Meetings are every Monday at 9:00 p.m. in the Gold Room, Ellis Hall. On Monday, November 8, officers will be elected in the faculty lounge at 9:00 p.m.

THE GOOD OLE DAYS

(This article reprinted in The Juniatian, December 8, 1971.)

STUDENTS SOLVE SEX APPEAL PROBLEM IN ROUSING FORUM

The mighty problem with which Juniata long has wrestled was solved last Friday morning in a modicum of time by a student forum. The problem, as every one knows, was how to create more sex appeal in the Juniata Faculty.

This tremendous difficulty has always ranked with other ancient untieable Gordian knots, such as how to dispose of the college's excess finances, how to effect the removal of Prof. Connor's mustachios, how to curb Dr. Van Ormer's inveterate tendency to repeat himself, to say nothing of the more important problem of working out a code language to decipher our revered President's handwriting. The successful solution of the first colossal difficulty by student reform will undoubtedly lead to an attempt at the others, it is believed.

George Clemens, as chairman of the forum, opened the discussion with a concise statement as to Juniata's known deficiency in respect to the sex appeal of the college faculty. He felt such a condition was lamentable and avoidable. As a tentative suggestion he put forth the idea that a public ban should be placed on the wearing of any apparel of the vintage of 1928 or older. Since Merle Heffner was already on his feet waving both hands for attention, Mr. Clemens yielded. Heffner brought forth the suggestion that the discussion should be limited to the female part of the faculty. Chris Wenger demanded attention. He disagreed violently with Mr. Heffner and wanted to know if men didn't have sex appeal, what did they have?

After a fierce argument, order was again restored. In the instant of calm, Margaret Long arose and asked a return to nature on the part of the faculty, exclaiming that the complete freedom of the natural man was most appealing. Next, Woods Robinson declared that sex appeal was a matter of being upright in a changing world and stated that he, as a college student of 1935, was happy. Just what the relation was, every one failed to see.

The solution which was unanimous and without discussion came from Mark King, who arose, and, in a wild and flaming burst of oratory, propounded the startling thesis that it was impossible to teach old dogs new tricks and therefore proposed that the faculty be dismissed and that a committee of Horace Klenk, John Long, and Floyd Wright be sent to Hollywood to select a new one.

Housing For Married Students

Quite a few students on campus are confused as to how the school administration handles married students in terms of housing accomidations. There have been numerous rumors floating around Juniata as to how the married couples obtain on-campus apartments and why. The purpose of this article is to let students know how the administration deals with such housing problems.

According to Liz O'Connell, the assistant Dean of Students, any married couple is free at any time to live off campus but married students wishing to live on campus can apply for an on-campus apartment through the Student Service Committee. There are four apartments on campus that have been reserved for the married couples, and it is anticipated that all four will be filled by the winter term.

The college also owns several apartments off campus that can be rented by married students. One such apartment house is The Pink Palace, located across the street from the science building. At this time, there are seven married couples living off campus with several of these students renting the college apartments. To obtain one of the off-campus apartments, married students must, once again, go through the Student Service Committee.

In conclusion, it should be mentioned that there is no discrimination as to what students get both the on and off-campus apartments. The primary factor involved is who applies first and what apartments are available. Any questions concerning housing can be answered by the Student Service Committee, Bill Barrier or Liz O'Connell.

No Smoking in Alcoves

If you've been wondering why smoking is no longer allowed in the alcoves, the reason is this: some peop e are not exactly crazy about breathing exhaled cigarette smoke. The cafeteria management decided that some action had to be taken when they started getting reports of complaints from the nursery school students, so they have prohibited smoking in the alcoves, due to the lower ceiling and poorer ventilation.

What is Avoidable, unavoidable waste?

By MELANIE BOYER

What are you paying for when you pay for the Hallmark food service? Well, part of the cost is the things you walk out of the cafeteria with. Each year money must be spent to replace dishes, silverware, and trays that we take for our own use. It is too early to tell this year, but sometimes it seems that things just get up and walk out of the cafeteria by themselves says Ed Straub, the food service director.

According to Mr. Straub last year's theft rate was not as high as the year before, even though the actual figures were not available. It seems that there is less and less theft each year, and they attribute it to the fact that there is more responsibility among the Juniata students. The S.T.A.R.T. program of a few years ago that was designed to reduce apathy among the students, teachers and administration is one more reason that there is less theft; the program left students with a better attitude. The students are not as upset, so they do not feel a need to get back at the ad-

Life with Lynn

By Andrea

So you're bored with life at Juniata? Well then, friend, I know you've never had the pleasure of living with one of the greatest pranksters in Juniata history. I am speaking of none other than the infamous Lynn, my roommate and constant agitator.

The "fun times" I have been subjected to far exceed the run of the mill papering in, short sheeting, etc. You see, Lynn is an elementary education major and all those neat little courses like Creative Activities only serve to increase her natural born talents.

Usually when the "prank fever" strikes my dear roommate, it lasts at least two days during which I am constantly bombarded. After one of those long, hard days I come back to the room all prepared to jump into my nice comfy bed. But, SURPRISE, I jump right back out with a shrieking "Lynn!!".

How can I describe the sensation of a hundred warm, squishy, little raisins at the bottom of my bed?

After thoroughly cleaning my bed our and getting Lynn out of her hysterical fit of laughter, I finally drift off to sleep, only to be awakened by a hand reaching for me in the darkness ... accompanied by "Don't be afraid, all I want is your blood", in Lynn's best Dracula voice. This con-

If one takes the time to look back to the year 1972 and compare it to 1976, he might not see a great difference between the two. In comparison to the eons of time that have passed, four years is virtually mothing. But think back to what has happened in four years; the names, the events, the revelations, the personalities and the attitudes. Perhaps on both a personal scale and a worldly scale, the one most notable person and position in the last four years has been that of the President.

This year, through the workings of our system, the public witnessed a battle for the office of the President. Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter waged political war for twelve months, first within their parties and then against each other. Now the war is over and there is a winner and there is also a loser. Approximately 40 million American voters are overjoyed and ecstatic, that after the long fight they are on the side of the victor. Another 40 million American voters are sad and disappointed, for they are on the side of the loser.

Jimmy Carter will now serve for four years, and in four years many things can happen as evidenced by our most recent four year period. Whatever does happen will affect all of us here at the time, regardless of where we stood on Nov. 2. The time has come for the victor to stop celebrating and for the loser to stop sulking. Jimmy Carter and Gerald Ford divided us and now these two fine men must work together to bring us together for the next four years, because for all of us, four years can be a very long time.

The Gallery: Report on Senate

By N.J. Rowe

Article V, section E of the Student Government Constitution states, "each Senator shall be responsible of attending all regular meetings ..." One would not have been aware of this at the November 4th meeting. So many of the Senators were missing that there was speculations on whether they would have a quorum.

Debate, however, was heavy on one issue, the cigarette machine, which was reported here last week. President Brian smith learned that he had reported the profit margin incorrectly at the last meeting; the profit that the Senate makes off a 65 cent pack of cigarettes is 5 cents. R&R Vending Co. wants to either keep the price the same and drop the profit to 4 cents, or raise the price to 70 cents and make the profit 7 cents.

A first vote on the issue showed that the majority of the Senators wanted to raise the price to 70 cents. Nancy Molnar, Doug Keen, and George Trapp voted against the price hike. Said Trapp, "Student Government is not a profit making organization." He believed that the Senate's job was to work for the interest of the students, which meant keeping the price the same.

After much debate, Brian Smith asked, "Why does the profit have to come out of our pocket instead of their's (R-&R)?" It was suggested (also the previous week) that the Senate

We're sorry Austin — but we took your picture anyway!

By Dave Brown

The first term is finally grinding down to the end. For some it is a slow, agonizing grind; for others it is a furious flurry of minutes that show no relationship to anything. The ultimate end of this grind is finals — which is a dirty word to most college students. Finals would not be too bad if the last two weeks of classes didn't preceed them, but unfortunately that is the order of events which take place.

The problem with the last two weeks of classessis the professors. The reason they are the problem is due to the fact that they don't prepare for the last two weeks in advance. They discover that there are only ten lectures left and four chapters to cover, which normally takes three to four weekssto cover. Obviously, the student takes the brunt of the profs' ill preparation.

This type of atmosphere is not conducive to calm nerves and sane minds. Consequently, roommates start "getting to" each other; "prick" wars are escalated to release frustrations and to add to the bedlam that has already set in; the food service is trying to get rid of all the leftovers, and therefore the food really starts to get to a person.

What can be done so this type of situation doesn't arise? There are a number of solutions to the problem; unfortunately, none of them will allow you to pass finals. The one solution is to forget about studying and plead ignorance to the prof. (A warning to the wise: this solution only works if you pleaded ignorance on every other exam of the term, and the prof would think that something was wrong if you did well on the final!)

Another solution is to become oblivious to the situation by getting drunk, or high or whatever. But, whatever you decide to do during these last two weeks and during finals, beware!

From The Editor

I'm dropping a note to the JC campus and its friends to let you know a few things concerning the progress of "The Juniatian." Already the first term is coming to a close, and the second term is on its way. Thus far I am very pleased with the progress of the paper. I still think we have a long way to go, but we are slowly getting there.

As of now, the staff numbers close to eighty and is still continually increasing. It's a very young staff. When we started out this past September, no one knew each other. It was one new face after another. We are all slowly beginning to feel the ropes involved. The rough edges are now beginning to smooth out.

Problems have arisen in the past; some have been solved and some have not. For example, I know the sports coverage is quite poor, but I have to say that we are doing an adequate job with what we have. Our sports writers are limited, so we must work with what we have. They have been working to the best of their ability. A great detriment to the sports section, and the paper as a whole, is that there is no sports editor. It makes it harder for the paper to function smoothly without one. I have been working to improve this section, but it can only be done with more help. As of next term, we will be working on a series of feature sports articles. Any new ideas will be gladly accepted.

I apologize to you athletes who come into dinner late and sometimes find no paper. That was due to the fact that there were just no more papers to put out. I have been ordering more copies to offset the increased circulation. I hope that you shall not have to come into dinner again and find no paper.

Then again, the paper is sent off to the printer's on Sunday, but is not distributed to the student body till Thursday; therefore, all events from Sunday to Thursday are left uncovered. It takes dedicated reporters to sit down Saturday nite or even Sunday morning to write about the events that took place on Saturday. But dedicated reporters we fortunately have.

As many of you have noticed, many articles in the paper have been cut off at the bottom — that is, the articles were not printed in their entirety. This is due to the national standard printing companies go by — they have the right to cut off the end of articles when they can not be fitted in. I did not know about this policy till after it happened. It was as big a surprise to me as it may be to you. All big newspapers follow this standard. Professional reporters start off an article with the most important ideas. The trivialities are left to the end.

Six of the eight issues this term were eight pages. Being able to have such a number of eight page issues shows a rejuvenation in the student body, as is the fact that the staff numbers close to eighty and is still increasing. Also new ideas that have been instituted in this year's paper seem to have come off well. There have been a few problems with some of the columns, but we are still working on them. As of last week we have started a cartoon series. Sketches will also begin appearing more regularly. New ideas are still being worked on for next term and will materialize as soon as possible.

This paper is your paper so please let us know what suggestions, new ideas, or criticisms you may have by contacting either one of the staff members or bysdropping a note through the Intracollegiate Mail to the Juniatian, Box 667. Please let us know your opinion and new suggestions! We can not know if we are appealing to your tastes if you don't let us know.

This is the last issue of the term. I, and my staff, wish you all luck on your finals, and following them a happy and relasing vacation. Thank-you for listening, and see you again next term.

Evagelia "Teddy-' Lyras

Dear Editor:

GLAMOUR magazine is once again organizing the annual Top Ten College Women Contest. We are looking for ten young women from colleges and universities throughout the country who are outstanding on the basis of their solid records of achievement in academic studies and-or extracurricular activities on campus or in the community. We would appreciate your assistance in letting students on your campus know about the contest.

The Top Ten College Women Contest has evolved over the past twenty-one years along with the changing interests and concerns of college women. Ten years ago, it was a contest to select the best-dressed on campus, but since 1969 the emphasis has been on what college women have accomplished. We feel that a greater number of qualified women would be interested in participating if they were aware of the changed image of the contest.

For your convenience, we have enclosed a sample press release containing basic information on the contest. If you are interested in publicizing information about the contest, we suggest that you contact your Director of Public Relations to determine whether that office or another organization on campus will be handling the contest.

If you have questions, please do not hesitate to contact this office. Best wishes for a successful 1976-77 academic year.

Sincerely,
Peggy Schmidt

Placement Center Opens

By Jerry Keenan

Placement services for Juniata students arrived in full force this year with the installation of the Placement Center under the direction of Mr. William B. Martin.

Previously, any post-college placement or career guidance was handled by the Financial Aid Office. Seeing that such a valuable student service was not being developed to its fullest extent, the college converted a cloak room in the basement of Ellis into a "visual library" of placement and career information.

The "visual library" concept was adopted to counteract the unpleasant prospect of searching for information in a filing cabinet. With the "visual library", a student can feel free to look at literature on careers, graduate schools, volunteer services, military opportunities, and summer jobs. All of this information is hanging right on the wall; there is no need to search through a bulky catalog. Everything is within easy reach.

The career area of the Placement Center is by far the most developed. Included in this department is a section on teaching opportunities in various states, career bibliographies, occupational outlook handbooks, and information on government careers. In addition to all of this literature, the Center boasts a micro-viewer that has all known careers categorized for easy looking. These microfilms offer a complete overview of any career. The career department is rounded out by a set of shelves containing more than sixty folders of information from various employers. If a student has an interest in a particular firm he may be able to find what he is looking for in one of these folders.

Although the center is currently working on senior placement, Mr. Martin stressed that the Placement Center is by no means only a senior function. The Center is an ideal place to go and browse for a student with no particular ideas about what he wants to do after he graduates. Then, when he has found a career that might be of interest to him, Mr. Martin will set up an appointment to talk to that student. As Mr. Martin puts it, "I'll spend as much time with a student as he has interest in himself."

As far as senior placement is concerned, the Center is also very active. Mr. Martin and his associates have sent to 360 employers requesting information and trying to gauge employer interest in a "senior profile". The profile is a collection of approximately 120 resumes on senior Juniata students that will be sent to interested employers. Not only will this profile help to find jobs for those students, but it will circulate the name of Juniata on the employment market.

By no means has the Placement Center finished its growth. Mr. Martin feels that the Center will require at least three more years to be fully developed. After that, of course, the "visual library" will need constant updating. Also in the development stage is a tape library. This collection will consist of interviews conducted with key Juniata faculty members and alumni. By listening to these tapes the student will probably feel more comfortable in using those faculty members or alumni as resource persons.

All of these innovations in Juniata placement could not have been possible without the guidance of Mr. Martin. He was graduated from Juniata in 1959 after serving in the Navy and working in various jobs. He then went on to work for Sears, Roebuck Co. as personnel manager. He was at Juniata from 1963 until 1966 as Alumini Director, Director of Non-academic Summer Conferences, and Placement Director. When he returned to Juniata ten years later he had been Placement Director at Hofstra University and National Director of Hecruiting for Coopers and Lybrand.

Mr. Martin feels that having positions as both a placement officer and as a recruiter has made him more aware of what a student experiences when he goes for an interview. Seeing a student who is not a very good interviewee get through his first interview, and then go on to his fifth or sixth, only to become an expert at being interviewed, is Mr. Martin's greatest reward.

Anyone who wants to gain some direction in their post-college plans should drop by the Placement Center. The Center is located just across from the Post Office and is open from 8:30 to 5:00. The staff of the Placement Center wants the student body to feel free to come in and browse, or if they have a specific problem, to see one of the counselors. They are there to help.

Getting to Know You

We would like to introduce you to Mrs. Evelyn Weld, better known to some of you as "Mom". You probably seesher at least once a day as you enter the cafeteria, but don't really know much about her. We hope you will though, after reading our article.

Evelyn has lived in Huntingdon all her life, and has worked at the college for two years. She has watched Juniata change, and expand, and has noticed a difference in students through the years. "I think the students have changed a lot. I've always been fond of college kids — I'm not one of the townspeople that think they're all bad, because there's good and there's bad ... I can see good and bad right out here in our own high-school ... I think people are more open now that they used to be ... In the sixties I lived right down on 15th Street ... the only protest march I ever saw was a march up Moore Street and as far as I could see there was no disorderly conduct ... I can't speak for everyone in the town ... but living at the end of town you're used to college kids. I run into them at Sheetzes, I run into them at the Weis store, I'm walking down the street and I run into them."

Evelyn's interests center around sports. "I don't have time for hobbies. I do collect coins, I've done that for years. I guess the most things are just going to ball games ... I'll just tell you how wrapped up in sports we are. I have a boy that plays Pee-WeesFootball and my sixteen-year-old was just named the Most Valuable Player of his team ... He plays Teener League baseball ... Last year I saw every home football game." Not to mention the basketball, (both men's and women's), volleyball, and baseball games she attended. "Sports is about the only thing we do because it's something we're all interested in."

Besides sports, Evelyn also enjoys contemporary music. "As far as music is concerned, maybe

This week we are going to tone things down a bit and look at Barry Manilow's This One's For You, as well as a first release from Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band.

Barry's latest release on Arista Records and GRT tapes may just be his best effort to date. The title cut and current hit "This One's For You" has excellent lyrics with noticeaole thought and meaning behind them. The refrains are richly done and very resounding. This number is definitely for slow dancing and packs a good punch in the excellent climactic ending. "Jump Shout Boogie" is good, hard fast boogie, as the title undoubtedly implies! Manilow's piano work is superlative on this number, along with some outstanding brass work. The back-up vocals are more than deserving of mention on this number, for without them the boogie would not be boogie. "Weekend in New England" features a very quiet, extremely effective and mellow start, builds up extremely well toward the end, and then backs off very smoothly. Side two is equally good. "Riders to the Stars" features a great beginning and a bouncy fast beat which is great to dance to (this cut, incidentally, bears a vague resemblance to his former hit

Ms. Prime Rib — More Than Ever!

"If you think there's no humor in the Women's Movement, you haven't met Ms. Prime Rib ...!" On Friday, November 12, Free Spirit Productions will present "a ticklishly zany, women's consciousness-raising show for everybody" in Oller Hall.

The play, first shown in July 1975, deals with women's equality with men — or lack of it. Consisting of three scenes, the show illustrates the various aspects of inequalities faced by today's women. The first excerpt deals with Eve's subserviency to Adam; the second shows how marriage and children sometimes inhibit one's life pleasures; and the final scene depicts a woman's adjustment to divorce.

James Hickey of St. Anselm's College wrote of Ms. Prime Rib: "I never thought the Women's Movement could be portrayed in such an enjoyable, crazy way. I... don't expect to leave that way!

was really delighted with this production. For the first time, someone has produced a show concerning Women's Lib that doesn't plot women against men but actually brings them together in laughter and understanding. It's a damn good show."

Interviewed recently, Linda Cooper, creator and producer of the show, offered with reference to the production, "Intimate. During several scenes we even incorporate the audience into the play. And, as we do asides, plus step in and out of character, our aim throughout much of the show is to create a direct relationship with them, without sacrificing the comedic value and timing."

Curtain time for Ms. Prime Rib is 8:15 p.m.; tickets are $1.00 in advance for students, and $1.50 for general admission at the door. Come as you are ... but don't expect to leave that way!

The Ghost of Brumbaugh Science Centre

By Barbara Frezza

It all happened on a Friday night not too long ago in the Brumbaugh Science Center. The last of a list of nameless, faceless students desperately cramming for finals had left the building hours ago; leaving the brick and steel structure looking like a discarded exoskeleton of some extraterrestrial creature in the harsh light of the full moon. The only person left inside the building to witness the ensuing chain of events was a security guard — who prefers to remain anonymous.

Everything seemed quiet enough in the chemistry wing on the first round, so the second time around our man, the security guard, decided to try and catch a few Z's. He thought he heard a clicking noise from one of the labs on the second floor, and was debating whether or not to pass it off as his imagination. Reluctantly, he headed down the hall toward the instrument lab to check it out. When he opened the door, the room was dark-as he'd expected-and there was no sign of anyone present. Maybe a mouse had gotten out of one of the animal rooms? Our man was about to walk out the door when he heard what sounded like thousands of tiny laughs coming from the corner. Quickly, he whipped on the lights and looked around the room. There, on the wall above the gas chromatograph, was the sharp outline of a student with an effigy of Dr. Russey in one hand and a French horn in the other. The shocked security guard thought the student looked familiar, but he couldn't be sure. Besides, he was running down the hall too fast to think about it. By the time he got back to his seat for a snooze, it was almost time to check the biology wing.

"The bio-wing isn't as strange as the chem-wing anyhow", he muttered to himself. All of a sudden the strange noises came again; this time from the invertebrate lab. Cautiously he opened the door and flipped on the lights. At first all seemed normal; but then he heard what seemed like a million tiny laughs behind him. He turned around slowly, fully expecting to get stabbed in the back. Instead, he saw an outline of Dr. Fisher holding up a 2 foot rainbow trout. On the trout's tail was a tag that read THIS FISH CAUGHT AT THE RAYSTOWN FIELD STATION. Our man knew that something was definitely wrong; for in all of the years he'd fished in Raystown or the Huntingdon area, the biggest thing he'd caught were a foot long carp and

2 Faculty Members Honored

Two Juniata College faculty members, Dr. Robert P. Zimmerer, professor of biology, and Dr. William E. Russey, professor of chemistry have been named to Charles A Dana Supported Professorships at the college.

In announcing the professorial chair recipients, Dr. Frederick M. Binder, Juniata president, noted that Dr. Zimmerer's appointment began with the college's fall academic term. Dr. Russey's appointment will start fall term, 1977.

The fund for the professorships was originally extablished in 1970 through a grant of $250,000 from the Charles A Dana Foundation. In fulfillment of a matching requirement attached to the grant, Juniata alumni, trustees and friends contributed a like amount. The income from the fund, which totals $500,000, is used annually to give partial support to the salaries of four distinguished professors.

According to Dr. Binder, the fifth Dana professorship (Dr. Russey's) was made possible by the success of the development campaign in support of the program.

Dr. Zimmerer joined the Juniata faculty in 1961. He is a 1954 graduate of the University of Wisconsin and holds the M.S. degree from Cornell University (1961) and the Ph. D. degree from the Pennsylvania State University (1966).

During a 1970 sabbatical leave, Dr. Zimmerer was a research associate at Penn State's Milton S. Hershey Medical Center. He served as a visiting professor bo botany at eh University of Maine at Orono during the summer of 1971.

Department chairman since 1974, Zimmerer has written a number of articles for scientific journals and is a consultant in microbiology at J.C. Blair Memorial Hospital, Huntingdon.

Dr. Russey, a faculty member since 1966, received the B.S. degree magna cum laude from Kalamazoo College in 1961. He earned his master's degree and Ph.D. from Harvard University in 1964 and 1967, respectively, and also studied as a Fulbright Scholar at the University of Bonn, Germany.

During the past academic year, Dr. Russey spendt a sabbatical leave at the Max Planck Institute, Muhlheim-Ruhr, West Germany, where he engaged in coal research as a National Science Foundation Faculty Fellow in Science Applied to Societal Problems.

A member of Phi Beta Kappa, he has a been a Woodrow Wilson Fellow, a National Science Foundation Fellow and a National Institutes of Health Pre-doctoral Fellow. During the 1975 Juniata commencement ceremonies, Dr. Russey was presented with the college's eighth annual Beachley Distinguished Professor Award.

All-College Weekend

Thousands of college students from all over the country will converge on New York City for four days over the weekends of November 11-14 and November 25-28. Although New York has always been a popular destination for exam-weary college students during the long Veteran's Day and Thanksgiving weekends, this year things will be more organized.

The Amherst Institute is sponsoring a special $39 hotel package for college students that should remove many of the hassles and uncertainties associated with a trip to the "Big Apple".

"New York is still the most exciting city in the world. Nowhere else is there such a concentration of great stores, restaurants, theatres and museums," notes one of the trip's organizers enthusiastically. "Yet visiting New York is all too often expensive and lonely. We wanted to put together a program that would allow college students to meet other students from all over the country at a very reasonable price. The trips are planned as a break from classes and studying, a change-of-pace before the pressures of December exams.

"So we collaborated with Adventura Travel, which has been organizing ski and beach trips for college students for

J.C. Got the Election Spirit!

By Nancy J. Rowe

Poli Sci profs were probably delighted about how Juniata was transformed into a flurry of political activity last week. Buttons, bumper stickers, and cries of "Vote for . . . (fill in the blank)" inundated J.C. Posters of candidates were plastered over the campus, torn down by the opposition, and replaced with new smiling faces. Polls, predictions, promises, and prayers filled the air, coming to a climax Tuesday, November 2.

Students went to the polls, or hoped that their absentee ballots were received in time, and then waited. And waited . . . . and waited.

Then the returns came pouring in. WJC prided itself when their "election night coverage" was the first in the Huntingdon area to correctly project that Republican John Heinz would be elected over Democrat Bill Green in the close battle for the U.S. Senate.

For the U.S. House, Bud Shuster won, running unopposed, although there were reports that Assistant Professor Gregory Giebel got quite a number of votes. For State Treasurer, incumbent Al Benedict (D) defeated Patricia Crawford (R). Democrat Robert E. Casey won over Patrick Gleason for Auditor General. In the Huntingdon area, Republican Samuel Hayes was the victor for the state General Assembly over Lona Norris.

Carter or Ford? Mondale or Dole? Democrat or Republican? Surprisingly, quite a number of students were determined to stay up and watch the outcome, although they knew it would be late. 1:00 a.m. . . . . 2:00 a.m. . . . 3:00 a.m.?

It was around 4:00 in the morning when UPI, NBC, and soon the rest of the media brought the news: "Mississippi has gone for Jimmy Carter, putting him over the top of the 270 electoral votes needed to win the Presidency." With a sigh of relief (?), both Ford and Carterites went to long-yearned-for sleep, not giving the result of the election much in depth reflection. Who could at 4 a.m.?

Breakfast Wednesday morning (for those that made it) was still rather quiet — not many sarcastic comments between conflicting positions. In fact, the whole day (and those after) was one of quiet acceptance and hope for the future.

'Is it Sick to Love a Pen?'

No way can we believe that students from Maine to California are storming the stores in search of the rare elusive Pilot pen, which, according to the manufacturer has started a cult on campuses around the country.

To support its cult theory, Pilot has spread some t-shirts around with the thought-provoking slogan (based on its national ad campaign), "Is it Sick to Love a Pen?"

The company says it will send a free shirt, and a box of pens to the writers of the best 100 letters on "Why I Love My Pen".

Okay, you weirdos out there, here's your chance to develop that meaningful relationship at last.

Pilot Pen Corporation is located at 41-15 36th Street, Long Island City, N.Y. 11101. Write to Ron Shaw. He loves to get mail, almost as much as he loves his pen.

Education starts with simple books,
With readin and writin,
And dirty looks.

It quickly progressessto stiffer stuff,
With some tests you'll pass,
And some tests you'll muff.

It moves onwards and upwards,
And the work does get worse.
You'll grumble and mutter,
And yes even curse!

At the end of it all you'll sadly look back,
And regret all of the education
That you still seem to lack.

Juniata Student Returns from Europe

Carla Gould: Learning and Living via the Strasbourg experience. photo by Carol Tolbert

By Carol Tolbert

Carla Gould whose hometown is Johnstown, Pennsylvania, is a senior here at Juniata who spent her junior year at the University of Strasbourg, France.

She had one year of French in high school in conjunction with one year of it here. In addition, she is majoring in elementary education and forms of communication; while studying in Strasbourg she also took history of civilization, child psychology, German, and French grammar.

Carla studied in France through the Brethren College's Abroad Program; she sadi that the tuition there costs less than that of Juniata. However, she also mentioned that travelling through Europe evens out the differences. Therefore, the total cost in either education is approximately the same.

According to Carla, the degrees of academic difficulty at both Juniata and the University of Strasbourg are about the same. Probably the main difference between the two schools is that the latter demands much more responsibility on the 'students' parts. "You have a lot of fun, but you have to make it, no one makes it for you," Carla remarked. "There no one pays special attention to foreigners."

In a way, such an attitude may be a hindrance, but in the end it turns out to be exactly the opposite. It helped Carla to realize that she was on her own, which, in turn, eventually improved her self-confidence.

Furthermore, she stated that her experience in France (and other nearby European countries) helped her to understand people's nature — that we are all the same. She also learned to be more diplomatic, as well as how to express her feelings and opinions more openly; whereas previously she had felt somewhat pressed by society to be more reserved.

Now, when Carla hears the word "Europe," she thinks of: "riding mobylets, my French friends, scads of pastry, wine and cheese and lots of beer, eating snails, skiing in the Alps, sharing my room with a goat, the first time I understood what the prof said, getting lost a million times, sleeping on trains, sitting for hours in a cafe, . . ."

Carla commented that all her travelling did not satisfy her original desire to travel. She plans to return to Europe at the end of the year.

ministration in any way that they can. Also, Mr. Straub believes that there is just a better group of students here this year.

There really is not much that can be done to stop people from stealing. Mr. Straub knows that the students know the problem exists and that is about all that can be done. The dining hall is an uncontrolled situation, and if there were more students hired to monitor stealing, stealing would just become more covert.

Mr. Straub finds that the biggest expense is food waste. It is something that is part of the system; there will always be waste. If you are an upperclassman at Juniata, you have heard the lecture on food waste: if we waste 5¢ a day, 1¢ at breakfast and 2¢ at both lunch and dinner, that would be (for a thousand students) $50 a day. Multiply that by over 220 school days a year and you come up with a figure over $11,000 a year. This is based on unavoidable waste: with avoidable waste the figures can jump to $20,000 or $30,000 a year, says Mr. Straub. This type of waste is not food that has been badly prepared and the student just can not bear to eat it. Avoidable waste is when a student has three full cokes and does not drink one of them. Avoidable waste is when you walk through the line and first take your favorite dessert, then your favorite main course, and your favorite vegetable; take two rolls, two glasses of milk, and then discover your favorite salad. This has added up to be quite a sum of food, and more likely than not you will not eat it all. Part of the blame for this does fall on the structure of the dining hall. The worst place for the desserts is at the beginning of the line. The salad bar and soft drink machines were not even included in the original plan of the dining hall. Changes in the flow of the dining hall have been discussed Mr. Straub said, but they felt they were not justified because of the comparative newness of the building.

If we were to stop theft and waste, could the price of tuition fall? It is not likely, in Mr. Straub's opinion, mainly because of inflation; but perhaps it would not rise as sharply as it could. The price of the food service is projected on an experience basis; this means if there is a high cost in running the service this year, it will be reflected in next year's cost. Actually, it looks like the cost of food is the biggest determinant of price, and there is very little we can do about that.

Spain: Education and Relaxation

Jan Edgar: Summer study and relaxation in Spain.

By Margaret Broadwell

What was the range of your experiences in this past summer of '76? Were you enlightened, or just "lit" most of the time? Summer is a time sor enjoyment and relaxation, but may becoupled with practical learning. This is the story of one person and her various experiences witha summer abroad. This is the story of Jan Edgar, a junior here at Juniata.

Jan spent the summer at the University of Valencia, spending her last week traveling through Germany. Her professors spoke only Spanish, but were quite interesting just the same. "There were no pressures of responsibilities," remarked Jan, "I was on my own." This producd mixed emotions. For one, she explained the loneliness of it all, plus the tremendous culture shock. "You don't realize what it's like without any of the conveniences of the United States."

On the other hand, some of her experiences were priceless. Among her favorites were the Spanish bullfights, and a swim in the warm waters of the Mediterranean.

As for Spanish men, Jan describes some of them as "obnixious, not having a good opinion of American women." Of course, there's no comparison to our own American male.

Jan intends to return someday, and visit some of the places to perhaps relive an unforgettable part of her past, a past which bolds many special memories.

tinues for half an hour, until even Lynn tires of this madness. She's asleep — no doubt dreaming up another deviant act. Finally the sun risessover Juniata and while everyone else is dragging sleepily off to classes I, needless to say, have been rudely awakened and alerted to the dangers of the day.

It starts with the common practice of washing my face and brushing my teeth. Have YOU ever attempted the above with shaving cream for Noxema and a toothbrush corroded with pickle juice?

I go off to classes now hoping the dear girl has regained her senses. I soon realize this is too much to ask for; I return to the room and find my entire closet of clothes neatly placed in the janitor's closet.

A minor relapse, I hope as I get ready for lunch. Again, I am fooled as, little innocent that I am, I proceed to spray my newly washed hair with hairspray. You know — it's the kind that's easy to pour out and replace with plant food.

By dinner time I am in a total state of paranoia. I somehow make it through and go back to my 600-page novel, duesnext week. Before long, I see the book is making even less sense than usual. I stop, read the last paragraph over, turn the page, turn it back, stop, ponder with a great look of puzzlement when suddenly Lynn breaks out into her hysterics again.

Here I must tell you the sweet thing had some help from a certain deviant type male friend of ours (more about him later). Even though the original idea of taking pages from the book wasn't hers, Lynn did think of a wonderful hiding place for them — the hamster's cage!!

I later found that the two thieves not only swiped a couple of pages from one book but actually changed the covers on two other books. Luckily, I found out this little plan ahead of time. I am afraid that if this plan had worked i would now have a single due to the untimely demise of one roommate.

But to return to the night in question. Once again, I sought solace in the library. Upon returning, I found the aforementioned male and my roomie again in cahoots. (Here I must confess that the "male" will remain anonymous under dire threat to my person as well as T.V. privileges!). I was locked out of the room whereupon my "undies" drawer was raided, the contents tied together in a long chain, and paraded through the halls and down the stairwells.

The day is finally over, I have all my clothes back, the books are mended, my toothbrush is clean, and my Noxema is 100% pure. Once again I am ready for a good night's sleep.

This time I won't be fooled! I carefully turn down the bed, search it thoroughly and with a feeling of great security walk over to the dresser to take my "eyes" out. Completely confident now, I open the contact case, only to let out a bloody scream of "Oh, Lynn!!". There, where my lenses belong, are two stupid raisins!!!

By the way, Lynn and her array of pranks are now available for rent. But only for rent mind you — after all, where would I be without "Life with Lynn"?

Gridders Close with Winning Season Despite Bowl Loss

By Scott Pearl

Playing before a chilled Anthracite Bowl crowd of barely 500 fans in Wilkes-Barre, the Indians went down to a very disappointing 14-10 loss to the Colonels of Wilkes College on Saturday. With the temperature dipping into the low 40's and light snow covering part of the field, the style of play was slippery, to say the least. The game was ultimately decided by a single Wilkes play, a 42-yard punt return.

The Indians got on the scoreboard first with a minute and a half remaining in the first quarter by way of a 6-yard passsfrom freshman quarterback, Wayne Emerick to senior tight-end, Ed Flynn. The touchdown drive covered 65-yards in 15 plays. Stan Nosal added the extra-point kick. The Colonels tied the score early in the second quarter when they caught the Indians deep in their own territory and forced them to punt. As freshman Dave Brace took the punt on the JC 43-yard line, his blocking wedge formed perfectly and he skampered all the way down to the 1-yard line before being tackled by a lone Indian defender. Wilkes scored on the next play as quarterback Bill Slavoski took the ball over the goal line for the touchdown. Dan Pisarcik kicked the extra-point. The teams went into the locker room at halftime, tied 7-7.

The Colonels went ahead, 14-7 with five and a half minutes left in the third quarter as Slavoski threw 10 yards to Rob Irwin for the touchdown. The score capped a 9-play, 57-yard drive. Pisarcik added the extrapoint. The Indians attempted to tie the score but could only muster a 22-yard field goal by Stan Nosal with a little under 12 minutes remaining in the game. The field goal was his seventh this season, setting a new Juniata record for most field goals by a single player during a season. He also holds the record for most field goals in a career, with 15.

With the Colonel leading 14-10, the Indians tried desperately to catchup, but each drive that they started fell short of the goal line. They did get down to the Wilkes 26-yard line, however, with under 2-minutes remaining in the game. With fourth-down and 6-yards to go, quarterback Wayne Emerick was rushed heavily by the Colonels defensive front line, but got the pass away fown the right sideline to sophomore running back, Allen Lipstein, who couldn't quite hold on to it. Wilkes took over and held on to the ball until the final gun sounded, for a 14-10 upset over the heavily favored Indians.

Overall, the Indians have kept up their winning tradition with a final 6 win and 3 loss season. They have shown a very potent offense and extremely balanced defense, throughout the season. The team has reason to be proud for the way that they have conducted themselves, even with a few disappointing losses. Next season will indeed prove to be a very productive one, as many of the starters will be returning to again bring more exciting football to Juniata College.

Field Hockey Closes Season

By Marge Morgan

The Women's Field Hockey Team closed out their season last week with a loss to Indiana University of Pennsylvania and a trip to the Middle Atlantic Conference Tournament. The loss to I.U.P. gave the team a 5-3 record for the season — their first winning season.

The I.U.P. game was a tough 2-1 loss. The game was marked by stiff physical contact, 30° weather, and a dangerously muddly field. Indiana used many body blocks in an attempt to intimidate the Juniata attack. Sophomore inner Cindy Hastings suffered a foot infury in the second half which put her out of action for the rest of the season. The J.V. also lost to I.U.P. in another very physical contest.

The team then travelled to Franklin and Marshall for the M.A.C. tournament in which they were seeded third behind F&M and Elizabethtown. They won their first game at noon on Friday over Delaware Valley by a 3-1 score. The 3:00 game against top seeded F&M brought a 3-1 loss in a tough, well played, physical game. This loss moved the Indians into the losers' bracket but they were still in contention for the finals. After attending the volleyball tournament (for which the Volleyball Club is very appreciative!) and getting a good night's sleep the team prepared for a 10:00 A.M. game with Wilkes. Going into the last minutes of play the score was tied at 0-0 and Juniata held a commanding lead in penetration time (the factor used to determine who advances from a tie game). Then with 2 seconds left, a freak shot got by the J.C. goalie, the whistle blew signalling the goal and the end of the game, and the Juniata team collapsed in tears.

Coach Alexa Fultz and the entire team deserve congratulations on their fine season. Special recognition should go to Bev Martin, the team's co-captain and only senior. With the large number of players who should be returning next year, the team is looking for an even better showing in the 1977 season.

requested that all suggestions be reported to Steve Bono, which many of the Senators failed to do. The point to be made, however, is that student suggestions have been shoved aside for several weeks with no consideration given to them. Several Senators then ironically complained that students were not giving them any ideas on what they wanted.

It seems that Student Government is getting more bureaucratic and sluggish each week. It should be suggested that the Senate look within their own bureaucratic mess for the suggestions that have been given to them by students. They should not accuse the student body of being apathetic, because they are not doing a very good job in keeping students informed. They check over companies to see how they could get more profit by keeping the price down.

The Senate agreed to this, but an argument over procedural matters arose. Should the first vote on the issue be counted or stricken? After much argument, Smith called for reconsideration, and the first vote was stricken. The result is that the Senate is back where it started on this issue two weeks ago.

Something interesting happened at the meeting which should be mentioned. One of the Senators asked what had happened to all the student suggestions received during dorm visitation. It seems that they have gotten lost in the tangle of red tape somewhere within Student Government. Brian Smith should exhaust all possibilities on an issue before voting. Procedural hassles could be solved by appointing one Senator to study the correct procedures, thus eliminating the petty bickering over such matters.

"It's A Miracle"). In this song, the orchestration is extremely fine as it flows into "Let Me Go" in one of the smoothest transitions we've heard. "Looks Like We Made It" is the other pearl of the album. Again the lyrics are very meaningful; the refrains are very rich-sounding in comparison to the quiet quality of the rest of the song, well-transitioned from soft to loud. The drum work throughout the number is also outstanding. Overall, the album is an excellent effort, having a very lyrical quality and absolutely great orchestration on each cut.

Shifting to an altogether different style of performing, we analyze the recent release of Dr. Buzzard's original Savannah Band on RCA records and tapes, with the highlight of the album probably being "I'll Play The Fool," their current hit. It features a good medium beat, some smooth mellow brass, with pronounced percussion and a good ending. It's also a good takeoff on the 1940's Big Band sound. "Hard Times," a real mellow number, features a smooth piano, a mellow sax, and some overall good brass work. (This number also has a '40's Big Band quality.)

I'M call wierd but I like modern music. I go down the street and I buy the records as much as my kids do. When I hear something while I'M washing tables I go buy it."

As far as Juniata College is concerned, Evelyn says, "I know that you have to work at Juniata ... you've always had to do that. I've never actually known whether it's true or not but I feel that the students from Juniata get jobs easier than some smaller colleges. I really think it's a good college."

Evelyn views "kids", her own and others, as the key to a happy and meaningful life. "The one thing that makes (my life worth living) is having the kids here. Not only my kids but all kids. I mean, I must have about 420 kids up here calling me 'Mom' all the time."

V-ball Club Places Fifth

By Dave Robison

Despite the fact the the coach was unable to attend, the volleyball club finished fifth at MAC's. The competition took place Friday and Saturday November 5 and 6 at Franklin and Marshall College in Lancaster. The order of finish was Western Maryland, Dickinson, Washington, Franklin and Marshall, and Juniata College.

JC opened against the number one seeded Western Maryland and lost 15-4 and 16-14. The next match was against Moravian College which they won 15-4 and 15-9. Robin Morgan was the high scorer for this match with 19 points in the two games, including one string of 11 straight. The third match in four hours on Friday night was against the University of Scranton. JC lost the first game 10-15 and won the next two 15 to 11, 15 to 6.

The match to put JC into the final four was Saturday morning at 9:30, against second seeded F-&M. JC won the first game 15-12 and lost the next two 13 to 15 and 12 to 15. The match was well played with the two teams being evenly matched. F&M had more height on their team but JC was more consistent with their serves. A few breaks cost JC the match. The referees throughout all the matches were consistent and good.

The team played good strong team ball, and did not play towards one or two particluar players as other teams did. The balance showed in the points scored; five of six starters were high scorers in one or more of the games. The team would like to acknowledge the seniors, Marge Morgan, Sue Schlosser, and Jane Robinson, and their coach Joanne Reilly. The team would also like to thank its many supporters!

Give-away: Used ("abused") roommate, cuddy; answers to "Peaches". Included: free raisins; one copy of "Vanity Fair," pages missing. Good home desired; East Houses preferred. Interested persons should contact Lynn.

Yearly Competitive Auditions, Results: JC Choir

The Concert Choir receives instructions from director Bruce Hirsch in anticipation of December's performance with the Altoona Symphony Orchestra.

By Carol Tolbert

Juniata's concert choir is under the direction of Professor Bruce Hirsch. It consists of approximately seventy students who are chosen yearly by competitive auditions.

The choir is now rehearsing "Mass in G" by Franz Schubert; its members will perform as guest artists with the Altoona Symphony Orchestra. This presentation will take place in Mishler Theater, Altoona, on Dec. 11, and on Dec. 12 the same concert will recur in Oller Hall.

Later in the year the choir will be touring the states of Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut. It will leave Juniata on Feb. 22 and return on the second of March. In the tour program a combination of motets, madrigals, and apirituals will be sung, ending with a medley of favorites of of the fifties. A total of twelve to fourteen concerts will be presented during the eight-day tour.

In the spring term the choir will stage the musical "Oklahoma". A selected number of qualified students from the rest of the student body will also participate in the performance, which will be shown on May 21 and 22. In addition, a third presentation might take place on the weekend prior to that of May 21 and 22.

Professor Hirsch saysthat some smaller singing groups might perform on radio and-or television. Thus, a good variety of events appears to be in store for the choir.

X-County in MAC's

By Mike Bodley

On November 6, the cross-country team ran together for the last time this year. The harriers competed in the Middle Atlantic Conference (MAC) Cross Country Championships held in Philadelphia, Pa. at Belmont Plateau, Fairmount Park.

On the cold, clear day, the team did well, placing 10th out of 26 teams. GTop finisher for Juniata, on the 5.3 mile course, was Freshman Scott Malay, followed by Jamie Foster, Bob Butler, Mike Bodley, Chris Nagel, and Marty O'Leary.

Once again the team would like to thank everyone for their support.

too many sunnies to even bother counting. Disgusted, he walked out of the lab, tossing a half empty bottle of M.D. 20-20 into the trash can on his way out.

The physics, mathematics and geology wings checked out the same as usual, so our security guard was contemplating what he'd do with the 45 minutes left to his shift. As he passed the computer room, he stopped dead in his tracks. The sounds of billions of tiny laughs leaked from beneath the door. He unlocked the door and looked around. Something was out of place, but it was a few minutes before he realized just what it was. Since when was there a six-by-three foot centerfold of Burt Reynolds, in the buff, above the keypunch machines? It was too much for the man. How could he tell Dr. Wampler he thought there were poltergeists in Brumbaugh Science Center-of all places? In anger and frustration he slammed his fist into Burt Reynolds' jaw, knocking off one of Burt's toes and smashing his own knuckles.

The next day, our battered security guard resigned. He told Dr. Wampler that he just couldn't take the hours anymore-especially with a broken wrist and three broken fingers received in a fall down a flight of steps.

It wasn't until Dr. Tom Fisher joined our chemistry department that the mystery of the Ghosts of Brumbaugh Science Center was solved. It seems that the administration and various members of the biology and chemistry departments had experimented with the idea of using cockroaches for security purposes-to scare the living daylights out of intruders.

The cockroaches were trained to assume intricate patterns in the presence of lights and strangers instead of running to a dark place.

There were only two major problems in this project that had been overlooked. First of all, there was no way to train the cockroaches to differentiate between intruders and persons holding 24 hr. passes. The second problem which no one thought to take into account was the cockroaches' ability to proliferate.

It is said that cockroaches can now be found in cracks and crannies all over the science building, despite the efforts of the Green Army and Dr. Fisher to wipe them out.

So if you're ever in the Brumbaugh Science Center and you see a cockroach, give them a hand and step on it!

Girls May Now Visit Lounge Of Men's Dorm

The Senate, Administration, and Men's House Committee have approved a trial program whereby women will be allowed to visit in the lounge of the men's dormitory from 2 to 5:30 p.m. and from 6 to 12 p.m. on Saturdayssand from 2 to 5:30 and 6 to 10 p.m. on Sundays.

If, however, when the program is re-examined after lhanksgiving, it is found that the coeds have not been taxing advantage of the lounge facilities, or other undesirable situations have arisen, the Senate, Administration, and Men's House committee have the option of revoking the privilege. The program will go into effect this weekend.

Jerry Richards presented to the Senate a petition, signed by 124 students, to have a committee formed to investigate the existing policy and practice for expressing affection on campus.

The following gems were taken from the Rules and Regulations of the Brethren Normal School, 187?-78.

All students, unless excused, must remain in their rooms during evening studyshours.

Students of the two sexes, other than relatives, must not meet privately unless on business, and then only by permission.

All students are expected to join the Literary Society and to discharge faithfully all duties connected therewith.

Coeducation hasn't always been taken as a matter of course. An early JC letterhead contains the following legend:

DiPietro Discusses SBO

By Andrea Hirsh

When first asked to write an article on the new Student Business Organization, I was rather hesitant, having limited knowledge and only a slight interest in the field. After talking to Karl DiPietro, one of the two co-chairmen of the SBO, I can assure you that this is not just another one of those career-oriented, pre-professional clubs with a few speakers throughout the year as I had thought. We have all read about, heard about, or perhaps even experienced the new growth and spirit in the Juniata business department. New and more developed courses and new professors are all part of the excitement. DiPietro, discussing the SBO, shows that this excitement and new energy reaches down to the student body as well.

The Student Business Organization, organized last year, is now "getting off the ground" for the first time and is ready to go. There are presently fifty-five members, and it is important to note here that membership is definitely not restricted in any way. The club has a place for the person with an interest in business even though this interest may not go as far as career goals.

The basic goal of the SBO is to provide students with the latest information concerning business-related opportunities available to them. These opportunities include independent studies both on and off campus, tutoring services, and exposure to outside business individuals and their companies. Members are encouraged to form subgroups dealing with specialized areas in order to pursue their specific ideas and interests. The club does not give you things to do; instead it can give you only what you yourself are willing to put into it.

In this way, according to DiPietro, the student can gain more insight into his interest as well as see how it really is out in the "world of business." He urges anyone interested — especially all business majors — to join because of these benefits.

The SBO, as part of its effort to give members invaluable outside exposure, has scheduled an accounting seminar for the end of January. Alumni of Juniata will give lectures and hold discussions concerning their experiences and the companies they represent.

Does this sound like the club for you? Are you interested in more than just the classroom approach to business? Why not consider the SBO? Watch for posters telling of the next meeting or contact Karl DiPietro, Dave Darkotch, Karen Stone, Rick Loeliger, or Andy Bargerstock.

"War of the Floors"

By Gary Lee Baker

The scene in Sherwood on Wednesday nite October 20, 1976 was a swamping plethora of water — a dorm wide water battle fought in the characteristic style of Sherwood.

I started because of civil disorder within the first floor. It is reported that more than a week before the big battle, terrorists were smearing shaving cream on door knobs of the first floor. After a week of this, suspicion fell on one first floor inhabitant. On the nite of the war, first floor inhabitants were surprised to see written on their doors, in shaving cream, the initials of the suspected terrorist. The initials were written on every door except the suspects.

The suspect had to flee the hall. He found refuge in a second floor room but soon realized that he couldn't stay there forever; he had to go back. But on his way back to first floor, he allegedly kicked the door of a second floor room. This is an important development in the starting of the war. In retaliation, the inhabitants of the room with the dented door filled a manila folder with shaving cream with which they would slide it under the culprit's door and stomp on it. But the plan fell through when they discovered their civtims door was open. Knowing that the culprit was going to the library, the second floor men filled a wombat with water and waited at the other end of the hall for him.

The second floor rowdies concealed themselves behind the doors that led into the stairwell. As their victim walked past they ambushed him. This assassination lit the powder keg that exploded first and second floor into all out war.

Vengeful first floor shock troops, lightly equipped with wombats, stormed through second floor hall shooting down eveybody in their path. This was the only fighting done on second floor soil. From there on all the fighting was done either on the first floor soil or in "no man's land" (the stairwell).

It was at this point that, due to their geographical position, being in Sherwood, the third floor was pulled into the war allied with second floor. The second and third floors coordinated their forces. Second floor shock troops would rush in and wreak havoc amongst the first floor installations, then make a hasty retreat. When the first floor retaliated, they were met in "no man's land" by third floor light artillery. Third floor filled their trash cans with water and dumped them on the unsuspecting attackers. The third floor guys found the trash can method to be quite effective due to their high ground position.

All this happended on the eastern front. On the western front heavy artillery was used. A fifty-five gallon can was filled and then dumped into the first floor hall. Barricades were

A Juniata Christmas Song

Anonymous

(To the tune of "Santa Claus Is Coming To Town")

You better not look,
At none of that gook;
You better not try,
I'm telling you why;
Eddie Straub is serving a meal.

He's checking your cards,
Checking them twice;
Cause tonight we're having some slop over rice;
Eddie Straub is serving a meal.

He's serving ravioli,
That can be quite a sight;
And look at those sick vegetables,
Oh thank God, it's ice cream night!

You better not smell,
You never can tell;
He may get his stuff
Shipped direct from h_____;
Eddie Straub is serving,
But it's not what we're deserving,
Yes Eddie Straub is serving a meal!

grass roots

Anonymous

For lack of anything better to write about, I've chosen grass roots as my topic. And since I can't find a definition for it in my "Webster's New Handy Pocket Dictionary," I've taken the liberty of defining the phrase in my own terms.

Grass, in the orthodox sense of the word, is a green herbage that is commonly found covering lawns and pastures. It's not bad to look at, all in all, and we're rather accustomed to it. But it's the roots that hold it together. The root system of grass is prodigious, covering a large area, yet remaining fairly shallow. With that, I'd like to attempt an allegory which I am sure the editor of this paper did not intend when she-he chose the title of this column.

The Grass Roots column was meant to be written by a student randomly selected from the student body. This is not a huge college, but the students make up a large force when they're compared to the handful who produce this paper. Therefore, point one of the allegory: the system is extensive. However, it took several phone calls before anyone could be found who was willing to do this column.

Point two: Grass is not bad to look at. Neither are the students of the college, generally speaking. The increase in SAT scores and class standing among freshmen should make the statistician and data-monger happy. Yet, looking deeper, it is too easy to find a lot of shallow people within the system. If this impression is correct, it seems that a comparison between the easily uprooted mass of grass roots and the superficial people attending the school becomes painfully obvious. It is not uncommon to hear of how so-and-so really "screwed over" so-and-so, a "good friend" of theirs. A daily dose of the JC grapevine is more tear-jerking than the weekly installment plan of "All My Children." Being a relatively optimistic person, I hesitate to credit all the rumors I hear. I've found that since the good news is never half as juicy as the bad, we usually hear about the nasty things. So, I'm going to destroy my allegory right here: I believe that the majority of people here at Juniata are really great, and that the shallow persons simply make up a noisy minority. After all, another definition of "roots" connotes great strength, which more ably fits the average Juniata student.

But for those of you who get their jollies by being vindictive and stabbing others in the back, I feel sorry for you. It must be hard to find any joy at Christmastime when you can't even be sure of your "friends."

And for everybody else, I hope the smiles of the season take root in your heart and make you happy. Merry Christmas!

Letters to the Editor

Editor's note: It is the editor's policy that anonymous articles will be printed upon request as long as the author's signature accompanies the request. I must know who the anonymous author is. I have made an exception in this case but there will definitely be no more exceptions in the future.

This is a true account directed to all those people who believe that it just couldn't happen to them. I am not exactly sure whether I have written this as a warning, a plea, or out of the hope that you can avoid what I have gone through in the past few weeks. It all happened this Thanksgiving as I was Christmas shopping with over one hundred dollars in my wallet. I came across an eighteen dollar sweater that I believed would make the perfect gift for a sister of mine. Yet the more I thought, the less I wanted to spend, and the more I wanted the sweater. I thought of many ways to get the sweater out yet my mind was beginning to blank, I felt my heart pound, my hands freeze a little with tenseness and my upper lip begin to sweat. Carefully I dropped the sweater into a bag and casually started to walk out of the store, but overwhelmed with the idea of what I had just done, picked up my pace and swiftly moved out of the store. As I got to my car I turned to the store to see a black man and a white woman, both in their twenties running after me. This is the moment when reality came back and I realized what I had just done, yet it was all a moment too late. I pulled the sweater from the bag and handed it over to the approaching man with a muffled "Oh my God." I felt my mind step from my body and I saw a shaking young lady, too stunned to cry, too ashamed to think. Could this really be happening to me? The three of us moved back through the store, past the onlooking salesgirls and customers. As we passed through the dressing room and into a vacant room I mumbled that I knew I was in trouble and heard the response, "They always think of that afterwards." The two undercover cops tried to relax me, asking me several informal questions, and as I sat answering those questions I have never in my entire life felt so totally deserted. What had I just done for a lousy eighteen dollar sweater? Not only to me, but to my parents, to my reputation, any future job, financial aid. How can anyone respect a kid who's got a record of shoplifting? I could already see the hurt in my parents' eyes. The total bewilderness cannot be put into words.

As I talked to the couple who had siezed me I tried to convince them that I was not some kind of criminal, this was not me, but how many times they had heard that. They had seen every move I had made in the store and cited them to me as if from a book. After what seemed like eternity the female agent came in and explained that they weren't going to press charges, she didn't know why she had encouraged them not to, she usually just books them. I still cannot believe this, it all feels like a dream, not a dream, a nightmare. I was escorted from the store by the female agent. The store fell quiet and I felt all eyes gazing towards me. I commented that I felt awful and was informed that I was lucky, most kids leave in handcuffs.

I don't remember the drive home, although it's not a short one. I don't remember many things, there are many void spots, but I do remember that torn feeling, the gazing faces, and the two undercover agents. I'll never know how to thank them for not pressing charges.

Before tossing this article aside, I want to point out that I'm not some member of a homogeneous population of shoplifters. I am a fairly outgoing, active student here at Juniata that most of you know, and who will probably talk to about this article in the course of a conversation, without ever realizing that I am the author. The important point is that I too once believed that it couldn't happen to me.

Sir:

At this festive season I note with dismay that there are skeptics on your campus, people who believe that there really is no such person as jolly old Fred Binder. This avuncular and apple-cheeked saint, so beloved to kiddies and handball-players everywhere, they claim, is a figment of the imagination, no more real and substantial than Kathleen or Wilfred G. Norris.

To all such cynical fellows I say, BUNKUM. Fred Binder is real, and so is his wife Edna Sally Grace, who at this very moment is baking gingerbread men — don't interrupt her — for all the happy dwarves and for Sandy McBride and the six moose who can draw the sled of Fred. Look out your windows on Christmas morning, when little children are sinking with their toboggans into the mud, awaiting the first snowflake, and tell me there is no Fred Binder. No Fred Binder? Might as well say there is no Kermit Parker or Peggy Schultz.

This is the time to throw away our crab-apple doubts, affirm LIFE, and send 25¢ and two boxtops to

For it is only when we look for a rainbow that we see moose-feet on our porch.

Not believe in Fred Binder? Tell me that ice-skates do not have wheels, and I will believe you. Tell me that Suzette will make no more crepes, and I'll accede. Tell me that the caterpillar turns into a butterfly, and — muffling a giggle — I'll agree. But tell me there is no Fred Binder, and all the checkbooks of industry will snap shut. Birds will not sing, even though they may whistle a lot. Ellis Hall will become the home of lizards and bats again. There is a Fred Binder, you stupid jerks, and may the joys of the season be yours.

Since arriving at Juniata College, I have heard many comments about the lack of activity within the Ellis Campus Center. I personally have seen many areas which I feel are grossly underutilized. Because of these concerns I am interested in setting up a Building Use Committee to evaluate the present and proposed uses of the Ellis Campus Center. Hopefully the Committee would evaluate the present space allotments for services, survey the College Community for recommendations of other services which should be provided within the building, and finally make recommendations to establish priorities on the direction of future building changes.

Ideally the Committee would be comprised of twelve members with myself as a non-voting advisory member. I am seeking six student members representing Student Government, Center Board and the student body at large. There should also be six non-student members representing the present building services, the faculty and the College administration.

If any students who are not on Student Government or Center Board feel they have the time and interest to devote to this project they should leave their name and box number at the Ellis Campus Center Information Desk. We will select two students at random from those who apply to represent the student body at large.

Report on Juniata Senate

By Nancy J. Rowe

The end of any year is a time to reflect on past accomplishments and disappointments, and a time to look forward with enthusiasm to the future. The Senate of Juniata may wish to concentrate their reflections on the past weeks.

A major accomplishment came when it was learned that R&R Vending Co. backed down to the Senate's demands. R&R, who originally wanted to raise the price of a pack of cigarettes or cut the Student Government profit, agreed to allow both the price and the profit to remain the same.

Senators Gross and Kulp reported that the Resources Committee has been doing very well. Both student and faculty interest is high. The purpose of the committee is to investigate any unnecessary energy use and costs.

Senator Nancy Molnar has been named as the Student Government representative to Center Board. A student has also been permitted to attend the proprieties and expenditure committee to find out how and where students' money is being appropriated.

Time should also be spent to analyze the mistakes that the Senate has made. They have been sluggish on two major proposals. The proposed shuttle buses to Penn State has been dragged out for over two months. Having a large 10x10 television screen available for major televised events has also died. Both proposals have been brought up at every meeting since early

Prior to our departure from campus last term, we received a Newsletter from the Dean of Student Services Office. The information which was entered on the paper included policies which, in some way, affected the student. Examples were: how students gain permission to live off campus and how many people each dorm lounge is able to accommodate for campus parties. There was also a short, very short, three lines which relayed to the student the price of admission for another year at Juniata. The magic number for next year is 4,000 dollars.

This was most important item of the entire Newsletter, to which only three lines were devoted. Naturally, the same positive reinforcement was given: we feel that this is a lower price hike than most other private institutions; having the same student population as Juniata.

The only problem with this reinforcement is that we don't attend other institutions. Instead we attend Juniata, and one must wonder if other institutions have to put up with no hot water (or sometimes no water at all) or no heat in addition to other sundry items.

A solution to the problem might be to bring in Bob Barker or Monty Hall, and have a game of "The Price is Right" or "Let's Make A Deal." Unfortunately, it would be difficult for one to decide whether it would be a prize to win a year's tuition at Juniata, or if that would be the gong.

The biggest comment that is circling around campus among seniors is "boy, am I glad I'm getting out of here." Somehow, one would think that at some point in time, Juniata will set a precedent and not raise the price of admission. In that way, the same old positive reinforcement wouldn't have to be used, and everyone would be happy.

Radio City

By Nathan Wagoner

In view of the fact that this is my first (and quite possibly my last) article in this, well, I'll be nice about it, newspaper, I think it only fair that the unfortunately misled readers of this scandal sheet should be amply forewarned of my biases and inclinations concerning music. These are likely to be varied and virulent, especially since they have been greatly intensified by the fact that every scrap of so-called "musical criticism" I have read in the Juniatian so far this year has merely consisted of "Well, I like it so it's good." Granted, it can be argued that this is the basis of all criticism, but I happen to hail from the effete snobby school which holds that there are certain standards of artistic quality which should be upheld. I mean, really, since when are Barry Manilow's lyrics deep and meaningful? Cut me a break. So pardon me, folks, if I wax obnoxious; but I should get some kind of a reaction out of you, anyway. Here's to offensive criticism!

Anyway, not to get carried away, what I'm going to do with this article is just give you a bunch of quickies, and next time, if there is to be one, I'll go into something in depth.

First, a list of albums or persons to be avoided at all costs:

Anything by Elton John or Chicago.

Peter Frampton — he's such a nice boy!

McCartney — see below.

Dylan — what happened to him, anyway?

Starship — Would probably do OK if they could get Gracie Slick to shut up for more than ten seconds and cure Kantner of whatever horrible disease he has that makes him groan so.

Led Zep — If Jimmy Page and John Paul Jones would strangle Robert Plant and let Bonham the Barbarian beat his drums into complete submission, they's probably have a damn good band.

The Eagles — I hold this band personally responsible for taking the guts out of Rock and Roll.

Alice Cooper — should be strung up on stage, only for real this time.

Grateful Dead — Someday Jerry Garcia will learn how to tune his guitar and then everyone will know how bad he is.

Joan Baez — Won't she ever give up?

The Bee Gees — God save us.

Styx — Bleeaahhh!!

Then there are those people who are just, well, talented and all that, but what's their problem?

John Klemer, Touch — Would be a really fine album as far as easy listening jazz goes, but he does these incredibly good imitations of Barry White that hold it back somehow . . .

Beach Boys — It was just recently brought to my attention (this is a new one for me), after having listened to the Holland album, that the Beach Boys have an amazing amount of potential. Too bad they waste it. Doowahdoo.

Fleetwood Mac — Always good in the past, even with Bob Welch, but their last album, with one or two exceptions, was totally uninspired. Probably why it sold so well.

Hall and Oates — Technically flawless musicians, and Bigger Than Both of Us is a definite improvement, but oooowweee, can you smell all that money?

Harrison — C'mon, George, how can you write Taxman, and While My Guitar Gently Weeps, and then come out with this

Interview with Justham

By Kit Ayars

Mr. Wayne Justham is Juniata's Assistant Dean of Student Services and Director of Programming. He is here to help students in whatever way he can, yet few people seem to take advantage of his help.

Mr. Justham came to Juniata on the first of June, making this his sixth month at the college. He is responsible for all student activities and is a valuable resource for any student interested in a co-curricular program on campus. If you want to organize your own club, Mr. Justham can help you make sure that the club complies with all the standards set by the college. He is responsible for all of Ellis, excepting the food services bank and school store, and is available for student counseling. Also an adviser to Center Board, Wayne Justham had one thing to say about his job — "I love it!" He was a dean at the University of New Hampshire and did similar work there. A graduate of Allegheny College, he likes the small school atmosphere of Juniata. He thinks people are more friendly here and he enjoys being able to recognize a good percentage of them. His main hobby is his job, and he can be found in his office from 12:00 to 9:00. He feels these hours are more conveniant for both himself and the students. Mr. Justham's comment on his office was that he'd "like to be more visible." This is understandable, his office is buried beyond the Ellis Information Desk, and few students even realize that there is someone back there.

Mr. Justham would like a lot more contact with students. Gripes and suggestions on programming are always welcome and no appointment is necessary. If you have any ideas about the college and/or its activities, tell him about it. It's difficult for him to build a successful program if he doesn't know what you want. Mr. Justham is also "concerned about the amount of student participation." Students need to have faith in the programming. Too many sit in their dorms and complain while there are activities to go to. Now, everything is set up for the weekends, but Mr. Justham would like to see something going on every night of the week, especially during the long winter months. He considers the college a "mini-community." One of the programs recently innovated was the coffeehouse. This is to give the students "an alternative to drinking for drinking's sake." As Mr. Justham pointed out, in the 'real world', alcohol is an accompaniment to entertainment, not an entertainment in itself. There are many complaints about fees this year, but these are necessary because of the limited budget. A cut in fees would mean a cut in programming.

Mr. Justham lists the main problems in programming as "lack of participation, lack of promotion, and general apathy." Students would rather sit in their rooms than get out, unless 'everybody' is going. This leads to a stifling circle — nobody goes unless everybody goes, and everybody can't go unless somebody goes. An example of this is the Styx concert. When it was announced that tickets were almost sold out, there was a huge increase in ticket sales. Still, twice as many non-college as Juniata people attended. Tote is often empty — why? Student answers are needed if anything is to be changed. Center Board meetings are open to all students. They meet every Tuesday night at 7:00, and the Information Desk should know where the meeting will be held. And Mr. Justham wants to hear your complaints, so you can stop bugging your roomie. He is willing to meet in the dorm, at his office, Tote, or anywhere else. For Juniata to have good programming, student input is vital. Complain where it will do some good; Mr. Justham is always willing to listen.

Correction

Due to a printer's error in last week's issue an article written by one of the reporters was not printed in its originality. Due to the way the article was jumbled up, accusations were made which were not in the original article. Following is the second half of the article as it should have been printed.

Student Government. Brian Smith requested that all suggestions be reported to Steve Bono, which many of the Senators failed to do. The point to be made, however, is that student suggestions have been shoved aside for several weeks with no consideration given to them. Several Senators then ironically complained that students were not giving them ideas on what they wanted.

It seems that Student Government is getting more bureaucratic and sluggish each week. It should be suggested that the Senate look within their own bureaucratic mess for the suggestions that have been given to them by students. They should not accuse the student body of being apathetic, because they are not doing a very good job in keeping students informed. They should exhaust all possibilities on an issue before voting. Procedural hassles could be solved by appointing one Senator to study the correct procedures, thus eliminating the petty bickering over such matters.

Most of all, Student Government should work for the benefit of the students — not just Student Government. The Senate seems to consider these two bodies as separate, and ignore the purpose for their organization.

I do not consider myself a Jack Anderson or Ralph Nader, looking for controversy or things to "reform." I only want to suggest that Student Government keep in mind its purpose, and work efficiently toward that goal.

French table

"La table francaise" is being held this term every Wednesday evening from 5:00 to 6:00 in the faculty lounge.

For those of you who wonder what French Table is, it's just a time when students interested in speaking French, either for practice or for fun, get together at supper and converse.

So if you've been waiting for a formal invitation, this is it. Join us this Wednesday at 5:00.

In memory of Joesph R.

By Evagelia "Teddy" Lyras

On the fateful evening of November 18, at 7:40 p.m., a portion of the roof in the North American Coal Corp.'s Aulds Rund No. 2 mine in Indiana County, Penna., fell in. The only person affected by the cave-in was Joseph R. "Crazy Joe" Kershishnik, a member of the class of 1977 and a three year letterman in football. He was pronounced dead at the scene at 9:50 p.m. His death was due to crush injuries of the spine and to suffocation.

He had been reportedly working with a continuous mining machine in a developmental section of the mine when the accident happened. Mine employees worked for two hours until about 9:30 before being able to free the body. "Crazy Joe" had been employed there approximately three months. He is survived at home by his mother, Mrs. Kershishnik and six younger sisters and brothers, and his father who resides in Cleveland, Ohio.

A Clymer native, "Crazy Joe" was 21. He was a 1973 graduate of Penns Manor High School, where he had captained the football team and also lettered in track. A mathematics major at Juniata, "Crazy Joe" had left the college this year to work in the mine and help support his family. He had planned, however, to complete his degree here at Juniata next fall.

While at school Joe participated in both football and wrestling. In football he was an Indian regular since his freshman year, having played as a first-line substitute on the 1973 Stagg Bowl team. A defensive tackle, he started during both his sophomore and junior seasons. He was perhaps the most popular player on any of the squads.

According to head coach Walt Nadzak, "Joe was one of the hardest-working, most enthusiastic, honest kids we've ever had. He was honest about his love for the game, his love for Juniata, and his love for his family. Joe was a very refreshing person, totally honest and naive. He was an absolute pleasure to coach, intelligent, he was a gentleman. He was an innocent kid who believed in people." He was ignorant of the evils of today's world because for him they did not exist. "I can honestly say that I believe that Joe never held a grudge against anyone in his entire life. He was a highly principled young man whom we'll miss very much."

Coach Rossi who recruited Joe for football back in 1973 says, "that Joe was the most sincere man ever recruited in years. He was sincere to his school and family. His loyalty to his family is clearly shown by his sacrifice of his senior year. He was a very dedicated sincere young man for his family. I was in his home three years ago, I saw the poverty he lived in. He was always concerned for his brother and sisters. If one didn't know him personally, one would think he was a phony, for how can such a person exist in this day and age. Yes, a person like him did actually exist in today's society."

In wrestling Joe did not perform spectacularly. One reason was that he came to college wrestling with no previous experience. He had never wrestled in high school. Steve Harper, a teammate of Joe's describes Joe as always seeming to be "concerned with everyone else. You couldn't find anyone friendlier than him. It seemed like he did not have enough time to devote to wrestling. But when he was here, he was dedicated.

He went all out. Maybe one reason why he was not that great was because he was too concerned about football and academics. Wrestling was something he wanted to learn, he enjoyed it so much."

Scott Simmons, another of his teammates who worked out with "Crazy Joe" most of the time says that "Crazy Joe," "was one of the most dedicated athletes I have ever known. He gave 100 per cent all the time. I think that no matter what Joe did he would be happy."

According to Coach Bill Berrier "Crazy Joe" exemplifies his "interpretation of what a JC athlete does represent, for himself and for the institution. Both in the classroom and the athletic, Joe was always striving to better himself. He made up for what he lacked physically with a strong will and desire to achieve excellence. He was a kind of athlete that you would want to work with because he did not display the attitude that he knew everything and that he was willing to try something new to improve himself. He always put the college program first in football, wrestling, and intramurals. That was foremost in his behavior. He was an extremely dedicated athlete."

One of Joe's advisors, Prof. Ronald Cherry, says that Joe "was extremely conscientious and very methodical about planning. He took all his decisions very seriously. He looked at life with a definite planning. Last spring Joe and I talked at length about working or finishing school. He wanted to finish school, but his family came first. Those are the characteristics that stick out in my mind."

According to Prof. Max Heller Joe was "conscientious in respect to his academic performance. He was one of the more friendly students on campus. It was evident that he enjoyed life, what he was doing. He always tried to work to his fullest capabilities."

Prof. Wise thinks that Joe was a person who "knew what he wanted. He wanted to be his own man. I had him quite a while ago but he has impressed me by tak-

Mr. Weisberger,

I am not writing this letter for publication but merely as an explanation to those people who are interested about the college football careers of those former Indiana County high school gridders.

I regret very much to say this but I have decided to take a full 1 year leave of absence from Juniata College. Two of the many things I regret about my decision is that I do not have the chance now to play against I.U.P. and to graduate with my rightful senior class. Financial reasons were the basis for my decision and I am presently, slowly but surely, relieving the situation as I have a very good paying job. As I read over the article published one year ago I feel exactly the same now as I did then. I have pride in Juniata as a learning institution and also in its football program. I have not quit college and sure do not plan to throw away the things I have earned. I am only delaying the climax of my college career just like I am delaying for 1 more year playing against I.U.P. And anyhow, emotionally, I would much rather play I.U.P. right in their own stadium and in front of their many fans.

Letter from a Back-Home Friend

The following is a letter I received on December 8 from Tina Tate, one of "Crazy Joe's" best friends from back home. Its contents clearly show the feelings which one experiences after just losing a close friend; it also shows what kind of a person "Crazy Joe" was. Tina and I have never met, but we heard about each other through "Crazy Joe" himself, and now we are friends.

Dear Teddy,

I have read and reread your letter many times. I deeply wanted to respond to it, but I didn't have a clear mind. I feel I can say now what I see to be true.

Teddy, this is the first time I've ever lost a close friend. In fact I didn't even realize how close of friends we were, till Joe died. That was a double shock for me.

But through it all, Teddy, I can honestly state, that I am not bitter. I am just so happy that in my life time I knew someone like Joe. Even in Death, Joe is an inspiration to me. I feel him in my heart, I still can hear that crazy laugh, and I carry those memories with me, but life goes on.

You know, Teddy, life is a strange teacher. She hits you with a new lesson when you least expect it. That's how I view Joe's death. It was tragic and untimely, but these thoughts don't prevail. When I think of Joe's passing — I think of a beautiful individual who knew how to handle life, he lived his life to the fullest, never wasting an experience or chance to learn.

It must have been very hard for you to be so far away at that time, but Teddy, it took a special strength. I'm proud of you.

I really would like to meet all of you and get together. I have finals the week of December 14th. But, I have my own apartment and plenty of room — if you girls ever decide to come out this way! I'd love to have you!

Teddy, there is lots more I could say, but I'll save it till I see you in person!

God Bless You, Take Care.

Love,
Tina Tate

'Crazy Joe' Kershishnik

'...I'm Confident Things Will Work Out Okay'

By Evagelia "Teddy" Lyras

Perhaps this statement best defines Joe Kershishnik's attitude towards everything — his life, his friends, his family, his education . . .

In a letter to a close friend of his, Joe says, "Things at home are coming along fine. I definitely feel that my hard labor is paying off. We are getting ahead and things are financially better now than they have been for several years. Everyone in our family is pulling together and using our resources efficiently. But that does not mean we do all work and no play. Each one of us has our certain pleasures and to a great extent our individual pleasures are fulfilled. So it's not like our life is all sacrifice and no play. Boy oh Boy! If that doesn't sound like a sentence full of bullshit (sic.) (HA HA) To put it into words we can both identify with, the way in which I am having a good time is visiting and hiting (sic) the town with friends . . . I am taking on more responsibility at work and it seems that every day I am in a better repoir(sic) with my crew and other miners too. I feel a part of the crew and that I can do more for myself even though I still get told to do a lot and my boss bitches at me . . . So far today has gone just great. I received a letter from both you and Teddy, and I love letters, and I get a complete tune-up on the car engine this morning. Things are going good and I feel very good and happy." It did not take much to make Joe happy. He would make himself happy. He did not need extravagance. All it took was simple things such as a letter, or being thankful that the car worked. With receiving self-satisfaction, Joe was the happiest person in the world.

Joe was a happy, easy-going person who took things as they came. He was filled with confidence — which was instilled through his careful planning of whatever he undertook. Never did he utter a harsh word; there was always a warm, welcoming smile filled with happiness. He was a great athlete in all senses, not only in the physical capabilities of which he was very proud of but also in his attitude toward a sport and the opposing team. He was a religious person who always turned to God in time of need. He knew and believed that whatever crossed his path — be it sweet or painful — was due to the will of God. He always prepared himself to accept whatever God had in store for him. This was Joe's attitude toward life, an attitude which made him into a happy, easy-going person; an attitude which made him a great person. "He was so many things wrapped up in one individual."

In another letter — the last of which he was to write to a close friend, he discussed his job in the coal mines, "On Monday my shifts went on strike. We had a bitch about the way the company was scheduling overtime. So we had a special union meeting Mon. afternoon, us union members decided how we wanted to select overtime people; and the company accepted our offer. So we went to work today and I'm sure glad of that, after all, I can't make any money sitting at home."

"After work today I was told to report to a completely different shift of work starting Wed. I am not happy at all cause I got to know and like the people on my regular and normal shift. I know things will be awkward at first but I'm confident things will work out okay." His optimistic attitude again prevails . . . on Thursday evening, however, the accident occurred, after having worked only two new shifts . . . little did he know . . .

The last paragraph of this letter goes like this: "These past two days I have not felt too comfortable. It's hard to explain but it seems like I'm trying to do too much and therefore leaving little time for just pure rest. Something or things has meant confusion to me in the past 2 days.

"I'll close for the time being. ByeBye now, take care, and God Bless you." Can it be said that he has achieved his "pure rest?"

Joe lived a good, happy life — 21 fulfilling years. We should be happy to have had such a person for at least 21 years. He may not be here now, but his memory shall be eternal. God bless his soul!

The Effect of the Death of a JC Student

By Evagelia "Teddy" Lyras

The Juniata campus is experiencing the death of one of its students . . . a student who was well-known throughout campus. One will no longer be able to hear his simple sincere words nor hear his crazy laughter. He was once here, full of energy and enthusiasm, but he will not be able to be here again. "The candle is out . . . what he was is our hope."

The darkness of the night was slowly disappearing, dawn was approaching . . . that fateful morning was about to appear. Word reached the Juniata campus . . . it quickly spread, as if on wings. A cloud began to hover over the campus . . . Everyone knew; people looked at each other, but what could they say? Gloom had descended, nothing could be done to prevent it. The world seemed to become static, everything seemed to be the same. Nothing mattered any longer . . . people were being numbed with grief. The sorrowful cloud was becoming bigger and bigger . . . it could not burst for everyone was not here, most had already left for home.

All are experiencing the same grief . . . all are forced to face the same truth . . . all are slowly admitting, that yes, it is true. Grief is being showered everywhere! It is falling uncontrollably. We turn to ourselves for help . . . but where is the inner strength we thought was there? Sorrow has liquidated it . . . we are now alone in this horror-stricken world . . . our hearts are torn . . . we are then grateful for the helping hand our friends extend. Our friends do not seem so far away any more, they are coming closer and closer. They are near. What would we do without them? It is still hard to bear . . . the grief is mounting. Our hearts have been torn away from us.

We are turning to one another . . . we find that we no longer are alone. We are beginning to grope for the extra strength to go on. It is still dark, but the cloud has burst. We have found our true friends . . . we find new friends . . . old friendships become re-established. We are still groping but we are no longer alone, we have one another. Reality is harsh, but it is there. We have been united.

Our Friend—Joe

On November 18, 1976 many people were saddened by the news of the death of one of our closest friends, Joe Kershishnik, while on a leave of absence from this school he was killed in a mining accident while earning money for his family.

Joe was a person who had definite priorities. These priorities first began with his responsibility to his family. This priority was met when he took time off from school to meet the needs of his family. A second priority he achieved was placing others before himself.

In my own words, Joe was perhaps best known as "Crazy Joe" because of his dedication and hard work on the football field. Despite his size, he still played well because of his high motivation and enthusiasm for the game.

Off the field, Joe was known as the most honest and sincere person to all. He displayed these qualities in a most natural way. Joe was a person who did favors for others without expecting favors in return.

Crazy Joe's "down to earth" attitude put others foremost while he put himself second.

He was the person who would go out of his way to meet other people. In a College Community where clics prevail Joe was welcome anywhere because he had friends everywhere.

His superior ability to communicate with people and his total acceptance of others led people to respect him highly.

The purpose behind this article was to express our love to Joe, to people who knew him and for those who didn't get the opportunity to know him. Crazy was our friend, a friend who always had positive effects upon others. He will be missed deeply by all who knew him.

Fund Raising for Joe Kershishnik

A group of students have gotten together in order to raise money. The first project, which will be starting today will be to gather money to give to the family of Joe Kershishnik as a Christmas gift. Donations for the family will be accepted in the Ellis Lobby during dinner time or one may mail their donations to P.O. Box 667. The second project (which will not begin till after we come back from vacation) will be to raise money for some kind of a memorial scholarship. It has not yet been decided what kind of a memorial scholarship.

If anyone has any questions feel free to contact Bill Drexler, Michele Fistek, Lia Fong, Karen Bantley, Pam Miller, Teddy Lyras, Gary Puchulshi, Tracy Saraco, or Harry Weimer.

Dean of Students, Dr. Hartman is glad to see the students undertaking a project like this. He says that, "Something like this is obviously some kind of expression of how the community feels about it. I think it is a good thing that the community who did know someone react in this way — it is like an organic function, something that should be done. There is a need for common expression. This seems to be most appropriate to the campus, and I think it will have the support of a lot of people. It needs to be an expression of how we feel."

Following is a poem dedicated to Joe. It is written by Tina Tate who read it for all of us at the funeral.

Ticking,
a roar,
the sounds of silence engulf the fleeting essence of life has slipped away — the candle is out. Death sends my mind racing, pursuing trails that never end, sadly contemplating journeys that will never be made.
Loneliness, a touch, a whisper to what could be.
What he was is our hope.

My Junior Year Abroad in Germany

By Marcy Wagoner

Spending my junior year in Germany was undoubtedly an experience that I will never again be able to re-create. I will always cherish my memories (both good and bad) of this year and believe that in this single year I learned more about people (including myself), ideas and places than I will ever learn again in my lifetime. It wasn't always good but the bad times are all a part of the total experience of spending a year in Europe.

I will never forget the discovery that my 3 years of high school German and almost two of college were not particularly helpful in understanding the people as they spoke the language. However, I must add that in two weeks time I had learned more than I had learned in a term here and when you either have to communicate in German or not at all — you learn! From the beginning we were told we could learn far more by conversing with Germans than with our books. So, not needing a great deal of convincing, I started to frequent a few of the student bars which offer a great deal more than Katie's or Kelley's (to say the very least). The beer in Germany (although more bitter) is without comparison as are many of the wines. Since Marburg is largely a University town, the bars are usually student occupied so the atmosphere is casual and friendly. One place owned by Frenchmen even served Crepes all evening!

Speaking of food brings me to a subject I simply can not omit since I spent about one half of the time I was there eating. On almost every street there is a Konditerei, which is a little cafe. You go in, choose a piece (or two) of torte (which is similar to cake although about 10,000 calories a piece due to the fact that they are usually smothered in whipped cream) and sit down in a small restaurant. The waitress brings you your cake and takes your order for coffee (or whatever — the hot chocolate is also available with whipped cream). After you receive your beverage you are free to stay there all day long if you like, which is one of the most pleasant customs I found. The pace of life in Germany is much slower than here, which is really refreshing. No one would ever dream of rushing anywhere at anytime. There's nothing better than going to a Cafe all Sunday afternoon instead of working. We just don't have anything that could compare.

I can't be dishonest and say that I found it easy to meet people, because I think it was the singular most difficult thing about going there and perhaps one of the hardest things I ever had to do. Germany is not for shy people. Foreign students are quite common in German Universities and for this reason no one makes any special effort to notice that you might be lonely. It's not intentional, it's just the way they are. It takes some time to break through their shell of reservedness. Americans are often criticized for being superficially friendly, and sometimes one really wonders; but I can not believe that the Germans' cautiousness is any better. One should pick and choose one's close friends but there has to be a happy medium. However, once you make some friends, they will do anything for you. I think as long as you would understand this you would be fine. One must only have a great deal of patience and learn to grin and bear it.

I was also fortunate enough to travel quite a bit, which in itself constitutes an education. Switzerland, Italy, Holland, Paris, London and Munich were among the many places I visited. The truly impressive thing about Europe was being able to be in a totally different culture within a matter of hours. The variety of landscapes and people and their cultures was fascinating, and I believe Americans miss a great deal by not being able to do this without great expense.

It's extremely difficult to summarize a whole year with one article because there are simply too many things to be remembered. I can only say that experience-wise and educationally, I could never have learned one half as much being here, and although there were some difficult times, I believe the good outweighed the bad. It gave me a chance to re-evaluate everything I believed in and through this I certainly could not avoid some inner change.

I hope to return someday for a time, but not permanently. I find myself appreciating twice as much what I have in my life here and although it would be fun for awhile, I know I would rather establish permanent residence in the U.S.

I've tried to show you a little bit of the everyday life in Germany and although I've barely skimmed the surface, these are some of the things that left an impression. I can surely say as far as language learning is concerned, experience is the ONLY teacher!

'Living in Eternity's Sunrise, Kissing the Joy as it Flies'

By Mike Bush

As the term comes to a close, I think it appropriate to talk about the past and what the near future holds for us. The well-known poet William Blake once wrote, "He who binds himself a joy does the winged life destroy; But he who xisses the joy as it flies lives in eternity's sunrise."

Some of us can really relate to these words. So very often we try to hold onto the past — those past experiences, loves, and close friendships which have meant so much to us. We try so hard to keep them as they once were, but discover that all we have is an empty shell of something which had so much meaning, yet collapses in our grasp.

This is particularly true of friendships; perhaps we have had some deep and meaningful friendships. The kind of friends which we had while we were going to school, we could be ourselves with — honest and trusting, in laughter or in tears.

Then though time, distance, and varied experience the friends were only seen on occasion, and for some hard-to-explain reason we could never pick up where we left off. We remember these friendships and the time they were, in all reality, over. We try to cling to the meaning they once had, hoping to find in our memory and occasional meetings old foundations for a new beginning. What we discover by working to resurrect these old, once very beautiful relationships is that we neglect to establish new and deeper friendships with those around us, whom we need and who need us. Dwelling on these memories causes much hurt and distress. The results are negative in both social and academic life. Not only do we find an empty shell in these past relationships, but we tend to build walls around ourselves for establishing present relationships.

It seems to me that people in this situation are not themselves and are misunderstood by others around them. In many ways it relates to school work, too. If one concentrates on the A's (or D's) of last term, it detracts from proceeding forth and accomplishing new and better goals this term. We should learn from past experiences and concentrate on the present.

So, just be yourself, learn from the past and live for today. If only we could "kiss the joy as it flies" and be forever "in eternity's sunrise!"

'Loose Lips Sink Ships'

By Gary Lee Baker

Deer Season is past now. The varmints can feel safe until after Christmas when the extended bow season comes in. It was reported on the first day of deer season that approximately one million hunters walked into the mountains and woodlands of Pennsylvania in search of the male white tail deer. (distinguishable from the female in that it has antlers.)

A million hunters in the woods means a million hunting experiences. And with so many different experiences there has to be a few really bizarre ones. My friends, Curt and Davey, me and an on-the-location cameraman from ABC had such an experience.

We were out of the sack at 5:00 A.M. on a cold Monday morning, Nov. 29, 1976. We had a few doughnuts and some coffee for breakfast, and then began discussing potential hunting spots. Curt suggested Sherwood grove since visibility is 100 per cent due to the sparse tree population. Nobody liked that idea because deer are seldom seen there. Davey suggested the woodlands of Kentucky but none of us had a Kentucky hunting license and besides, it was too far to drive. I suggested going up on the old Juniata cross country course. I explained to them that I had seen deer there earlier in the year, and that the woods are dense farther back. We decided on the cross country course.

I was armed with a Winchester .270, Davey had his 58 cal. flintlock, Curt was armed with his mouth and the cameraman had a Kodak XL movie camera.

We hit the woods at 6:00 A.M. and walked back in. Light came as it was going on seven. We snuck, crept, and looked around but saw nothing. We came upon a hill around ten o'clock and just as we hit the crest of the hill we saw movement. It was deer. I scoped them and counted nine. Curt immediately began talking them to death. The cameraman shot but neither man brought a deer down. Davey was going through the long process of loading his gun so I pulled up to shoot. Curt said "Wait." I said "What's wrong?" He said "I thought I saw a flash of red down there; I think there's a hunter down there." I said "You're a looney, Gowdy; If there was a guy there, all those deer would be hittin' the road." I pulled up again and shot the first deer and the rest scampered off. At this point I began noticing peculiar things about this bunch of deer. I realized that the other eight deer didn't lift their white tails in the face of danger. They didn't have any white tails to lift. I didn't think about it before but I realized that the other eight deer had horns also. But the really bizarre thing I noticed was the one I shot had a blinking red nose that said "TILT." I thought I had shot the bionic buck. Davey said, "Well snap my suspenders, in the hunderd an' ferty years I been huntin' deer, I never come across somethin' like this befere." But meat is meat so I began field dressing the deer. As I was dressing the deer Davey Crocket sensed something in the air. I felt something was going on too. Curt was running at the mouth so he didn't notice anything. The cameraman was too busy getting gory shots of blood so he didn't notice anything either. We could hear loud crunching noises coming toward us, when what to our wandering eyes should appear but a fat load in a red suit with a fluffy white beard. And boy was he mad. He was running right at us screaming and yelling. He ran right down over the hill and punched Curt right in the head. I didn't know what to do so I introduced myself, Davey and the cameraman. He said he was Santa Claus. He explained to us that they were his deer and that we had killed his lead deer, Rudolph. We all felt bad. I asked him what his reindeer were doing here in Huntingdon. He explained to us how the Russians were after the secret to his flying reindeer and that he was hiding them here in Huntingdon. Curt said, "Isn't the North Pole an isolated enough place to keep your secret?" He said, "Na, too many ice stations, submarines and bugged penguins around." I asked, "Why did you choose to hide them here in Huntingdon?" He said, "Because nobody's ever heard of Huntingdon or Juniata College. It was the ideal place."

We went to the Game Commission and cleared things away. I was fined for shooting the wrong species of deer but worse, I won't receive anything for Christmas this year. Curt Gowdy won't be commenting on any sports for awhile because he has a broken jaw. The cameraman is selling the story for three million dollars.

Now that I've told you where Santa's reindeer are hidden; I must ask you to keep it quiet. Remember, "Loose lips sink ships." By the way, I was only kidding about Davey Crocket. He died at the Alamo.

Basketballers Open Season

By Scott Pearl

The Juniata Indians basketball team has opened their season with a 2-win and 3-loss record through Saturday's game. The most impressive game was the season opener, when they trounced visiting Ursinus College, 101-61. Four individual Indian players contributed points totaling in double figures. Freshman, Andy Dwyer, led all scorers with 19 points — in his college debut. Sophomore, Roger Galo, who was second-team All-MAC last year as a freshman, threw in 18 points from his guard position. Sophomore, John Grzesiuk and Karl Schlichter each tallied 14 points, while Grzesiuk pulled down a game leading 12 rebounds.

The Indians went on the road next to take Susquehanna University at Selinsgrove. JC couldn't put it together right, losing 51-68, as the Crusaders shot almost 50 per cent from the field. Susquehanna's Bob Hertzog led all scorers with 22 points and Roger Galo led the Indians with 16.

JC returned to their home court for their next contest, taking on the Lycoming Warriors. Although they were only up by one point at halftime, the Indians pulled out a 69-61 victory. Galo and Dwyer scored 17 and 14 points, respectively. But the game high scorer was Lycoming's sophomore guard, Mark Molesky with 18 points. Grzesiuk again led all rebounders with 13. Statistically the game was extremely close, as each team made 45 per cent of their field goal attempts, with the slight edge going to Juniata, because of more shots taken.

The Indians traveled next to New Wilmington to take on the Westminster Titans. The Titans proved to have some very excellent individual players, as they turned back the Indians, 65-59, in a game that was close only for a few minutes. The teams were tied at 50 with about 7 minutes remaining in the second-half when the Titans started to pull away to their victory. Westminster's Mark Pinnix led all scorers with 21 points and 6 rebounds. The Indian high scorer was sophomore, Dane Medich, who chipped-in 16 points Galo scored 15, however, making less than 30 per cent of his shots.

On Saturday the Indians traveled again, this time to take on the Lock Haven State College Bald Eagles at Lock Haven. The score was close at half-time, 28-24, but Lock Haven picked up steam and defeated the Indians, 66-46. The game high scorer was the Eagles' Mike Fitzgerald, who had 15 points. Medich again led JC with 12 points, while Grzesiuk and Galo chipped in 9 and 12 points, respectively. An important factor in this loss was a disastrous 34 turnovers by the Indians. JC handed the ball back over to the Eagles without taking a shot, either by violation, foul, or miss-handling, 34 times.

The Indians have two more games before Christmas break, one of them is a home game this Saturday at Memorial Gym at 8:00 p.m. against Wilmington College. Come on out and help to cheer them on.

Women's Basketball

The 1977 Women's Basketball Team is one of much depth and moderate experience. Coming out of an eight win-nine loss season last year, this year's squaws are somewhat older and five lettermen are in the spotlight. Senior center, Mardi Frye led the Indians last year in scoring and rebounds and is a fourth season vet. Junior forward, Janet Edgar, is another returning starter and tallied many of the rebounds and hoops with Frye. Sophomores Alison Reeves, a hustling little guard, and Susan Stapleton, another rebounding forward who saw limited action last year, will both be counted on for steady ball control this winter. Another junior, Janet Bechtel, also has experience on the floor and should fill the other guard slot with Reeves. Also to be relied upon are a promising freshman center or forward, Nancy Zinkham, and a new senior, Lynn Greenwood, a six-footer playing her first season at J.C. The rest of the Indian tribe are: senior Cheryl Thompson, junior Martha Klockner, sophomore Heather Morrison, and freshmen Patricia Irwin, Sharon Scott, and Jill Thayer.

All in all, the thirteen girls have not yet had ample time to put in many practices as a team, but a long delay until the opening game after Christmas gives them time to mold into a group, and learn ball control and conditioning.

Competition is expected to be tough against such powerhouses as Shippensburg and Lock Haven. A few new schools have also been added to this year's schedule: Scranton, Wilkes, Lock Haven, and the Grier School. January 8, is the seasonal opener at Susquehanna. The women will make their home debut against Gettysburg on Jan. 15 at 2:00. In the month of January the schedule is a tough one, with the tribe playing five games in only ten days; and in February nearly an every other day pattern again. Long road trips may tend to slow the busy Indians down, but with present preparation and another week of practice after vacation, they should be successful.

Coach Gargula does not want to pass judgment on the team until they have conditioned more and play their first game. No serious injuries have yet hampered the girls, so it is hoped that the healthy tribe will attack their foe head on and aggressively. Stay tuned for further notice on their progress!

Matmen on the Move

By Mindy Anderson

The Juniata wrestlers, coached by Bill Berrier, found themselves at the Lebanon Valley Invitational Friday, December 3. Juniata has been represented at this invitational for seven years and this year says Coach Berrier, "It's been our best showing yet." Juniata was in the middle of the pack of the sixteen teams represented. Highlights for the J.C. Matmen were two second placers; freshman Joe Paskill and senior Scott Simmons, in the unlimited weight class. Other showers on the squad were Bob Thompson, Randy Leopold and Hurk Perry.

Four days later, at Susquehanna, again there were some fine performances; as Juniata decisioned their opponent 37-7. Falls were scored by freshman Todd Roadman, sophomore Hurk Perry and Captain Scott Simmons, while teammates Joe Paskill and Randy Leopold came through with decisions of 12-5 and 17-4.

The structure of the team itself is described by Coach Berrier as being the "best nucleus of a team in seven years." Composed of 21 wrestlers, 14 are freshmen taking in the lower weight classes and the 177 lbs. spot. The higher weight classes are filled by the upper classmen.

Any strong team nneds the strength of solid back-ups as well as fine starters. On the J.C. squad these can befound in wrestlers Steve Shultis, Bob Cunion, Paul Smith and Gary Moellers. Thei strength and back-up abilities will be necessary for the J.C. team this year. They have a tough schedule including Penn State-the Altoona branch, and two new rivals, Penn State-DuBois campus, and the University of Maryland, at Baltimore.

Other opponents include Elizabethtown, Delaware Valley and Lycoming, which should prove to be strong competition. The J.C. matmen will finish out the season, with a scrimmage against Altoona on Monday, December 21. They will participate in the Middle Atlantic Conference Championships, held in February at Elizabethtown.

ing responsibility to a great degree and with great seriousness. In accounting, for example, not only did he believe in performing his work but also understanding it. If any small question arose, he would ask me after class. He and I frequently spent time together working out the questions as they arose. In that sense he attacked his goals" He was a very determined person.

"Crazy Joe" was also known for his letters to the Indiana Gazette, which concerned Juniata's new football rivalry with Indiana University of Pennsylvania. "It was hard for Joe to miss this year's game," says Coach Nadzak, "and he wanted nothing more than to get his degree and to play in next year's rematch. His feelings, as revealed in his letters, said as much about small college football — Juniata's kind especially — as I could ever hope to say."

The first letter appeared last July. "I don't just look at the upcoming gridiron war," it said, in part, "as mere football games. There is also an abstract feeling in me that has something to do with the competition of a largely state-funded school and a small private college. It is very difficult to explain this feeling, but it's in me, it's there and it's real."

A second letter did not reach print the week before this year's game, but it did reach Coach Nadzak. "I feel the same now as I did then," it said. "I have pride in Juniata as a learning institution and also in its football program. I regret not having the chance to play against IUP nor to graduate with my rightful class. But emotionally, I would rather play IUP in their own stadium in front of their many fans. I have not quit college and surely do not plan to throw away the things I have earned. I am only delaying the climax of my college career."

As a close hometown friend of Joe's puts it, "I respected Joe so much, he was so many things wrapped up in one individual."

The Juniata campus extends its fullest sympathies to the family of Joe Kershishnik and is more than willing to help in whatever way possible.

For those of you who knew him, just remember the type of person Joe was and act accordingly. Act as you think he would like you to act. Do not despair, act in a way in which you think Joe would be happy to see you act. This is the strength which will help us all to go on.

wimpy crap? Get serious!

Gino Vanelli — Perry Como on the Rock side of the Jazz-Rock Fusion.

Robert Palmer — Good, . . . but, well, I mean . . . zzzzzzzz.

Den dere is da good stuff:

Steely Dan — Any album, just buy it, for taste, technique, discretion, humor, class, and just goddam good music, Becker and Fagen have the market cornered.

Joni Mitchell — The Hissing of Summer Lawns — The most intensely innovative album I've heard in a long, long time.

Genesis — Trick of the Tail — a very pleasant surprise from a crew I had almost given up on.

Boston — Tasty, yum, yum.

Boz Scaggs — Finally, finally this man gets the publicity he deserves.

The Who and the Stones — Rock and Roll is not allowed to die until these two bands have quit playing.

Rod Stewart — goddam, he done it agin. (A Night on the Town)

Billy Cobham-George Duke Band — What a combination!

Bob Marley and the Wailers — Rastaman Vibration, if you like visceral reggae, you'll love it.

Lennon — Hooray! Hooray! Hooray! John's allowed to stay!

Jeff Beck — One of the very guitarists who can move from Rock to Jazz and not take the Superstar ego with him.

Patti Smith — I love her.

Weather Report — JAZZ! JAZZ! JAZZ!

Keith Jarret, The Koln Concert Album (I know, it seems like there's a million of 'em, but it is the white one.) If this album doesn't get you, you might as well sell your stereo.

Enough pontificating for today (by the way I really am the Pope), and remember, if you don't like the music, go out and make your own!

November, yet very little action has been taken.

Some new proposals seem promising, and may even turn into realities. It was suggested that movies and other programming be made available to the individual dorms. Student Government also wants to become involved in informing students about the proposed hydroelectric plant at Raystown.

Student Government is also working out new solicitation rules. Any club or organization soliciting on campus must file for a permit. Any student soliciting for personal gain (a party, Avon, etc.) will also have to file and may be charged a fee.

January 1977 is the time for New Year resolutions. The Senate should resolve to act quickly and efficiently on their proposals. If they stick with this resolution, 1977 could (and should) be a year of progress and accomplishment for the Juniata Senate.

thrown up at the bottom of doors, bodies were sprawled out lying in pools of water.

Sherwood basement acted as a backwash for the water used in the holocaust. There were problems with looting. Stereos, televisions, refrigerators, Ampeg amplifiers, guitars, desks, books, chairs, dead bodies, kitchen sinks and other furnishings were seen floating in the basement. It was even reported that small animals were seen floating on pieces of bunk beds. Using the pool table as a boat, the Sherwood coast guard gathered up everything and returned the articles to their rightful owners.

The war was finally stopped when innocent war victims, bugged by the opening of the water gates, begged for peace. The second floor R.A. called for a cease-fire. For this he was awarded the Sherwood peace prize.

Sherwood was declared a disaster area. Clean up operations began immediately. The scene was devastating.

I, as a humanitarian, sincerely hope that a catastrophe of this caliber does not happen again. I hope all buildings on campus will be safe from the onslaught of imperialistic armies, safe from internal unrest and safe from the instigators of war. May this have been the war to end all wars on Juniata campus? I doubt it. The last war sounded fun.

THE GOOD OLE DAYS

The following articles were taken from Juniatian issues of 1959.

CLOISTER, ON THE NIGHT BEFORE PARENT'S DAY (A Tragedy in Half an Act)

Lookit, Joe, I know it seems hopeless, but let's try to get the room cleaned up. You take out the Coke bottles first.

All of them?

Yeah, it won't hurt you to make a few trips. I'll start picking up these clothes — So that's where those sneakers were. Hey, Joe, is this your shirt?

It was.

You should have washed it right after you spilled the acid.

I haven't been able to get near the washing machines since September.

Hey. Take those photos off the ceiling, will you? And take down that calendar and put up the one with the puppydogs on it. Gee, I didn't know I had these socks.

You don't. They're mine.

And shove Return to Peyton Place under the mattress, and those Mickey Spillane books, too. Put a couple of Lit books on the desk. Lit books, Joe, not D. H. Lawrence.

I think Lawrence is literature.

Well, my mother doesn't. And get those bottles out of sight. She won't consider them decorative, even if we do. And put on the dresser scarves.

Don't you think we should put on sheets too?

Why should we? The stripes have been good enough all year.

What are you doing now?

Trying to get the smoke out of the room.

You look like you're reading a magazine.

Flipping the pages causes air currents, old chap. Going to Tote?

Tote's closed. It's four o'clock.

Oh — well, get me a Coke, will you, Joe and bring back a dust mop.

Where do you suggest I find a dust mop?

I dunno, but we've got to get the cobwebs off the pipes.

We could wrap them in crepe paper.

Talk sense, willya, Joe, hide those mugs. Now, I think we look pretty good.

S'pose they look in the drawers?

They do it at their own risk. Well, I think I've done a darn good job.

You've done a — Oh, never mind. I'm gonna hit the sack. Night.

— Joe —

Shhrmpff?

— You forgot to get my Coke!

TWIRP SEASON HERE AGAIN

Girls take note — open season on Juniata men starts tomorrow.

That's when Twirp Week — meaning that The Woman Is Requested to Pay — begins. For nine days coeds will invite their favorite fellows to the movies, the after-dinner hop, the big dance at week's end, or just out for a walk.

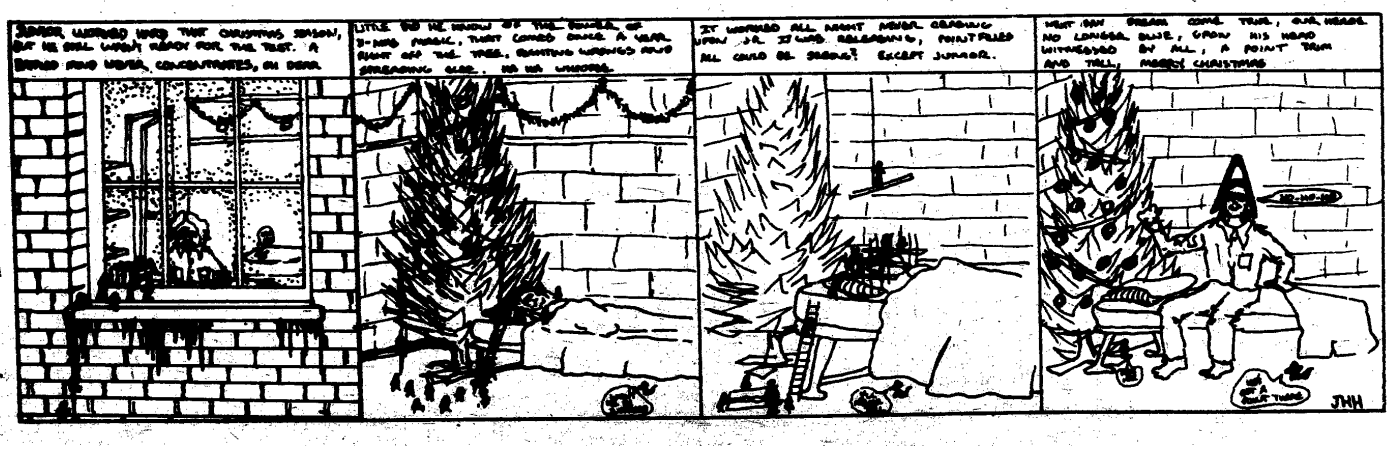
During this week it will be the boy's turn to wait to be asked to jitterbug. Girls will be seen paying for Cokes in Tote and carrying them back to the tables where their twirpees are sitting.

Telephone Ring

The ring of the telephones in North Dorm and Cloisters will take on a special significance.

Twirp Week is one of our more recent traditions, but it is certainly among our most popular. So join the party.

It's a chance to let that special fellow know you're interested, an opportunity to be especially sweet to a steady, but most of all, it's lots of fun.



Singing, Hawaian Love Songs and Basketball

By Paula

The Female Indian Tribe of the basketball courts snapped on eighty-seven game losing streak this past week with an overwhelming 179-32 victory over the immensely over-rated Special Tuscolusa School of Female Bong Testers and Wine Tasters. From the initial tip-off, the Juniata women siezed immediate control of the contest and hammered in point after point while still exhibiting one of the most impressive defensive styles of the century.

Ten-foot twelve inch (approx. 11 feet) tall Mardi Frye resigned as chief by playing a most commendable afternoon of basketball. The fourth year letter woman pumped in record shattering total of 86 points and wiped some 67 rebounds at her center slot. The most competition that could be offered to Mz. Frye was a five-foot thirteen inch blonde alcoholic from Duluthe, Ohio.

Coach Gargula did cartwheels, sang Hawaian love songs, and sucked lollipops as he watched junior forward, Janet Edgar, team up with her center counter-part and assist in annihilating the foe. Edgar tallied 63 points and grabbed herself 56 rebounds (in other words, J.C. had the ball for the entire game.) Lynn Greenwood, another one of those Texas tall Girls, and Susan Stapleton filled in at center and forward spots and let their presence be known. Stapleton, however, was ejected from the game for repatedly blasting out nasty four letter words, and then commandingly backing them up with knuckle sandwiches to the chops. Sophomore guard, Alison Reeves, was suffering from a "rough night", so she spent the afternoon in the bleachers and destroyed everyone's Farrah Fawcett posters and gingerly passed out copies of her own. Sheesh! Janet Bechtel and Nancy Zinkham also saw some action, but their talents were mainly dedicated to yanking of hair and scratching of eyes. Referees overlooked the action because they were too busy trying to stifle Stapleton.

All in all, it was a remarkable moment for the Indians and the whole institution of Women's Basketball. The girls proved that taller is better than smaller; and yes, you can put vodka in the Gatorade and still perform well. The seven year old water boy had a real fun time with that stuff. Next week, the Indians must contend with the prisoners of Smithfield State College who are a bit bigger and classier. However, after this past win, it is probable that Juniata will have the momentum to carry their new winning streak to two games. Last minute note: Juniata College has just acquired a new size 13 shoe liability from Hongolia. Her joyless face puts terror into the hearts of her teammates as she panics the coach by having to fix her glasses while pausing for a 10 minute break to catch her breath. The amazing Honge (Heather Morrison) set a team record by committing 5 fouls in less than 4:59 seconds while continually passing the ball to the other team and shooting at the other basket. She was, needless to say, the best player the other team had!

Sport Briefs

By Barry M. Alive

After many serious discussions over his new contract, head football coach, Wilt Nerdsak, has decided to sign a five-year 6.2 million dollar pact to stay with the Indians. This new contract now puts coach Nerdsak on the same economic level with the Food Service workers and the Green Army Staff. Although not completely satisfied with the six-figure salary per annum, Nerdsak does feel that football is growing program at J.C. and will soon have the drawing power for fans that cross-country has. When this occurs he feels that his salary will increase to equal proportions with those of the other coaches. When asked whether he had any other offers from rival schools, Nerdsak stated firmly, "No comment!!"

A new NCAA ruling will put the Indians basketball team into a precarious position next season. J.C. might have to play the entire season without the guidance of Head Coach-Carl (Doc) Headitch. The new ruling, announced earlier this week strictly forbids the destruction of chairs at the players bench. Although only being penalized with a technical foul in past years, any player or coach that is assessed with this new infraction will: 1) be immediately suspended for three games, 2) be fined $50 or the retail price of a new chair and, 3) be immediately laughed at and ridiculed by the fans in the stands. When asked to comment on the new ruling, coach Headitch only speculated, "We're looking into the possibilities of using bean-bag chairs on the bench. They're virtually indestructable, you know."

This reporter has been informed that the entire offensive backfield of the Indians football team has decided that they will play out their options next season. It has been reported that they are all opting for a twenty-percent increase in their allready multi-million dollar financial aid contracts. If their contract demands are not met they will be declared free agents and eligible to be signed by another college with greater financial aid available. It has been leaked out that Upsala College in New Jersey is extremely interested in obtaining them.

The women's auxiliary of the Juniata's Obscure College Keg Sippers has announced that they are insisting on equal playing conditions for equal atheletic competition. The girl J.O.C.K.S. insist that they no longer are the minority in athletics and demand that they receive equal travel arrangements, dressing room facilities and the same equipment and supplies as the men do. When asked to comment on whether the athletic department will give in to the demands, Athletic Director Wilt Nerdsak said, "I knew this has been coming for a long time, we don't have much of a choice but to give in. If they want equality, we'll give'em equality! The same training rules we use for the men will also apply to the women.... I can't wait to see the look on their faces as they line up for mandatory athletic supporter check."

A Book Review; MO

By Maureen Dean

Have you ever wondered what the real world is about? It's about rape, violence, mass murder, love and sex and John Dean! Why, you may say, is John Dean considered part of the real world? This is answered by the acute literary skill of his spouse MO, in the book of the same name (How clever!). The major emphasis is on the oldest profession in the world, "dirty politics", and MO's book attempts to defend the integrity of her husband, the crook (How roMOtic!).

There are several conflicting opinions of MO on campus, however most students agree that the book had its MOments! Ms. Debbie Pearce told us after reading the book, that she found it vaguely humey. However, John Meyer said "It Sucks". (but what does he MO?) One senior, unnamed, gave us the comment of, "Oh, MO? It was so so." The most complimentary compliment came from professor Thomas Nolan who while munching at MacDonalds, told us it was "Great, fantastic, outstanding, I couldn't put it down!" "I read it cover to cover during my Thursday Politics Class."

We close with these final comments on MO:

Take it from a friend or foe,
Take it from your stereo,
Take it where the poppies grow,
But take it away from us.

Coach Blamed for Loss

By T. Ruth

The last loss of the football team to Franklin and Marshal has been blamed on coach Dick Smiley's absence. Despite the best efforts of coaches Wilt Nerdsak and Dean "Red" Rosey, the team lost by a score of 15 to 13, at F&M. The team could not handle the many offensive variations that F&M threw at them without coach Smiley's sideline insight. Several team members have openly admitted that, had coach Smiley been there, the outcome would well have been different.

The reason for Coach Smiley's absence was his own desire to be at home. When later interviewed he stated, "I really needed to spend the time with my wife and kids. I feel that a close-knit family is important." Coach Smiley, when asked how he felt about the outcome, stated, "It was sad; but it was only one game."

X-Country Victorius

By B. Oddly

Despite the cold, snowy weather, icey running conditions, no crowd, and the season having been over for several months the J.C. masochists won another meet. The fact that JC's was absent for the year and that the other team was absent from the meet may have had some effect on the outcome. Besides the male runners several girls participated in an effort to prove that they are as crazy as the guys.

The team will run their next meet as soon as a few of the members recover from frostbite suffered at this meet. Also, the reason this article is so short is because no one cares about cross country anywat!

How to Liven up the Dinner Hour

By Anonymous

After sitting through German, Italian, and Hawaiian nights, I have come up with some other special nights the Food Service might try to liven up the dinner hour. They are:

Townie Night: No silverware will be used.

Aborigine Night: 2 wild wildebeast will be left loose in Baker Refractory-kill and eat your own.

Arctic Night: Eskimo pies and gift certificates for Tastee-freez.

CIA Night: All people eating will be watched — closely!

Russian Night: No negative opinions on the quality of the meal will be tolerated.

India Night: No food will be served.

Infirmary Night: The regular food will be served.

Recycling Night: Food will be served in aluminum cans and deposit bottles.

Ancient Roman Night: serving toasted Christians on a bun.

Nature Night: Fruit and grubs will be served while Ewell Gibbon's commercials play on the public address.

Siberia Night: None of the food will be defrosted.

Africa Night: The food personnel will all dress like zebras.

Bleeding Heart Liberal Night: Everyone must bring an underprivledged minority member to dinner.

Red-Necked Conservative Night: Food Service will dress like the Klu Klux Klan and only serve food to those students wearing "Maddox in '76" buttons.

News Flashes

Huntingdon High School along with the block of houses adjacent to Sherwood Dorm collapsed when all 6 fans in the Sherwood bathrooms were simultaneously turned on.

A stretcher and emergency ambulance have been reported missing. These items are vital safety precautions, so, if found, please return them to the Food Service.

. . . . .

A Juniata canoe, registered in Liberia, ran aground a sandbar in Raystown Lake yesterday. Limited damage to the environment is expected: the only oil leak came from the navigator's hair.

. . . . .

One of the green objects that stands around campus was reportedly seen moving today. The witness who is presently recovering in J.C. Blair Memorial Hospital said, "It was one of those . . . those up in the Science Center. It, it picked up a wrench and, and looked like it planned to use it." No national alarm has been raised yet because as of this time the report is unconfirmed. If any one should see one of these objects move, please report it to the head of the maintenance staff and it will be removed.

A pack of purposes worked their way up through various rivers and tributaries from the ocean and were seen making their way up our own Muddy Run. So, if you don't have a purpose run down to Muddy Run and get one. (Spelling correction, "purpose" should read "porpoise").

Note: We of the Juniatian staff who cooperated to write this article would like to point out that all of us but one had nothing to do with the last news flash. It was obviously stupid, disgustingly obvious, and pointless. We all know it was "different", but Barry Gaker, who wrote it insisted that people would think it was funny. So all of you who didn't laugh at the article can laugh at good old Barry!

JC Sex Scandal

As surprising as it may seem, Juniata College has an actual sex scandal "going on" among the professors. It all reportedly started with President Binder hiring Liz Ray as his private secretary. While nothing actually is known to have come of this, it gave way to more openness among our own professors. Orgies have become a common practice in certain Founders Hall offices. Since it is the duty of the Juniatian to report the important facts, we shall list the participating professors. In alphabetical order, they are:

"Samauri Student"

By Nani Shimasuka

There is a student on campus I think you should be warned about. Maybe you've noticed all the chopped trees in Sherwood grove or Cloister turned over on its side-or how about all the decapitated bodies strewn across campus? Maybe you've noticed a pudgy little Oriental type wearing baggy, silky, brightly-colored clothes. His name is Nani Shimasuka and he has a pony tail that sticks out the top of his head. The most unique thing about Nani is the four-foot sword he carries at his side.

Maybe you've noticed the steam that comes out of Cloister basement. That steam is Nani Shimasuka's breath. He lives in the basement and is always looking out the hole he made in the wall.

Nani was recruited from a small village in northern Japan to come and play middle linebacker for the football team. He was a terror at his position; he would slice guards in half, chop the hands off receivers and decapitate fullbacks. He was kicked off the team for unsportsmanlike conduct.

He doesn't have a good social life because he's easily upset. One wrong word and he'll chop tables, break chairs, rip down doors, and punch out tiles. He doesn't even have to be drunk to do these things.

There is no real story behind this student. This is just a warning to stay away from him when you see him. I hope he doesn't find out who wrote this, or chop suey city for me!

O'Connell Holds Her Own Against the Administration

Due to the recent increase in problems related to student relationships, Liz O'Connell has finally convinced the administration to change her title from "Associate Dean of Student Services" to "Dean of Student's Affairs." Liz asserts that her degree in "Student Personnel Services and Counselor Education for the Handicapped" and the fact that she has faithfully read Dear Abby since age four, qualifies her for the title.

Liz feels that the need for the change stems from the lack of male-female interaction on campus. She is currently developing syllabi for courses in: Small Group Orgies, Large Group Orgies, How to Have a Student Affair, How to Have a Student, How Not to Have a Student, and Comparative Affairs. Liz will also be conducting a number of tutorials on topics of student interest not listed above.

We want to wish the best of luck to Liz in her bold new endeavor. In an effort to avoid any additonal confusion in the Dean's office, Liz requests that students interested in signing up for these courses, do so according to the following schedule: Tomorrow: Students whose last names begin with A or B, the next day: C or D. . . .

Miz O'Connell is also offering free traying and skiing lessons for beginners. These lessons are open only to first time students as it is felt that those with experience should be able to hold their own.

Grass Roots

By C.C.J. Dears

I wanted to take this opportunity to speak out on a problem that has been bothering me, and I'm sure has been bothering you, to the extent that I feel called upon to write this article. This problem is one that has affected the student body of Juniata, and indeed, the people of the community-at-large.

How can a problem such as this be permitted to run rampant in the unsuspecting society that we call our own? Good question. Is it mere apathy that allows us to sit back while our fellow brothers (and sisters) are tormented by this disastrous irritation, or do we just not care? Can we answer this question before it is too late to save the foundering ship of humanity? Quick, to the lifeboats!

As Winston Churchill so aptly said, "We shall go on to the end, we shall fight in France, we shall fight on the seas and oceans, we shall fight with growing confidence and growing strength in the air, we shall defend our Island, whatever the cost may be, we shall fight on the beaches, we shall fight on the landing grounds, we shall fight in the fields and in the streets, we shall fight in the hills; we shall never surrender, and even if, which I do not for a moment believe, this Island or a large part of it were subjugated and starving, then our Empire beyond the seas, armed and guarded by the British Fleet, would carry on the struggle, until, in God's good time, the New World, with all its power and might, steps forth to the rescue and the liberation of the old."

That makes sense to me. Doesn't it to you? Won't you help us in the unceasing battle against this insidious foe?

Letters to the Editor

Letter to the Editor

Unlike the other articles in this paper this one has a point to it. Having been here at JC for only a half a year, I have become thoroughly disgusted with the life here. My complaint is directed towards an often skipped subject. Most people grumble about the food (which is good anyway) or classes (which are fun) or even for some off reason about the professors (who are the fairest, most agreeable people I have ever met). My complaint is that there is too much partying.

I really see no reason for all the beer drinking, marijuana smoking, and general partying. Some people actually party every weekend. The people who complain about the food are probably the same ones who do the partying. They never taste the food anyway. Who could appreciate a Swiss steak after drinking a whole glass of beer (even a half a glass)? It simply disgusts me to no end to even think of it! And those who complain about classes wouldn't complain if they spent their party time studying. How could anyone really enjoy Chem. Principles One when they are too high to tell if they are in the right room?

People who say they party to relax should try going for a run around the track in the gym (3 or 4 miles) and then an ice cold shower. I find this to be a most invigorating experience, and never grow tired of it. People who party to meet girls (or boys) should try meeting them in a more proper way. For example, you could ask a girl to one of the many excellent movies or maybe a lecture or concert. But my own personal favorite is to set up a date to study in a lounge with a girl. I have found that you can really find out a person's true personality by studying with them. People who party to get drunk or high are simply sick and should be locked up!

Once these party people have been drinking they get too noisy for anyone in that dorm to sleep. I really believe that parties should not be held in dorms; or at least that they be over by a decent hour (perhaps 9:30 PM). The loss of sleep for those who are at the parties is perhaps the biggest loss of all because they then lose the following morning of study time (Saturday morning especially).

I realize that only a small percentage of people on this campus actually participate in these improper and illicit spectacles, which is why I am finally taking the initiative to get all other sufferers behind me. I feel that the only solution if these things are not stopped immediately is to make them against school regulations and have a security guard on each floor of each dorm to insure the peace and quiet. For those who agree with my position please get in contact with me through Post Office Box 14141.

Food Service Abroad

By Jongoloid

In the fine tradition of Italian Night and German Night, the Juniata Food Service last week introduced another inroad in gourmet collegiate dining; Outer Mongolian Night.

After having their I.D. cards checked by dining hall employees delightfully dressed in bear skins and crude leather, students were able to choose from a buffet that included such delectables as camel's eye soup, filet of great dane, and roast bald eagle. Especially tasty were the stuffed horse hooves. All of these foods are considered tops by Outer Mongolian gourmets.

In attempting to create a realistic Mongolian atmosphere for the diners the food service turned off all heat in the Baker Refectory. Tables and chairs were removed to make way for stones and mats. Since dining utensils are definitely not "in" in Outer Mongolian, students used their fingers in eating from slabs of slate. This technique was especially tricky with the soup, but the problem was quickly overcome by crafty Juniatians. Finally, the food service's "Scratchy Records of Outdated International Songs Collection" was searched for suitable music. Only one song could be found, but the food service felt that if it were played at different speeds nobody would know the difference.

Centerboard did its part in the international festivity by providing a realistic howling dust storm and barbarian raid. The latter kept excitement high for the evening, as diners did not know who would be the next to be kidnapped and tortured. Blair County Hospital says that the thirty or so lucky Juniatians selected by the raid should regain conciousness soon; maybe.

All in all, the dinner was a fantastic success. Students were treated to a taste of another culture and the food service was able to find excuses to serve last May's leftovers and not wash dishas. Even as the remaining students limped dormward, plans were being set for Juniata's next foreign extravaganza; Amazon Night. See you then!

Excuse-by-mail

Gettysburg (PANS) — Today we have banking by mail and telephone, fast food delivery service, radar ranges, dial-a-prayer, and even voter registration by mail.

Why not an excuse-by-mail, designed specifically for students to use during peak periods of mid-term exams, finals and term paper deadlines? Coupons such as the one below could be published in student newspapers. Using them will save the student time and evergy that he might spend trying to locate his prof. Also, the instructor would have a permanent record of tardiness or absence excuses.

Just think — administrative and record officials would have a whole new horizon to work with. They would issue and annual report on the number of excuses returned, percentages of each type and rate of increase and decrease per year!

The coupon is as follows:

A report on the Juniata Senate

Go Clubbing

- When asked about the latest movie Center Board was showing, the Monty Python Club reportedly said, "Frankly my dear, I don't give a spam."
- The Brotherly Love Club was so upset about the violence during the storming of the Arch, that they decapitated five seniors who were said to be instigators.
- The Decease Club was so inspired by a guest speaker's V.D. lecture last week, that at its conclusion they apparantly stood up and clapped.

The Jock in the Pink Cotton Briefs

The story you are about to read may actually be one that the campus administration kept under wraps. Since there is a possibility it may be true, names have been omitted wherever possible to spare the guilty.

One cold January day, on his way back to East Houses from an unusual boring economics class, John Anonymous slipped on the ice in front of Lesher Hall and split the crotch of his jeans. After regaining the wind that had been knocked out of him, he got up; and noticing the tear held his notebook demurely in front of him. John was faced with 2 choices: he could make a mad dash for East Houses hoping that no one would notice his shorts were pink because he'd thrown a maroon sweatshirt in with his whites and the color had run, into just about all of the underwear he owned, or he could slip into the college health center and ask the nurse for a needle and thread. Since his rear was freezing, he chose the latter.

The sign on the door said NURSE OUT TO LUNCH. John sighed, sat down in one of the chairs in the empty waiting room, placed his notebook strategically on his lap and started reading a 1974 "TIME" magazine. About 20 minutes later, the waiting room began to fill with hacking, sniffing, limping students. A few moments later the nurse arrived, poked her head out of the door opening into the waiting room and asked, "Who's first?" All eyes focused on John. "Come on in and tell me what's wrong." said the nurse in the manner of a typical mother.

"I fell and ..."

"Well don't just sit there, come on in! You don't want everyone to know about it do you?"

That was the problem, John didn't want everyone here to know about it. Afterall, what would those 3 girls think about a guy and a football player at that-who wore pink underwear? He looked around the room, desperately trying to find a way out of his predicament.

"I can't get up," he replied, weakly.

"Well can you tell me if it hurts anywhere?"

"I have a headache and my rear hurts but what I'd really like..."

"Well if you can't move, maybe we'd better take you to the hospital for x-rays. Can you make it out to the car or should I have an ambulance come to get you? Oh, and how does your head feel?"

"Worse," he replied despondently. He heard the dialing for an ambulance.

The attendents arrived in a dazzling display of red and white, flashing lights and whining sirens. They wheeled a dolly into the infirmary, and stopped in front of the chair. Izzat the guy to go?" said a burly looking attendent, pointing to John. When the nurse said he was correct, the attendent replied "I figgered it was him. He looked sorta pale and clammy. Yeah, they teach us all sorts a medical techniques at the fire station." With that, he grabbed hold of John's legs, his partner grabbed hold of John's arms, and they started tossing him like a sack of dry cement onto the dolly. When "baby beef" stopped short in mid-swing, causing John extreme anguish. "Holy Jeese! Look at this, Bob! Pink shorts he's wearing." John groaned not only in the agony of embarrassment, but also in the exquisite pain of the inguinal hernia he was rapidly developing. "I didn't think they let fruitcake types come to this here college." He looked accusingly from John, to the nurse and then to his partner. "Bob, I know I got to drive the rig on the way over and it's your turn at the wheel, but I'm not sittin' in the back with a fairy in pink undies! You are!" With that, they wheeled John out into the waiting ambulance, made an equally spectacular exit from J.C., and sped up the brick road to the hospital, whose bumps help keep the population of Huntingdon in check by cutting down the number of heart attack patients who reach the hospital alive.

Inside the "brick Band-aid box" John was quickly wheeled into The Emergency Room. A nurse seemed to take forever adjusting a pressure cuff. He opened his mouth to tell her that there was really nothing wrong with him, but he wasn't fast enough. She shoved a thermometer in his mouth. Another nurse came in with a clipboard. "Your name sir."

"John Anonymous. Hey, there's nothing really wrong with me."

"Date of birth. If there's nothing wrong with you, you wouldn't be here, would you? Your date of birth, please."

"Home address."

"Nurse, if I was dying, would you make me go through all of these forms in triplicate?"

"I'm afraid so sir. Please cooperate. We would get done so much faster."

After about 15 minutes of grilling during which she had found out more about him than his girl had managed to find out in 2 years, he heard the blessed words, "Are you covered by Blue Cross and Blue Shield?" which signaled the end of his ordeal.

The other nurse came in and removed the thermometer from his mough. "Are you sure you kept your mouth shut the whole time I was gone? Your temperature only registers 94 degrees. You must really be in shock after your accident." She quickly piled six more blankets over the sheet that covered him. "The doctor has you scheduled for x-rays as soon as possible." A few minutes later an orderly reappeared with a wheelchair to take him down for his x-rays. When he peeled off the layers of blankets and finally the sheet that had been hiding the color of his shorts from the world, he thought the orderly would drop dead laughing. John felt like quaranteening it, but climbed reluctantly into the wheelchair. They did have the decency to give him a hospital gown but that didn't hide much of anything.

The x-ray technician was even worse than the orderly. He didn't laugh out loud like the orderly when he saw John's shorts.

Instead on the space marked sex, he looked at John and wrote down undecided! It was the straw that broke the camel's back. John decked the technician and started after the orderly who in turn pushed the nearest distress buzzer. Two guys built like ex-heavyweight wrestlers came in and pumped a syringe filled with thorazine into John's gluteus maximus which knocked him cold.

When he woke up, he was in another wing of the hospital and the school psychiatrist was looking down at him. He couldn't move because his arms were in restraints. "Is there anything you'd like to tell me or that I can do for you?" the psychiatrist asked. "All I wanted was a needle and thread." sobbed John.

"I understand." the psychiatrist replied in soothing tones. "You get some rest and we'll continue this discussion tomorrow." With that, he left the room. John heard him tell the night nurse something about "homosexual and aouopathic tendencies" and "intensive observation and therapy programs." No one at J.C. has seen John since that featful day.

The moral of this little tail is: wash your whites in hot water, colors in cold water, and permanent press and synthetics in warm water. Or better yet, don't have an accident at Juniata College.

Dear Gladys

DEAR GLADYS: I cannot perceive the root of my incapacity to meet young ladies at the gala social events on our campus every Saturday evening. I've resorted to many tactics. I've used brandy snifters to contain my ale. I've mingled among thousands of thronging females, searching for the one which would capture my fancy. I even took the accellerated dance courses offered by Arthur Murray over Christmas break. But I can't seem to hustle to the beat of their hearts.

— BEGUILING BUT BEWILDERED

DEAR BEGUILING: There are two possible reasons for your lamentable failure — either your fancy it too hard for the opposite sex to catch, or they aren't interested in adding your fancy to their collections. If you want to be truly unique, stack the brandy snifters by your mirror and learn the Bus Stop. And try looking around the Juniata campus — from your letter, you must be a State College student. You couldn't have found gala Saturday night events and thousands of females here. Also, try hustling to disco instead of their heartbeats — perhaps they don't like your methods of feeling the rhythm.

DEAR GLADYS: What am I to do? I'm entrapped in such a dilemma, I don't know who to turn to! I'm beginning to develop an inferiority complex, I feel so out of place! Since my return from Christmas break, all the girls on Campus are sporting Frye boots but myself! Must I resrot to wearing brown paper bags atop my feet? Help!

-FRANTIC WITHOUT FRYES

DEAR FRANTIC: I can't tell which you need more — a pair of Frye boots or a good psychiatrist. If you're really fashion-crazy, however, and can't afford either of the above, then, for Heaven's sakes, get white paper bags! Brown is so blase!

DEAR GLADYS: Holy shit! Do the admissions officers screen all of the female applicants to ensure that Juniata will never have to worry about losing them to modelling careers? I mean, seriously! With all of us good-looking studs on campus, why aren't there any sensual women to fulfill our sexual desires?

— STUDLEY doRIGHT

DEAR STUDLEY (You conceited bastard): I don't have to ask what you came to college for. But was it worth $4300? You'll just have to live with it. Things are not that bad, anyway. Why don't you try looking around my dorm, maybe (but only if you weren't exaggerating). If you and your friends have such inflated egos that none of the female sex here is pleasing to you, then you may all sit on square bottles (preferably with jagged edges) and rotate.

YEECH!!

By "Twig"

Did you ever stop and think of the injustices you do each day to yourself at Juniata? Even the base pleasures, like getting rid of waste and eating, are harmful to your well being. When it comes to taking a good dump there either isn't any toilet paper or there is the usual grade-rough sandpaper that will rop and scratch tender flesh. Eating! What a joke. First of all, you pass by the remnants of ancient Rome's glory which are really urine-stained wooden pillars. The next step is to wait in a line of people that is composed of assorted nerds and drug addicts. The first appetizing thing you see is a pile of wet trays still covered with pieces of a forgotten meal. The silver (or should I say Korean tinware?) isn't much cleaner. The ladies are friendly enough and you get this feeling that they hate serving you such slop. But they have a job to do and they do it well. They are under constant fear of the big green meanie Uncle Ned who looks like a former t.v. star that ate hay and talked too much.

The food is something you might expect from a foriegn jail in a third world country. It posseses none of the appetizing qualities of food and you quickly realize that you are only eating it so that you can scratch your rump after dinner with all-purpose roll paper. There are usually a variety of main horse courses. The big ones are soybeanburger fixed in a hundred different ways, soggy noodles, or rare pork chops. It is up to you to pick the lesser of the various evils. The food runs in about three different forms; bad, worse, and rot gut. The meals are always cold so you don't have to meals are always cold so you don't have to worry about finding a hot plate. Then come the vegetables that look like they were grown in caves from a mutant stock.

The milk machines are either empty or have those long dirty tubes sticking down into your glass. You think that you might be able to survive on salad but when you get there you find bits and pieces of bugs and dried out lettuce.

As you are eating, horror stories of people finding cockroaches, staples, glass, and dirty band aids flash through your mind. When you crunch on something, you hold your breath until you see that it is only a piece of gristle. After dinner you don't feel refreshed but as if your stomach contains a load of unwanted garbage. You can have all you want; but who wants more? So you walk away not satisfied-but too scared to eat anymore of the smelly stuff. And you say to yourself, "So ah, this is Juniata food." as you pass out the doors and quietly fart.

Professor Drops Pants in Class

It is not everyday that a student has a truly unique experience. When such experiences occur, some are unable to cope immediately, sometimes showing their surprize by screaming or fainting.

A certain professor, who wishes to remain nameless for health reasons, was behind an uproar which occurred on Wednesday Jan. 5th. The professor, a specialist in anatomy, was lecturing on the male reproductive system, when he was overcome by a hot flash. One eyewitness said nothing. Another witness replied, "The professor dropped to his knees, and began to pant." Apparently, the class was unaware of the professor's asthmatic condition.

Muddy Run Scenic Cruise

THREE DAYS OF LEISURE AND EXCITEMENT FOR UNDER $100!!

When passenger traffic was first introduced on Muddy Run between the Warm Springs district and Huntingdon Square, it was a sensation because of its speed and comfort. Today, the demand for speed is past, and the trip on Muddy Run is now an unique cultural experience.

Day 1. Departure from Warm Springs loading dock. Enjoy a leisurely day of sightseeing on board (ping pong and shuffleboard available for a small fee with use of student ID). A short stop-over for a delightful box lunch in the shade of Sherwood Forest. Spend a few moments experiencing the awe of the towering splendor of these virginal woods. Then it's on to the tropical night life of East Towers. Once a swampy marshland, the "swish" of the East Towers apartments now combines the eligance of high-rise living with the simplicity of its natural setting (free mosquito repellent provided).

Day 2. Spend the day investigating the paradise of a mudbank along the waterway. The captain promises the experience of "running around" will be unforgettable.

Day 3. Relax from the previous day's excitement on board as the ship takes you by Indian battlefields. See the stately main tower of Juniata Unjrsity rising in the dutance. Spend the afternoon shopping amid the color and pagentry of the popular Weis marketplace. Dine aboard ship before an evening departure at Huntingdon Square.

All passenger accommodations are outside "open-air" staterooms. All rooms have washbasins with running cold water. Provided no extra bed is required, up to four persons may share the same room at special group rates.

SPECIAL STUDENT RATES available with student ID card. (Current meal sticker required for box lunches and dinners. No breakfasts.) For further information contact: Juniata Centrebored Travel Agency

"Study Hazards"

By Jay Lazzey

The winter term is always the worst. It is the slowest, the gloomiest and the time when, as you would expect, most injuries occur. Don't get me wrong, I'm not speaking of injuries due to weather conditions or even injuries obtained through athletic endeavor. I'm talking of the dreaded (suspenseful music) STUDY INJURIES (woman screams).

What can one do during the winter term except study? The weather halts most activities on campus, so, except for the wrestlers and basketball players, we turn into overweight spastics. You're in you cubical sitting bored not wanting to do homework, but realizing studying is what you should be doing, you get up to sit at your desk and work. All of the sudden "WACKO", you split your kneecap. As you ouch, ouch and jump around in pain the room gets totally destroyed; you step on your guitar and knock your stereo on the floor. This all happens just because you wanted to study.

In the winter most people keep their windows closed-which limits the air circulation to close to none. These are perfect conditions for highlighter fume inhalation. Highlighter fume inhalation cases have skyrocketed since the beginning of the winter term. Highlighters have proven to be lethal writing instruments. It's advisable, when doing heavy highlighting, to periodically open the window to let the toxic fumes out. Gas masks are also effective.

If you're library goer don't think you can escape these dreaded hazards. Just going to the library can be a hazard. It wouldn't be completely out of the ordinary to have a pack of grey squirrels drag you off somewhere for storage. Those cute little innocent grey squirrels that romp and play near the library turn into vicious snarling beasts when snow covers their food supply. The little critters get so hungry they turn into meat-eating monsters. It is better to travel with somebody when going to or past the library; there's safety in numbers.

Inside the library heat exhaustion is a major threat, especially during the early Fall or late Spring. It is "preparation-H" time after sitting on the hard library chairs for hours on end. The position of the microfilm machines for hours on end. The position of the microfilm machines has plagued the Freshman class with an unusual high number of wrenched necks.

What can you do about such problems? It all happens just because you wanted to study. It seems the only logical answer is don't study. CAUTION: Studying may be hazardous to your health.

Board Positions at WJC

College newspapers got high marks in a recent survey into the media and buying habits of today's college students. Of all students surveyed, 88% said they had read their college newspaper within the past seven days. The figure was more than 93% for students in the "traditional" collegiate age group 18-21. For students over 21, college newspapers were less important with only 76% saying they had read one within the week.

Only 58% of the students had read a city newspaper, 83% had watched television, and 92% had listened to a radio within the week of the survey.

The survey was undertaken by a private research organization for CASS Student Advertising of Chicago, an advertising sales representative firm for college newspapers.

Surprisingly perhaps, college newspapers were rated the "most honest and credible" medium by 30% of the students while magazines scored 21% and T.V. only 6% in this catagory.

Magazines most read by students include: Time (36% said they had read the latest issue), Playboy (34%-50.2% of men and 14.5% of women students), Newsweek (31%), Readers Digest (28%), and National Lampoon (27%).

The second part of the survey revealed student buying habits that part has not yet been released in its entirety but some advance highlights include: *The 9.1-million student market has a disposable income of more than $10 billion. *50% of the college students have a part-time or full-time job. *60% either owned or had access to a car. *40% had purchased record albums, tapes or cassettes within 30 days. *Within the past year, 18% had purchased a stereo or T.V., 16% had purchased a bike or motorcycle. *96% said they had taken a trip out of the city during the previous year. 40% had traveled by plane, bus or train. 84% of the students had taken a vacation or pleasure trip and 28% had taken five such trips within the past year.

Pooh-Pooh Makes the Plants Grow

By Kenneth S. Kamlet

Sewage, and even the end-products of sewage treatment, represent a major pollution problem in this country. In many states sewage pollution is the leading cause of recorded fishkills. As our population continues to grow, so will our sewage output and the attendant management problem.

A lot of attention has been given in recent months and years to the question of what to do with sewage sludge, the dilute solid residue of sewage treatment. Incineration consumes scarce fuel and can pollute the air. Leaching and run-off from landfilled sludge contaminates underlying and nearby waters. Also ocean dumping and riverine discharge can contaminate the human foodchain as well as disrupt delicate aquatic ecosystems.

Often neglected, however, is the "treated" sewage effluent that comes out of the pipe at the other end of the treatment plant and is then generally emptied into the nearest waterway. Even if secondary treatment succeeds in removing 85 or 90 per cent of the "biochemical oxygen demand" and "suspended solids," the 10 or 15 per cent that remains can be a serious source of pollution. In conventional treatment systems, the removal of toxic substances, such as heavy metals and chlorinated hydrocarbons, from wastewater is even less complete. Therefore, large quantities of toxics are often also found in the so-called "treated" effluents. As long as our goal for sewage management is only partial treatment followed by discharge, we can never hope to have truly safe and clean waterways. Moreover, the Federal Water Pollution Control Act's ultimate goal of "zero discharge" will remain elusive and unattainable if we continue to think in terms of "discharge" rather than "reuse."

What is the answer? Can sewage be made to benefit, not burden, the environment?

One answer which dates back to practices of the ancient Chinese culture is "land application" or "land treatment." Land application may be usefully practiced for both sewage sludge and sewage effluent.

Circle K

My name is Sue Stapleton and I am the Elected Public Relations Chairman for this school year. In this article I would like to introduce to you exactly what Circle K is and what we are doing on campus and in the community.

Many are unsure of what a Circle K club is all about. Below are some points which I would like to make as guidelines of all Circle K clubs.

Objects and Motto of Circle K:

1. To provide the opportunity for leadership training in service.
2. To serve on the campus and in the community.
3. To cooperate with the administrative officers of the educational institutions of which the clubs are a part.
4. To promote group fellowship.
5. To develop aggressive citizenship and the spirit of service for improvement of all human relationships.

In essence Circle K is designed to provide a practical means of forming enduring friendships, to render altruistic service, and to build better communities.

The next question asked is what are we doing to carry out these guidelines. Under this year's new leadership of Dave Powell — President, Tim Eshelman — Vice President, Pam Eberly — Secretary-Treasurer and Sue Stapleton — Public Relations our campus club has begun to engage in many service ventures.

Already under our belt is a clean-up project for the streets of Huntingdon and a volunteer service for the Salvation Army and United Fund campaigns downtown. Presently our club is involved in setting up our members as volunteers for the Extended Care Unit at J.C. Blair Hospital. Here we are given the chance to aid and become a friend to those who are sometimes otherwise forgotten. Looking on ahead we are planning many fund raisers which provide both entertainment for the student body and needed funds for charity. Good prospects look like an interclub and a dance marathon.

As can clearly be seen, Circle K on Juniata's campus is alive and working. We are doing our best to fulfill our contract of service to the community and students: WE BUILD.

New Schedule at WJC

With a new term comes a new schedule for WJC. Stay in tune with the new line-up of shows and keep an eye out for special features to brighten up these cold winter days.

On Monday from 12-3 is Jim Myers, 3-6 Valerie Logsdon, 6-9 Ron Frigate and Nora Muncey, 9-12 Norm Faulker and Mick Cleary. On Tuesday from 12-3 is Hodge Wasson, 3-6 David Henry, 6-9 Phil Heppard, 9-12 Todd Kulp. On Wednesday from 12-3 is Mike Sherman, 3-6 Barry Young, 6-9 Lane Klobucar and Joann Sandone, 9-12 Scott Pearl. On Thursday from 12-3 is Skip McKallys, 3-6 Keith Winters, 6-9 Mike Suber, 9-12 Byron Rodger. On Friday from 12-3 is "Tree," 3-6 George Meyer, 6-9 Rona Clauson, 9-12 Chris Hart. On Saturday from 12-3 is Brenda Geiger, 3-6 Dan Caton, 6-9 Bill Bruner, 9-12 Jim Donahue. On Sunday from 12-3 is Brenda Geiger, 3-6 Mike Dreuschak, 6-9 Jeff Ruben, and 9-12 Ed Green.

Student Buying Media Habits

By Kathy Jacobs

Spring term is the start of the new year for the Board at WJC. Applications are being accepted now for several positions. Prior experience with radio is not necessary.

The station manager is the chief executive officer. He carries out policies of the Board and is responsible for the operation of the station. He works closely with the Program Director who is in charge of the staff of the DJ's. He schedules them and is responsible for the production and presentation of most of the entertainment programming. He coordinates the program log with the Business Manager who maintains the books. He provides the Station Manager with financial statements when requested. He also approves all expenditures. The Chief Engineer is responsible for proper and legal operation of all station broadcasting equipment. He must keep all equipment in proper order. The Public Relations Director is responsible for promoting the station to the public, particularly the Juniata College Campus. This job will be fully developed with the upcoming FM project.

Applications are due by January 21. If you are interested in any of the above positions, don't hesitate to apply.

Juniata Selects Crosby For Long Professorship

HUNTINGDON, PA. — A Juniata College history professor, Dr. Kenneth W. Crosby, has been appointed to the recently established W. Newton and Hazel A. Long Chair in History at the College.

In announcing the appointment, Dr. Frederick M. Binder, Juniata president, noted that the endowed professorship was established through a $170,000 gift from the W. Newton Long Foundation of Baltimore, Md., and honors the late Dr. W. Newton Long and his widow, Hazel A. Long of Boonsboro, Md.

A member of the Juniata faculty since 1948, Dr. Crosby is a former chairman of the college's humanities division and recipient of the first annual Beachley Distinguished Professor Award in 1968.

Dr. Crosby received the A.B. degree from the Cincinatti Bible Seminary in 1937 and the B.S. degree from Wilmington (Ohio) College in 1939. He holds the master's degree from Haverford College (1940) and the Ph.D. from George Washington University (1949).

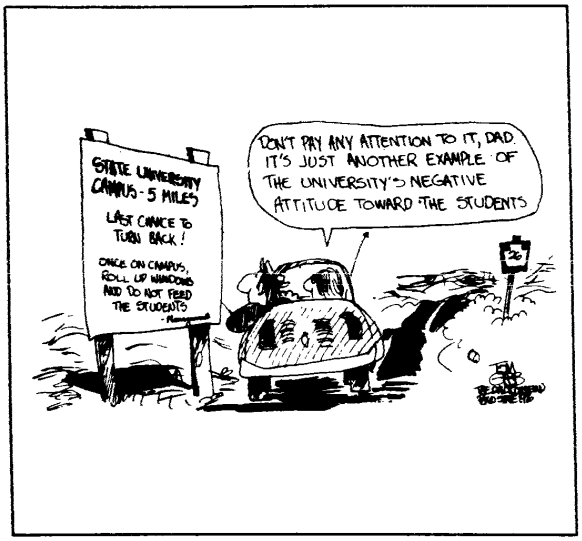
He has done additional study at the University of Havana, Cuba, and at the University of Pennsylvania.

Prior to joining the Juniata faculty, Dr. Crosby was a teaching fellow at George Washington University from 1940-41 and 1946-48 and a chaplain in the Army Air Corps during World War II.

Dr. Crosby is a member of Stone Church of the Bretheren, Huntingdon, where he serves on the church board of administration. He is a former borough councilman and has participated in numerous community-oriented activities. Professionally, he is a member of the American Historical Association.

During the 1974-75 academic year, Dr. Crosby and his wife, the former Jane Miller, a 1938 Juniata graduate, traveled some 32,000 miles through Latin America while on a sabbatical leave.

The Crosbys have two children, Jefferson of Birmingham, Mich., and Christina of Providence, R.I.



Four Indians All-M.A.C.; Four Others Mentioned

HUNTINGTON, PA. — Garnering two of the four offensive backfield spots, a third defensive backfield nod, and the Kicker of the Year position, Juniata College has placed four men on the 1976 All-Star Team in the Middle Atlantic Conference Northern Division.

Senior quarterback Dave Wichrowski (Westmoreland City) led the Indian charge, having finished third in both passing and total offense in the section. Sophomore halfback DeWayne Rideout (Penn Hills) earned the second spot, junior safety Bob Devine the third, and junior Stan Nosal (Jerome) the Kicker of the Year Award.

Rideout led the Tribe in rushing this season, averaging 72 yards per game in the conference. Devine led the squad in interceptions, and his seven for the year gave him 20 career, a new Juniata record. Nosal established Juniata records for field goals, season and career, scoring seven this fall for a three-year total of 15. He was also good on 13 of 15 PATs this season.

In addition, four Juniata seniors were awarded honorable mention by the conference coaches: middle guard Stu Jackson, last year's Northern Division MVP; defensive end Joe Weimer; linebacker Dave Nichols; and tight end Ed Flynn. Jackson led t the Tribe in tackles this year, averaging 12 per game while Weimer and Nichols ranked two-three. Flynn led the Tribe in receiving with 355 yards on 23 catches.

Pie-facing Trial

One reason last Spring's pie-facing fad was so short-lived was that there were many people who didn't think it was all that funny.

One who didn't was a U. of Kansas psychology professor who got chocolate-creamed in the face by a student in his classroom last May. He pressed battery charges against the student, allegedly a member of the Brotherhood of Pieface Assassins.

Last month the student, free on $500 bond, got a full jury trial at which his supporters marched wearing pie-tin helmets and bearing signs reading, "If pie were outlawed, only outlaws would have pies," and "Walk softly and carry a big pie."

Urban Studies Program

By Brenda Geiger

Are you getting bored with staying in one place for four years? How about trying a little variation to the normal routine classroom scene? Consider going on the Urban Studies program. This program runs for approximately fourteen weeks in either the fall or winter terms of your junior year. The main city in which the program operates is Philadelphia, but, through the cooperation of other colleges, thirteen other cities are available. The program is available to students of almost all majors. Education majors, with the proper preparation, can use this program to replace their junior year practicum.

The cost of this program is the same as a term here at school. You are responsible for providing your own housing and food. Several methods of housing are available, but the most popular method is sharing an apartment with other students. Some students find housing arrangements with other families. The choice of where to live is entirely up to the student. However, if you need help, the Housing Coordinator can provide a list of good apartments and roommate information.

The program consists of an internship four days a week and a seminar with professionals in well supervised placements within agenices, community groups, or schools, such as the American Civil Liberties Union, the Senior Citizens Action Alliance, and inner city schools. Students must be full-time participants and earn a minimum of 12 and a maximum of 16 semester hours of credit.

The Urban Semester program provides the opportunity for students to investigate and analyze a city as a system of human interaction. Participants also get a taste of living on their own in the city. During their free time they may do whatever they want. This allows students to attend cultural events, atheletic events, or just go shopping if that is what interests them. The main purpose behind the program is, however, to allow students the chance to try out their future job in enough time to change their course if they discover they really don't like the job once they do it every day.

Along with the practical experience of the City Seminar, students may elect one of the Urban Seudies Seminars in Art, Communications, Education, Planning, Political and Social Issues, Research, and Social Work. There are work shops for teaching new ideas and methods.

Forms and applications are available now. If you are interested, act now. Forms are available from Dr. Post.

As most of you have been able to tell by now, this is a parody paper. It is a special feature on which the Juniatian staff has worked very hard. We hope you enjoy it, and we welcome any comments or criticisms. Just mail them to P.O. Box 667. Thank you and hope you enjoy the rest of your reading.

New Campus Night Spot Different

Uncle Mario's is a plush new discotheque located near the Brigham Young U. campus in Provo, Utah. Uncle Mario's offers all the features of the typical campus-area night spot - spacious dance floor, mirrored stage, shag carpets, comfortable furnishings, a games room, a snack bar and a $9,000 quadrophonic sound system operated by D.J.s from a local radio station.

But Uncle Mario's is different from your typical campus joint in one significant respect. Since it hopes to attract the predominantly Mormon BYU crowd, Uncle Mario's allows no drinking or smoking.

Follow-up on Food Survey

In December many students participated in a Food Service Survey conducted by Student Government. This past week we received the results which were interesting and informative. This survey and others in the future will be used for incorporating modifications and changes in the Food Service Program. Some of the immediate areas of follow-up are listed below:

- When serving pizza, hot dogs, and sloppy joes, two servings will be given to students who request it.
- Besides the basic four salad dressings we will begin alternating at least two additional dressings to add variety.
- Vegetables will be cooked in smaller batches throughout the meal to improve freshness and hotness.
- Captain Crunch will be one of our regular breakfast cereals.
- Planned menus will be shared with students attending Food Service meetings to gain student input in advance of purchases.
- Additional emphasis will be put on student dining room help to keep milk machines full.
- Scrambled eggs and fried eggs will be cooked behind the serving line to eliminate their drying out.
- Emphasis will be made to review menus to assist in reducing excess starch to incorporate additional vegetables.
- Tomato juice and apricot nectar will be made available at breakfast on an alternating basis with our other breakfast juices.
- Bagels will be offered at breakfast as well as the noon meal for the remainder of the second term.

Need Help With Physics?

By Gene Woodruff

If you are like most students of Physics, sooner or later you run up against concepts and problems that definitely appear at the outset to be a far cry from the "Introductory" level you are supposedly studying. Well, before deciding that Einstein must have been out of his tree, and attempting to kick the textbook into the fifth dimension, cool your calculating heels for a minute, and check out the tutoring service being offered by the Society of Physics Students.

The club is holding general tutoring sessions in Introductory Physics, with and without Calculus, every Wednesday evening at 8:00 P.M. in P-206, Brumbaugh Science Center. This will give you a chance to discuss problems and concepts with people who have had a couple more years to be baffled by them than you have, and if nothing else is done for you by the session, you will realize that you are not alone in your struggle to understand. So bring your questions, funny-looking answers and calculators to our Wednesday sessions, and, who knows, you might even get an "A" on that next test!

"The Sherwood Hall Snow Bowl"

By Gary Lee Baker

The snowy field in front of Sherwood Hall on the night of Jan. 6th, 1977 was illuminated by a hundred or more desk lamps placed in the windows of Sherwood Hall. This provided the setting for the third annual Sherwood Hall Snow Bowl. The Snow Bowl is held each year in front of Sherwood and is, of course, held in the snow.

The adversaries were, as in the war of the floors, first floor against the combined forces of second and third floor. And, as in the war of the floors, the event was held in the competitive tradition of Sherwood. The game got under way at 11:30 p.m. Both teams had a lot of individual talent but weather conditions neutralized otherwise gifted players. The Sherwood gridders bogged in the snow as each play clumsily went into motion.

The game was to last for one-half-hour but it turned into a real defensive battle thereby leaving both teams scoreless at 12:00 midnight. The game went into sudden death overtime.

Scoring drives were put on but stopped everytime. At various points in the overtime period scoring looked inevitable but the defenses always hung tough. Late in overtime 1st floor intercepted a 2nd-3rd floor pass deep in their own territory forcing them to run off their own goal line. 2nd-3rd floor defense didn't yield an inch thereby making 1st floor punt from their own end zone. A bad snap from center and a heavy rush from the defense forced the punter to run. He was tackled in his own end zone giving the 2nd-3rd floor team a safety. 2nd-3rd floor were victorious, final score being 2-0.

The 2nd-3rd floor team will receive their just reward agreed upon before the start of the game, compliments of the 1st floor. Better luck next year, 1st floor.

The purpose of this column is to let the Juniata community know how members of the student body feel about various issues. Every week a student's name is picked at random from the student directory. That student is then contacted and asked to write the column. If he-she is unavailable another name is selected and the process continues until someone is found to write an article.

Randomly selecting names has several disadvantages. First, some students contacted feel obliged to write even if they don't have anything they want to say. Second, some students who do want to say something to the community may never be chosen. Finally, the Juniatian staff member in charge of making the phone calls may have to spend several hours on the phone before a person to write the column can be found.

With these disadvantages in mind the Grass Roots column is now open to anyone from the student body who would like to write. If you have something that you want to say write it up and send it in to the Juniatian. The subject of the article does not have to be school related. Anything from A to Z will be accepted.

The column will be open on an experimental basis. If no response is received the old system will have to be re-instituted. Hopefully this will not have to happen.

Where Our Money is Going

By N. J. Rowe

The college has released its proposed expenditure budget for the year 1977-78. Below is a breakdown of how our money will be spent.

$6,337,740 is the total projected revenue for 77-78. From that figure, $3,017,360 will go to projected salaries, wages, and fringes. That leaves $3,320,360. Projected government financial aid will be $140,000, and the debt service is expected to cost $380,620. This leaves $2,799,760.

$2,708,695 will be budgeted for the "other" category. This includes academics, student services, buildings and grounds, et cetera. It was decided that this figure would not increase at all this year. There may be some further decisions on how this money will be spent, but there will be no overall increase.

The last subtraction of $53,885 will be for the projected non-government (Juniata) financial aid. This leaves a total of $37,180 remaining for the contingency which is 1.3% of the total anticipated revenue.

A Report on the Juniata Senate

By Nancy J. Rowe

The January 5th and 11th Student Government meetings dealt more with Center Board activities than with those of the Senate. At both meetings, two representatives of Center Board asked the Senate for $1000 to be used to finance a Kansas-Pure Prarie League concert.

On January 5th, Paul Endress and Kenny Rodger of the concert committee explained that Center Board could afford the $13,500 concert at this time. It was feasible, however that Kansas would raise their price by $1000, at which time they would use the Senate's money. Any profit made from the concert would go towards a free concert in the spring, and perhaps the purchase of a giant color television screen. They appealed to the Senate's sense of cooperation for the benefit of the students of Juniata.

The Senators, after a brief discussion, voted 8-1 to give Center Board the $1000. The dissenting vote was voiced by Vice-President George Trapp, who called the outcome, "ridiculous."

Then came the 11th. President Brian Smith announced that there was a motion to recall the previous vote. The motion carried, and the matter was again open for discussion. After several minutes of debate, President Smith and Senator Cliff Ryer left the meeting. The two Center Board members were "politely" asked to leave by the presiding Vice-President, and the 65 minute debate began.

Those who opposed appropriating the money based their argument on two major points. First, it was stated that Center Board had enough money to do the concert on their own. Secondly, the Senate would have no control over the money; Center Board would be able to spend it as they pleased if they made a profit on the concert. Said Trapp, "We're giving away a thousand dollars and getting nothing in return."

The Senators who wished to help Center Board defended their position by saying that the two organizations were working for the benefit of the students, and that it did not matter who gave the money, or for what, as long as it served that purpose.

By this time, parliamentary procedures had long since been forgotten. The Center Board members were anxiously waiting outside the door for over an hour while the debate continued. "It's a kangaroo court!" claimed one as he looked on.

Finally, after several proposals, the final votes came. Since it was obvious that giving the money without Senate control would not pass, Doug Keene proposed a compromise: give Center Board $1000 which could be returned if they made more than that in profit from the concert. The motion was defeated 6-3.

The final decision was to give the concert committee $1000 as front money to be returned after the concert. As several Center Board members remarked, "They might as well not have given us any money at all."

We have attempted to the best of our ability to provide the student body at this school with impartial, reasonable and lively criticism of new releases by recording artists and bands along with fair and acceptable evaluation of on-campus performances by a varied selection of entertainers from the beginning of this school year until the end of last month. It seems, however, that the harder we have tried, the more we have been frustrated in our efforts by either an inability or an unwillingness on the part of the managing staff of this paper to see that our contributions were printed as regularly as they were submitted; furthermore, an apparent lack of student interest in the appreciation of this feature column has forced us to re-evaluate ourselves in terms of initiative and motivation.

Finally, because it has become blantantly obvious since January 2 that certain unknown members of the college community think so little of us that they must indulge in the founding and spreading of rumors to villify us and as thoroughly as possible ruin our heretofore good names, reputations, and intentions on this campus, were hereby resign as feature columnists and offer this column to any who believe they can do as well or better than we did, without writing what everyone else would like to read. At the same time, let it be known that this is not an admission of intimidation but rather of our disgust and abhorrence of one of many less-than-admirable aspects of Juniata life, excepting the academic one; we hope (likely enough in vain) that things will improve after we along with our fellow seniors have left this coming spring.

Respectfully,
Charles E. Kirby
Gregg S. Ralston

We would like to thank all those who took the time to participate in this survey for their candidness. Please be aware that Food Service Meetings are held every other Tuesday in the Faculty Lounge of Ellis Hall beginning at 5:00 P.M.

It is appropriate at this time to say that the primary purpose of the food service department on the Juniata College Campus is to serve students the types of food they like to eat and as much of it as they care for (with the exception of steak and prime rib). With this thought foremost in our minds each day, we welcome feedback about our food and service at all times. Our door is always open. Tell us what you don't like so we can change it. Tell us what you do like so we won't. If you find us out of our offices or unit when you have comments or criticism to share with us, come back, we don't intend to be gone long. Again, our most important function on this campus is to serve you.

Sincerely,
Ed Straub

Dear Editor,

I'm presently incarcerated in an Ohio Correctional Institution, for receiving stolen property. I am without friends or relatives in which to correspond with. So could you please publish this letter to help me, as maybe one of your readers would be interested in corresponding with me. A single letter would brighten my lonely day.

My name is Richard Clayton. I'm 22 years old, six ft. tall, 180 lbs., blond hair, green eyes. I enjoy just about all sports, horseback riding, camping, music, etc. Thank you very much for taking time out of your busy day to read my letter.

Sincerely,
Richard Clayton

ALONG MUDDY RUN

By Dave Brown

What has happened to activism? Has the activist movement of what seems to only yesterday disappeared? Are people content with the state of affairs at all levels of their personal life?

It's very dull anymore, with little excitement, and all the good causes that people used to march for seem to be resolved or nonexistent. Obviously, that is not the case, but since the ending of the Vietnam conflict, radicalism seems to have been on the decline.

Right now, there are only a couple of things that are different from the situation nine years ago at the height of the public activist movements. Those things that are different are obviously, the termination of the Vietnam conflict, Nixon's resignation, and numerous other events. Unfortunately, the ending of the Vietnam conflict and the Watergate incident did not eliminate the other causes and problems that students across the United States, and in other corners of the world, protested for and against. There are still starving children throughout the world, the "establishment" is still there pulling the same tricks they did nine, ten, or even twenty years ago, but no one comes out en mass to protest these problems of the world.

The answer might be that there are too many problems right within people's closed lives. Take for an example the problems here at Juniata, when there is such a multitude of problems at the "home" level no one has time to worry about the rest of world. Maybe the answer to all of the problems we experience here on campus everyday would be to have an active protest against the administration to improve conditions on this campus. Starting passively and letting nature run it's course. By the next week hot water might be restored, food might improve and living conditions become more pleasant. Students of Juniata Unite!!

Juniata Students Perform at Coffeehouse

By Michelle Fistek

The doldrums of January were alleviated a bit last Friday night at the Coffeehouse in the Women's Gym. The performers were Juniata students and their friends.

The first performer was Connie Andrus. Connie is a Freshman from Holland, Pennsylvania, which is in Bucks County. This is Connie's second public appearance, the first was at a High School Variety Coffeehouse. She began playing the guitar in the eighth grade. She likes to play mellow music. She bagan her set with one of my favorites, 'Love Song' by Elton John. She sang some Joni Mitchell, Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young, Bob Dylan, and Neil Young songs. Connie's friend, Dave Labendia, joined Connie in two songs and sang a solo. These to me were the highlight of the evening. They sang 'The Cat Came Back' and 'Cowgirl in the Sand.' Their voices blended well together and both are excellent guitar players, especially Dave. Connie ended her set with Joni Mitchell's 'Carrie.'

The second set was performed by Jack and Jo. Jack Blandford is a music major here at Juniata and Jo is from Lewistown and attends Mansfield College. Both are versatile musicians, Jo playing piano and flute, and Jack playing piano, guitar and bass. They began with 'Part of the Plan' by Dan Fogelberg. Their set included 'Your Song,' 'Color My World,' and 'Life,' a song that Jack wrote. Other songs included 'Moonshadow,' 'Shannon,' and 'My Sweet Lady.' Jack sang Jim Croce's 'Time in a Bottle' as an encore.

Gary Baker played the last set. Gary's a Sophomore from Yeagerstown, Pennsylvania. Gary likes to play 'Anything that's pleasant to the ear, anything that has a message and anything that's easy to pick out.' He's been playing guitar since his Sophomore year in High School when he received a guitar for Christmas. He's a seasoned performer having played bass in a band and guitar in a High School Senior Talent Show. Gary prefers playing to a large crowd that he can't see than to a small audience that keeps bugging him.

Gary's set was the most varied musically. He started off with 'Carpet of the Sun' by Renaissance. His repertoire included songs by James Taylor, The Rolling Stones, Frampton, Eric Clapton, and George Harrison. He also sang 'Animal Barn Dance' by Tom T. Hall which he dedicated to Second Sherwood. Mike Hars joined Gary for 'Sweet Jane,' 'Music Man' written by Gary and Mike, and 'Badge.'

The Coffeehouse had a capacity crowd for the first time. Beer, soda, potato chips, and cheese curls were served in unlimited supply. The price of one dollar was reasonable and many took advantage of it. I talked to some of the students at the Coffeehouse, they felt that the turnout was marvelous. They liked being able to hear Juniata students perform. They felt more tables and chairs were needed and were annoyed at the behavior of some of the people who weren't listening to the performance.

The Coffeehouse was quite orderly, all in all. Of course there are always those who can't just sit and enjoy the music, preferring to disturb everyone else. The use of Juniata talent was an excellent choice. Each time I see a student production here at the college, I'm amazed at how much talent we have. Despite the lack of equipment and the lack of large theatre and music departments, Juniata's students have been able to produce good entertainment by the use of ingenuity and creativity. We have an excellent choir and our theatre productions have been impressive. Let's continue to take advantage of the talent we have here at the college.

J.C.: Energy Conscious?

By N. J. Rowe

Senators Todd Kulp and Judi Gross have been working through Student Government on the new Resources Committee. Formerly the Energy Conservation Committee, its purpose is to use energy more efficiently by eliminating waste, and make Juniata students more energy conscious.

Kulp claimed at a recent Student Government meeting that if the school cut energy waste by 10%, it would save $40,000 a year. Currently, the college spends approximately $336 per student just on energy costs alone.

Kulp stated that an energy expert will be evaluating the amount of energy waste at Juniata, and will be offering suggestions. One suggestion made was to turn off washers and dryers between the peak energy hours of 7:30-9:00 a.m. and 7:00-9:00 p.m.

Students are urged to save energy wherever possible. The Resources Committee is open to all suggestions, and encourages students to attend the meetings.

Food Service Survey Results

By N. J. Rowe

A Student Government Food Service survey brought in a good many complaints and suggestions about the food service at Juniata. Most of the complaints dealt with the quality and preparation of the food itself, stating that it was not hot enough, and under or overcooked.

Students were most happy about breakfast and desserts, and disliked lunch and vegetables. The question of whether or not there was a good choice of food at lunch showed that 43% disagreed, 28% agreed, and 29% gave various other answers. The claim that there was too much starch at lunch was answered with 33% strongly agree, 35% agree. A question that stated, "vegetables are well prepared" brought an over 50% disagreement, with 29% agreeing.

Some suggestions were that there be less starches, hot breakfast served after 9:00, and more variety of food throughout the week.

Over three times as many respondents ate at other colleges than not, yet there were several complaints that there should be better quality food for what the students are paying. Overall, 44% of the respondents were pleased with the food service, 29% neutral, and 18% dissatisfied.

Sing and Dance Your Way Through Juniata?

There is interest among the students, faculty, and administration at Juniata in exploring the possibility of developing two related programs in the performing arts. The first program would be a series of presentations (plays, music, etc.) to be offered throughout the summer at the Seven Points recreational area. The Corps of Engineers is interested in such a program and would like Juniata to become the sponsoring organization. The second program, more ambitious than the first, would offer the opportunity for an undergraduate at Juniata to either minor or major in drama or some combination of the performing arts. To help us we need some information. Please read on:

Name: _____

- ☐ 1) I am planning to take academic work at Juniata during the summer sessions and would be interested in participating in some aspect of the performing arts . . . drama, music, dance, etc.
- ☐ 2) I am interested in attending Juniata during the Summer Sessions for the purpose of developing my skills in drama or another form of the performing arts.
- ☐ 3) If Juniata were to offer sufficient units I would be interested in using some of my elective slots to develop my interests in the area of performing arts.
- ☐ 4) If Juniata were to offer sufficient units I would be interested in developing my POE in drama or some aspects of the performing arts.

Please check the statement(s) above that most nearly represent your interest and detach the questionnaire and send to Eric Schwab, P.O. Box 1371. Be sure to include your name and college address. Later this term someone will be contacting you to discuss your interest and answer your questions. If you have any questions in the meantime, please feel free to look me up anytime. Thank You for your cooperation.

To John Paskill wrestling is a form or personal enjoyment.

An Inside Look at JC Athletes

Editor's Note: In an attempt to familiarize the Juniatian readers with the intercollegiate winter sports participants, the staff has decided to print a series of articles talking with various athletes. These articles will hopefully give a greater insight as to why a student competes, their academic goals, and maybe even more important how these people budget their time to pursue these non-academic interests.

By Mindy Anderson

Wrestling is one of the few sports which calls for individual competition, determination and dedication. A strong team is composed of strong, consistent individuals. One of these individuals on the JC squad is freshman Joe Paskill.

Joe began wrestling in the 8th grade and continued to wrestle for 4 years at North Penn High School.

Joe found the sport was more enjoyable and advantageous each season. In wrestling, size is no real obstacle — each member facing opposition of the same weight class. Individualism plays a strong role in wrestling, Joe commenting "You're only as good as you make yourself." Joe brought up an interesting point saying wrestling is a very demanding sport, both mentally and physically. One usually hears of the athlete's "psyching" themselves "up." Joe's approach to competition is trying to achieve some inner stability, "having things set in my own head." The time period in matches seems quite short to most fans, yet Joe points out that sometimes it seems to last forever. When out on the mats, teammates both criticize as well as lend support. Asking Joe how he felt about spectator support, he replied that fans have a two-fold affect. They can lend support when the chips are down, but also add pressure to an already tense situation for the wrestler.

Joe feels that a good coach and a strong rapport with that coach are important. The wrestler can depend on backing and support from him when needed, as well as confidence in his own ability.

Joe said that "striving for, and achieving a goal is great." You know what work has gone into reaching that goal and are proud to have achieved it.

Hailing from Lansdale, Pa., Joe does have interests other than wrestling. He enjoys hunting and fishing with his family and friends.

"Wrestling to me," says Joe, "is a form of personal enjoyment." A wrestler with quick speed and well executed moves, Joe earns this feeling of personal enjoyment. He finds that 2 hours a day is easy to spare for practice, and would otherwise be "messing around." Joe is one of the many fine wrestlers on the JC squad, giving his all for a strong team, and wrestling will remain a part of his life here at Juniata.

Jan Edgar, a junior from Royersford, Pennsylvania finds herself serving this institution in a dual capacity. First as an athlete, she participates in two intercollegiate varsity sports, field hockey and women's basketball, while also serving as a resident assistant.

Basically Jan feels that her college experience would not be complete if she did not participate in extracurricular activities while at Juniata. She believes that if applied properly athletics can serve as an accepted physical release of tensions arising from various things.

Thank-Goodness then for this held philosophy, for this past weekend Jan led all J.C. scorers with 18 points in a lopsided victory over Gettysburg College. This year however, Jan is playing with a slight handicap. Due to an abnormal curve in her back her breathing is at times irregular or cut off. This injury kept her from playing field hockey this fall but her dedication to basketball is much stronger. Although learning to play with this impairment, Jan said that this past Saturday she was conscious of this injury which at times affected her game. But nonetheless Jan will continue to play basketball here at Juniata.

Employed also by the Student Affairs office, Jan also finds herself acting as a student counselor to the girls in her dormitory. Upon questioning, she stated that she enjoys working with people and someday wishes to pursue a career in counseling. She feels that as a Resident Assistant, she has gained further insights into understanding people and the problems of campus life.

In sum, Jan feels that there are many advantages to attending a small institution, "here one can play sports, do the required academic work, and if you wish to work elsewhere you can."

Frosh Lash Out At Girls As Dating Problem Aired

The freshmen boys have composed a list of points in their defense following the discussion in Freshman Assembly, Monday. The list is reproduced in part in the following paragraphs.

A fellow does not like to go out with a girl when he doesn't have a substantial sum of money for some of the females can make it mighty embarrassing at times.

A lot of guys who have very definite interests back home feel that they shouldn't get involved with a girl here at school. We imagine that the girls in this same situation feel the same way so we stay "hands off."

The men that are playing basketball or football find that their time is limited and try to budget their study time, especially the freshmen who always seem to have to spend more time studying to keep up in class.

When a girl has dated another fellow a couple of times it seems that she becomes known as "Joe's girl." This seems to be the main complaint of the girls but how are the other boys to know she doesn't want to be called that? It sure can be an embarrassing situation if the fellow is a lot bigger than you and she actually does like him.

Boys don't like to ask a girl to go out when they have to walk or ride a bus to their destination. Perhaps we'll overcome the loss of the family automobile in due time but it seems strange to escort a girl that way.

Girls who are overly friendly to upperclass boys on the campus and in the halls are shied away from by most freshmen boys because they feel that girl is going for the top and is out of their reach.

The girls are condemning the boys from the class of '56 too quickly. Wait until the school routine of study has been ground into us for a little while and we'll come around for those all important dates. Especially after the upperclassmen cease to clean out the ranks.

Girls take the boys for granted.

Basketballers on the Winning Way

By Scott Pearl

Junior Tay Waltenbaugh made his Juniata College home debut on the basketball court a memorable one as he scored 22 and 24 points respectively, in his first two home games. Waltenbaugh's team leading scoring helped to spark the Indians to their third and fourth consecutive victories.

The Indians are now ranked within the top ten teams in the nation in defense with a 60 point-per-game average. While averaging 64 points per-game offensively, JC now has a 6 win and 4 loss record overall and 1 win, 1 loss in conference play.

Last Monday the Indians defeated Grove City, 51-48, in a game that showed a new balanced attack by JC. Along with his 22 points, Waltenbaugh pulled down 13 rebounds and blocked two shots. Freshman, Andy Dwyer pitched in 12 points to bring his average to about 13 points per game.

Wednesday the Indians hosted the Susquehanna Crusaders who beat them earlier this season, 68-51 at Susquehanna. Although allowing the Crusaders to score 53 points in their 61-57 victory, the Indian defense held junior guard Mike Scheib to only 6 points. He has averaged almost 19 points per game and scored 59 points alone in his last two games. Sophomore, John Gresiuk, pulled down 15 rebounds, to add to Waltenbaugh's 16 and 4 blocked shots. Sophomores, Roger Galo and Bob McNelly each chipped in with 9 points each and senior, Ed Flynn came off the bench to score 7 points and pull down 8 rebounds. The high scorer for the game, however, was Susquehanna's Bob Hertzog, a 6'9" center who scored 26 points for the Crusaders.

The Indians suffered a loss to Upsala College in East Orange, New Jersey last Saturday night, 61 to 57. They travel this Saturday to Wilkes-Barre to take on the Wilkes Colonials in another MAC game. Congratulations for the outstanding performances so far and good luck Saturday!

Women's B-ball Crush Gettysburg

By Marge Morgan

The women's basketball team defeated the Bullets of Gettysburg by a score of 58-45 in a game in Memorial Gym last Saturday. After rolling up a 38-15 halftime lead most of the starters were replaced in the second period. Every member of the squad saw action and was thus given some valuable game experience.

The Indians played a strong, aggressive defensive game which forced Gettysburg to make mistakes. The team was led by Jan Edgar, who was hot from outside, with 18 points and Nancy Zinkham's 13 points many of which came on beautiful fastbread layups. Other scorers were Mardi Frye with 11 points, Alison Reeves with 9, Janet Bechtel with 4, and Patti Irwin, Heather (Hongo) Morrison, and Lynn Greenwood each with one foul shot apiece.

The team's next home games are Wednesday, Jan. 19 at 4:30 with Frostburg State and at 6:00 Sat. Jan. 29 with Shippensburg, so come out to the games and cheer the squad on!

All You Ever Wanted to Know About Wrestling

On Saturday, Jan. 8, 1977, this reporter witnessed her first match of that thrilling sport known as wrestling. Now that I am an expert, I will instruct you about this art.

A wrestling match consists of two opponents. They wear lovely turn-of-the-century bathing suits with ear muffs instead of bathing caps. They start by facing each other and doing something vaguley related to the Hokey-Pokey. The referee tries to get as close as he can without actually being in the way. I believe he loses only if he is tripped over by both the players within two minutes.

The players eventually get bored with the Hokey-Pokey, and then wrestling shows its true spirit of chivalry. Each player believes that a rest is needed, and tries to get the other player to lie down on the mat and rest awhile. However, neither player wants to appear crass and leave the other player standing any longer than they must, so things can become quite sticky.

Points are scored when each player makes the other salaam to the mat outside of the circle, or gets him tangled up so that he can't move - sort of like a pretzel. If neither player can get the other player to lie down within three minutes, they give up and either start over or go back to their seats. Sometimes when they start over, one player gets on his hands and knees and the other gets ready to catch him when the referee blows a whistle. Judging by the actions of the coaches during this, it must be the most crucial part of the game.

If a player does come close to making the other lie down, the crowd gets very excited. Although the coaches yell alot about the Nelson Bros. (Half and Full), the crowd does not seem to care as much about the players or the game - they are more concerned about chicken wings and Whizzers (probably a new crunchy potato snack). Those who are not hungry discuss shootings and automobiles - there was alot of talk about slamming bodies and forward drive. They were also enthusiastic about appearance, talking about haircuts and rearranging faces.

If you want to gain a true appreciation of the unusual sport of wrestling, then I advise you to do as I have done. Get out there and support your Juniata team!

Rossi is Juniata Grid Coach, Berrier Athletic Director

Dean Rossi, offensive coordinator at Juniata College since 1972, and Bill Berrier, current wrestling and baseball coach, have been named Juniata's head football coach and athletic director, respectively, it was announced today by President Frederick M. Binder.

The pair succeeds Walt Nadzak, head football coach and athletic director since 1969, who resigned this week to become head coach at the University of Connecticut. Both appointments are effective immediately.

"We have two outstanding people here," said Binder. "When we split the two jobs, our first concern was filling the AD position and first we looked at current personnel. We experienced a flurry of interest, but there wasn't any question that Berrier was our man. He's committed to Juniata, commands widespread respect, and is a man of impeccable integrity. He's known Juniata for 21 years and he knows his sports as well."

Binder continued, "When moving on to coach, we again first looked at present staff and we looked at two fine people: Rossi and Nadzak's other assistant, Dick Reilly. Both had considered moving to Connecticut also, but each was considered here.

"It wasn't a snap decision. We talked with players, alumni, trustees and staff. But we all felt good about Rossi, who is a candid, energetic and honest man with excellent football knowledge and a record of success.

"I make no bones," Binder concluded, "about our football future: I want us to win the Middle Atlantic Conference Title, and I think with Rossi we can."

Rossi, 40, came to Juniata from Dickinson College, where he spent a year as offensive backfield coach, chief recruiter and baseball coach. A native of Bellwood (Pa.), he is a 1961 Penn State graduate and holds a master's degree in physical education from West Virginia University.

From 1967-70, he was head football coach at Derry Area High School, where his final team was 6-3. From 1961-67, he was an assistant coach in football, wrestling and track at Altoona High School.

Under Rossi, Nadzak and Reilly, Juniata compiled a five-year record of 35-13 the offense averaging more than 300 yards per game. Rossi produced eight all-conference backs, including a pair last season.

In addition, Rossi has been the Indian track coach since 1972, compiling a 27-8 record. His first squad captured the 1973 conference championship, while last year's team went 8-1. He has also been an assistant professor of physical education, coordinated athletic recruiting, and co-directed the intramural program.

In his new position, he will hold an undetermined spring sports job, coordinate recruiting and continue in his faculty post. He will hire one football assistant, who will also direct intramurals.

Berrier, 39, is a 1960 Juniata graduate and has been a member of the college staff since 1961. He is currently an associate dean of student services, having first been named assistant dean of men. He has been the Indian baseball coach since 1969 and wrestling coach since 1962 and was a football assistant from 1962-68.

A Harrisburg native, he is also entering his 17th year in the Dodger baseball organization, having played four seasons and managed 12. His last assignment was the Bellingham (Wash.) Dodgers in the Northwest League, the 1974 division champs. He plans to return to the Dodgers this summer, but "will leave organized baseball when required."

In his new post, Berrier will keep his baseball job and may either retain his wrestling position or become a football assistant. He says that his gaol "is to maintain an outstanding athletic program, scholastically, intercolegiately, intramurally, and to give encouragement to club sports when the interest of our students dictate. I am all in favor of expanding the girl's program, and will be looking for an outstanding person to coach female sports. Another goal will be to try to establish a rapport with the other offices and staff on this campus, mainly offices of Student Services, making available all the facilities on campus to the entire student body." He adds that he is also aware of the limitation of our budgetary money but will certainly try to get the most mileage of it. "I want to keep every sport with the philosophy of the institution and schedule appropriately."

As a Juniata student, Barrier started four years in both football and baseball and helped launch the Indian wrestling program. A Little All-American fullback, he established nine school records and received the Stanford Mickle Award, Juniata's highest athletic honor.

Signed by the Dodgers after graduation, he compiled a lifetime batting average of .301, reaching AAA ball.

His Juniata baseball teams have gone 51-89, his wrestling teams 51-107-3. His best diamond season was 1972, when the Indians finished 11-7 and reached the ECAC regional playoffs, while his best mat year was 1968-69, when the Indians finished 8-3.

"I'm of course excited." said Barrier of his appointment. "It will give me a chance to develop the total athletic program, both intramural and intercollegiate, and express broadly my own athletic philosophy and my deep feelings about this institution."

Said Rossi of his selection, "It presents a definite challenge, filling the shoes of the winningest coach in Juniata football history. But we've become well known in small-college circles and I hope to continue our success, always keeping our program consistent with the aims and values of the school as a whole."

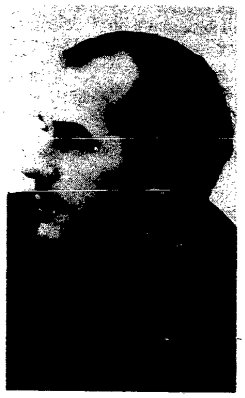
Dean Rossi, JC's new Head Football Coach looks upon his new position as JC's Head Football Coach as a definite challenge.



JC's new Athletic Director, Bill Berrier, hopes to develop the total athletic program . . . and express broadly his own athletic philosophy and his deep feelings about this institution.

Reilly Accepts New Position

Coach Reilly's new position at the Univ. of Conn. will be defensive coordinator. When asked to look back on these last five years spent at Juniata, Coach Reilly says that there has been a tremendous change of quality of football at Juniata. "We have been able to track down not only excellent athletes but also excellent young men.. In this year's Lycoming game, in which we were defeated the last minute, I found more of what football builds young men into, the intangible qualities of spirit and love, understanding and comprehension. From that game, of which I was a close part, the reaction of the players, the closeness that we felt, was probably more rewarding to me than any other game at Juniata College."

Coach Reilly looks upon his new position in Conn. as something to which new goals will be attached. He says that one of his new goals will be to try to win, but "unfortunately, no longer is successfulness enough - you have to win." Coach Reilly says that he does not really want to leave Juniata. He says that he would like to stay here very much, "but the position which I like and would feel most comfortable with was being Athletic Director and Head Football Coach. When the administration decided to split the position, I decided to accept the position Coach Nadzak offered to me." He adds that he has some very deep feelings about Juniata. I am very happy to be able to have spent these last five years of my life with the people here at the college."

"This 'Tique at Juniata"

By Pam Miller and Eric Schwab

This week we thought we would clue you in on some of the more unrecognizable paraphernalia in the showcase (just in case you were too stupified to notice). Some of the questionable articles include: a spittoon, ballot box, cork extractor, turkey caller, and cuckoo clock chain.

The turtle on the bottom shelf is not exactly one of your more common garden variety type household pets; it is a spitoon, circa. before 1950. The would-be expectorate places a gentle foot on the unsuspecting amphibian's head, gives a loving push, and whoopee, up flies the shell to reveal a container large enough to accommodate any bar room's healthiest salivator. The remarkable thing about this convenience is that they are moveable, making for easy clean-outs after the longest nights of drinking and tobacco chewing. It is quite a novel approach to the traditional bucket of the Ole West, suitable for the fanciest living room or raunchiest saloon.

Another handy device also useful around the consumption of spirits, only this time a little more up-graded from Iron City is a cork extractor for those bourgeois wine bottles of the common drinking man, especially helpful for removing those annoying cork chunks before pouring paper cup fulls of muscatel and Mad Dog. A truly simple minded contraption (for the simple minded), it consists of nothing more than three pieces of bent wire. The person afflicted with crumbling cork sticks the two ends in the bottle, closes down with the third, and extracts the would-be source of gastro-interitus or nausea long before Pepto-Bismal or Rolaids are called for.

With the recent passing of the Bicentennial it seems only apropos to mention such privileges as freedom of assembly and the right to petition. However, we feel that they have been overused, so instead try voting rights. The secret ballot was incorporated into our system long before Watergate or Nixon, and we can prove it! The secret ballot box enabled such organizations as the Knights of Columbus, Eastern Star, and U.S. Government to confidentially voice their opinions in a secretive manner. In this way such innovative policies as racial and religious prejudice, civil injustice and the Franking privilege remained instituted, due to the overbearing propaganistic effects of such maneuvers. "White balls elect, black balls reject." Boxes like this have been used for various voting purposes, from government elections to excluding minorities. Wouldn't Shirley Jackson be proud!

The final two items are bird-related. The sound of the first is almost indescribable, except of course for turkeys! Carved entirely out of more than one peice of wood, it is suitable to preface any Thanksgiving feast. Used by hunters, it supposedly lures turkeys to their eternal 'roasting' place. However, any bird that falls for this cheap decoy has to be a turkey. The second article is not meant to compliment the motorcycle gang outfit. These chains are the driving force behind your cuckoo clock's movements. They supply the gravitational pull (with the addition of a weight) necessary to make your cuckoo bird sing every hour on the hour, for ever and ever, as long as you wind it. Bet Aunt Matilda never found either of these in her birdbath!

We hope we haven't spoiled any of you preconceived fantasies concerning these objects and their intended uses. Maybe we even cleared up some of them, instead of clouding it even more.

RADIO CITY: The Year of the Cat

By Nathan Wagoner

Well, kids, it's that time of the month again, but I've got good news for you. It looks like this fiasco is going to become a weekly instead of a bi-weekly affair. The boys from "Bach to Rock" don't seem to be coming to work anymore, leaving me caught with my proverbial pants down. The only reviews I'd had planned were an in depth review of Kansas' various attempts (to come out some time before alleged appearance of same), and one on Joni Mitchell's last two albums, The Hissing of Summer Lawns, and Hejira. The one on Kansas isn't anywhere near ready (at the moment it's merely a simmering pot of biases and misconceptions) and I didn't do Madame Mitchell this week because, well because I didn't feel like it. So, in search of something I hadn't already made up my mind about, I fell by chance on Al Stewart's new album, The Year of the Cat.

The problem with The Year of the Cat is not the problem of a half-baked album as much as it is the problem of the artist who made it, and Al Stewart's problem is that he just doesn't have anything to say. He's managed to fill this album with a bunch of "nice images" strung together in charming little scenarios that have about as much depth to them as a comparable number of Hallmark "Get Well" Cards. He is a stereotyped (this one fits), misty-eyed musician who would rather sing drippy ballads about faraway places and ambiguous deeds than deal directly (or otherwise) with his own situation. One gets the feeling that he lives, as he says, "In a morning from a Bogart movie. In a country where they turn back time." That in itself is not all that bad; there have been musicians who could take that kind of escapism and produce excellent music with it: Renaissance, Steeleye Span, Fairport Convention, and Led Zeppelin (!) to name a few. However, the difference between them and Al Stewart is that when the aforementioned bands were escapists, they were escapists, goddamit, and that was all there was to say about it, which is a respectable attitude. Stewart just can't seem to make his mind up, which leaves him with, as stated in the above, precious little to talk about.

It is possible to stretch "nice images" out for a song or two and get away with it, but try it for two sides of an album, and I can guarantee you'll lose it. The results are amusing sometimes, such as "You asked the man for a room with a view — Nothing was said as he stared at his shoe." Sounds a lot like a limerick I wrote for 5th Grade English, but we won't get snotty.

The music, apart from the boring, balladlike melody lines, isn't too bad, somewhat redundant, but it's listenable (listentoable??). Like most latter-day cosmic cowboys he rips off George Harrison for all he can get, which isn't much, but that's to be expected and I won't say there is no good, original, musicianship on the album. There are two (count 'em, 1! 2!) good guitar solos (not just Harrison copies), on "If It Doesn't Come Naturally Leave It," and "One Stage Before," a few half decent piano tinkles, and 1 (count it, 1!) good song, "On the Border." I guess if you try long enough you're bound to get one good one, and even that one gets wimpy.

The total effect of The Year of the Cat is very similar to an album called Tranquility (by the band Tranquility) which came out a few years ago and died shortly thereafter. In other words, if you're of reasonable intelligence, and do not wear red-and green-striped pants, average listening limit is reached after two or three times through. In still other words, I wouldn't buy it. If you're looking for that kind of fantasy, you'd be better off putting your money into bands that do it well.

Play Production Class: Learning Through Doing

By Michelle Fistek

Ever wonder how plays are produced? Those of us in Mrs. Goehring's Play Production Class are learning how-through experience and reading. We are producing the eighteenth century play, "Tartuffe," by the French playwright, Moliere. "Tartuffe" is a comedy about a lecherous old con-man who tries to trick an old war hero out of his house, daughter, and wife. It will be presented on February 6 and 7, at 8:15 in Oller Hall.

Our class consists of twenty-three people. Mrs. Goehring has cast two people for some of the parts so that more students could be involved in acting. The rest of us are involved in the backstage aspects of play production such as stage management, set construction, lighting, house management, properties, make-up, costuming, and publicity.

The class is conducted Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, from one to three o'clock. The two hours are spent in rehearsal. As stage Manager, I usually follow along in the script, prompting the actors and making sure they are in the right places. The two hours fly by each time we meet. They are filled with laughter, cooperation and learning through doing.

At the present time, and until we receive costumes, the actors wear mock-ups of costumes to get the feel of them. The women especially have to get used to walking differently in the long skirts.

Mrs. Goehring patiently answers our thousands of questions and seems to be having as good a time as the rest of us! Mrs. "G" lets us approach our area of production as we feel it should be approached, correcting us when we make mistakes. Expressing her satisfaction with the professionalism and creative ideas that our class has displayed, Mrs. Goehring has said that the way we all work together is how she invisioned the class to be.

Part of the reason for our cooperation is Mrs. Goehring herself. She has high expectations and trust in our judgment. This inspires us to strive beyond the point of what is required.

We'd like to invite all of you to see our production of "Tartuffe" on February 6 or 7, or both! Come see us perform our final exam!

"The full meaning in life is to love God and to love everyone around you."

Getting to Know You

Editor's Note: There was a big mistake in last week's issue concerning this column which caused great embarrassment to the person involved as well as the paper itself. Through a misunderstanding between the printer and us, the picture of this column was printed without the accompanying article. Therefore this week I am re-publishing the picture with its original article. I apologize to the parties involved for the embarrassment caused and will try to avoid similar occurrences in the future.

We would like to introduce you to Denise Balmer, a nineteen year old sophomore from Middletown, New Jersey who is majoring in Anthropology. Denise chose Juniata "because everybody was friendly, and the admissions people put out better propaganda than any other college . . . Since I was going into pre-med the Science Center attracted me."

Denise's experiences last summer not only had a profound effect on her but also provided her with insight very few have the opportunity to encounter. "I worked in a Salvation Army camp for underprivileged kids, I was a counselor. For the first time in my life I found out I had all this responsibility on me. Even though they wore you out by the end of the day the love they gave you back was just so fantastic and so touching."

Denise's interests span from Joni Mitchell's music to dancing, and acting. She has an interesting philosophy concerning her roles as an actress on the stage: "When you get up there you can be anyone you want to be — when you go off you just leave the character on the curtains." Denise has an assortment of post-graduation plans which are just as varied as her interests. "I'd like to get a Master's in Anthropology — maybe I'd like to teach or go into research." Yet the Social Science field seems to be the one she's partial to. "I think that in today's society you're getting more and more into a computerized society, a technical society . . . you can't take the humaness out of being human . . . Social Science's future role is going to temper the society to the human not the other way around. I'd like to go to the Middle East and archeologically prove the Bible. After that I'd like to come back and be in a Broadway play."

The social atmosphere on campus is not one Denise finds easy to get into. "There's a sort of complacency — not so much apathy but just a self-satisfy attitude. It seems kind of sad when people are going around trying to find the meaning of their lives within themselves. I'd like to see a modern dance club or a yoga club but there's an absence of leadership. I'd like to see more social work being done."

When asked what makes her life worth living Denise quickly and simply replied "God." As she puts it, "you've gotta have some sort of direction, you have to have some rock to stand on. You end up sitting down and asking yourself, 'what-the-hell am I here for?' You can put a rat in a Skinner box but I don't want to be there. Skinner is fine until it comes to Salvation. When you get down to it the only thing that really matters is to be able to care and to love. The only way you can love is to experience it first. When I knew that God loved me it just knocked me over . . . I think the only way to love perfectly is through God. One of the things you shouldn't do is to conform — you've got the power within you to be yourself. You're body is your own, your soul is your own, and I think you should do with it what you want."

As far as accomplishments in life go, Denise would like to learn more in various fields. "I don't want to waste my potential . . . First you have to know the scales before you get into the Brahms, Bach, and Chopin. Right now I feel I'm practicing my scales before I get into the other stuff."

Denise's unselfish quality radiates to all who know her. She has a rare while beautiful way of articulating her feelings which causes those around her to stop and look at their own lives. Not many people have the time, acknowledge the need, or possess the courage to sit back and put their life into the proper perspective the way we feel Denise has.

Major Film Director Will Be Visiting Artist

Albert Maysles, whose films such as Gimme Shelter and Grey Gardens have made him perhaps the best-known documentary filmmaker in the country, will be on campus on February 11 and 12 as a Division I Visiting Artist. The Visiting Artist program has been made possible by a gift from Edith B. Wertz.

Three of Maysles' feature films will be screened in conjunction with his appearance at Juniata: Gimme Shelter on February 4, and Salesman and Grey Gardens on the afternoon and evening of the eleventh, at which time Mr. Maysles will also discuss his work.

Maysles, whose films are created in collaboration with his brother David and with the editor Charlotte Zwerin, acquired his first important motion picture experience as a cameraman with a Time, Inc. crew which produced a picture in 1960 contrasting the campaigning styles of Kennedy and Humphrey in that year's primary elections. After forming his own production company, Maysles did short films on the Beatles and on Marlon Brando before making Salesman, his first film released theatrically in the U.S.

SALESMAN

Salesman was a study of a group of fast-talking door-to-door Bible hustlers. It was widely discussed and praised because of the surprising intimacy the Maysles had achieved with their subjects, and also because of the engaging complexity of one of the salesmen and what seemed at the time to be the almost perfect objectivity of the filmmakers.

The Maysles agreed to make a cinematic record of a 1970 cross-country tour by the Rolling Stones just to get money to finance projects that interested them more. But the final concert took place at Altamont, where drunken Hell's Angels murdered a spectator with pool cues in front of the cameras, and the Maysles found themselves with a document of the souring of the counter-culture, a dark myth to supercede the one that had been born two years earlier at Woodstock. Gimme Shelter remains Maysles' most successful film financially.

Grey Gardens, which was shown originally at the 1975 New York Film Festival and which was recently named by Gene Shallit and other critics as one of 1976's ten best pictures, has caused controversy not so much because of its subject as because of its subjects, a mother and daughter who live lives of extreme eccentricity in a decaying Long Island mansion. The reason for the outcry in some quarters is that the ladies are aunt and cousin to Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis. Some viewers have felt that the Maysles have exploited these women; others have argued persuasively that the Bouviers have exploited the brothers. No one argues that the film is dull.

In addition to his appearance Friday evening, Mr. Maysles will be talking to a class and to other campus groups.

Curriculum Changes

By Brenda Geiger

There have been several changes in the curriculum for the incoming freshmen of the class of 1981. The Modes class, as we knew it, will remain the same. The freshmen, however, will only be required to take one HEH course, which will still be replaced by a third level language course. The other HEH has been replaced with an Inter-Diciplinary Course, which will probably be taken the sophomore or junior year. The purpose of this course will be to combine a humanities orientation with a scientific orientation. The prerequisite for this course will be two units of science, if you are in the humanities program; and two units from the humanities, if you are in the science program.

The Freshmen Seminar program has been changed to the Freshmen Conference program. The academic component has been removed and no credit will be given for the course. It's main purpose will continue to be advising students about their POE. Two advisors will still be required.

Writing Program, for financial rather than academic reasons, will be taught mostly by the present full-time professors. The nature of the course will also be slightly different. It will only be taught for one term, but the assignments will be more numerous. There will be more classroom work. Tutorials will not be as often. The program will run more like the pilot program and they will probably not have to do a research paper in the same manner that we are now doing one.

HEA has remained unchanged but incoming students are not required to take any VCU's. The courses for the inter-Diciplinary Course will replace this aspect of the program. Humanities courses have been redesigned to include more writing skills.

The incoming freshmen will be required to complete 36 units but D's will count for them. As it stands now, D's will have a double standard. The class of '81 and on will have them count; but for us, they will not.

The quality point system will be on a 4.0 scale with a 2.0 average required for graduation. Academic probation might be determined by a quality point average instead, but this is still in the discussion stage.

The Next 100 Years: Making Juniata Better Yet!

By Sally Brick

Oftentimes students imagine college administrative committees being composed of grey-bearded men who sit in old leather chairs and snore loudly. Fortunately, this image does not hold true for the administrators of College Development. This group of people is actively responsible for alumni affairs, public relations, and fund-raising including the Annual Support Fund, capital fund campaigns, the program of estate planning and other catagories of fund-raising among friends, foundations, businesses, parents and government agencies. Simply, the staff is involved in developing and bettering Juniata College.

As Vice President for Development, Foster Ulrich is responsible for the activities of the staff. Under him are Director of Alumni Affairs, David Kreider; Director of Development and Church Relations, Clayton Pheasant; Director of Public relations, Charles Pollock; Assistant Director of Public relations, Debra Peterson; and two student representatives, Tim Eshelman and Durke Nichols, who served on the Development Committee of the Board of Trustees. The staff also relies on the help and support of many alumni, friends, parents and organizations.

The Annual Support Fund is a very basic and essential campaign of College Development. The money recieved for the fund goes directly into the current operating budget for financial aid for students, faculty salaries and the purchase of instructional equipment. It involves the annual giving of alumni, the Church of the Brethern, businesses, Juniata Parents Association and other friends. The goal for the Fund last year (1975-76) was $150,000, which was achieved; the 1976-77 goal is $170,000.

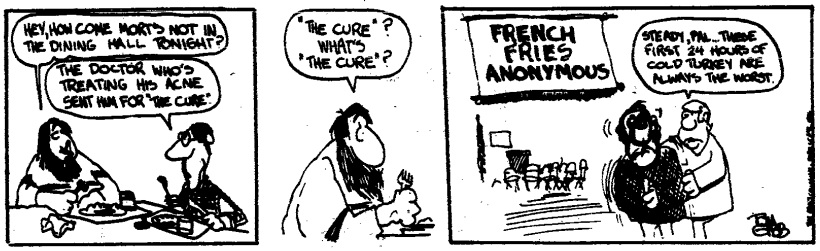
Alumni affairs are a very important aspect of the committee's activities. Juniata has 48% alumni participation while the national average is only 17%. This means that nearly half of Juniata graduates support the school through contributions. This ranks Juniata in the top 5% of schools across the nation for alumni participation. The Alumni Association consists of an Alumni Council, 22 alumni clubs and 6,481 living alumni.

The Juniata Parents Association is another active part of the development office's work. Having parents involved with the development of the school creates an atmosphere where the student, parents and the college are working together towards improvement. The Parents Association sent a record for support in 1971-72 by providing more than $20,000 in gift support.

The "Margin of Difference" development program was a most extensive fund-raising campaign, involving many geographical campaigns including the final campaign, "The Last 100 Days of the First 100 Years." This program, an effort to raise $10.1 million in eight years (1968-1976), was the largest development campaign in Juniata's history. The money raised in 1968-69 and 1970-72, $5.3 million, was used in construction of the Ellis College Center, development of new curriculum, student aid, endowment, and the support of teaching. The final phase of the program, the Centennial Fund included "The Last 100 Days" campaign which was an effort to reach the $10.1 million campaign goal by the end of 1976. This objective was met on December 28, 1976. This included matching a $500,000 gift from the Trustees in the "Challenge '76" campaign and matching a $100,000 grant from the Charles A. Dana Foundation. The Dana Grant will be used in the Development of the planning Humanities Cluster which will aid the expansion and further development of the Humanities department of the College.

College Development is also involved in public relations for the college. Informing the many participants and the public of the school's efforts is an important factor in promoting support in all aspects of the college. Catalogs, brochures, newsletters, press releases, and publicity for athletic events and other activities are a few aspects of this job.

Development is important in these changing times. Juniata is making a big effort to keep up with change by continually improving the quality of education in every way.



Ice Hockey: Optimism and Determination — Despite Defeat

Juniata's Ice Hockey Team suffered its first defeat to the hands of Dickinson College at Penn State's ice-skating rink Saturday evening. The team worked hard, but apparently not hard enough to overcome their rivals, finishing with a final score of 3 to 8.

Juniata fought hard and consequently started a rivalry match. Roger Quay drilled the puck into the goalbox giving the Indians their first goal. Dickinson began working on a goal and tied the score several minutes into the first period.

The battle continued with the score standing at 1 to 1; both teams eagerly looking for the tie-breaking goal. Unfortunately for Juniata, Dickinson rallied their players to lead them to 5 repeated goals during the second period. But Juniata never gave up and with faithful teamwork and skill, the Indians were able to pull through with another goal made by Vince Sarni assisted by Roger Quay. At the end of the second period, with both teams anticipating a victory, the score stood at 1 to 6.

The optimistic and determined Indians went into the third period trailing by five points. During that period Dickinson chalked up two more goals giving them a total of eight. With a minute and thirty-one seconds remaining, the old Juniata spirit came through with Mike Raquet, assisted by Ken Rodgers and John Wait, scoring Juniata's third and final goal.

The Juniata Ice Hockey Team for 1977 consists of:

Coach Heberling	Coach
Mike Raquet	Center
Ken Rodgers	Wing
John Wait	Wing
Jeff Bloss	Center
Vince Sarni	Wing
Curt Fischer	Wing
Joe Paskill	Wing and Defense
Mark Schultz	Wing
Ken Forand	Defense
Roger Quay	Defense
Jamie Pirrello	Defense
Doug Williams	Defense
Mark Casale	Goal tender
Bob Armstrong	Student coach
Nancy Heffleger	Statistician
Linda Kemp	Statistician

Anyone interested in attending future Ice Hockey games, especially if you can provide transportation, should contact any of the team members.

Hope to see everyone at the next game, scheduled for February 6 at Hershey. Bring your enthusiasm and your warm clothes!!!

Indians Suffer Narrow Defeat by Colonels

By Scott Pearl

Last Saturday night, the Indian's basketball team went down to a 74-71 defeat to the Wilkes Colonels in a MAC game in Wilkes-Barre. Although the Indians never led in the game after the first three minutes, they did tie the score at 48 with twelve minutes remaining in the contest after being down at half-time down by six points - 39-33. JC almost came back in the closing minutes of the game when they were behind at 64-71. Junior Tay Wlatenbaugh, the leading scorer for the game with 28 points, closed the gap to four points when he scored a three-point play as he was fouled while shooting, sinking the original shot and also the free throw. The Colonels then made a three-point play of their own as sophomore Jeff Baird scored and was also fouled, opening their lead to 74-67. JC's Roger Galo then sank a bucket from 15 feet, followed by an inside shot by John Grzesiuk, closing the gap to 74-71. The Indians, however, couldn't pull any closer as the clock ticked down to the final seconds.

Along with his 26 points, Waltenbaugh pulled down eight rebounds and blocked one shot. Roger Galo, however, scored 22 points per game. The Indians now have six wins and six losses on the season while only one and three in the MAC. The JC defense is now allowing only about 61.5 points per game- which should still place them in the top ten defensive division III teams in the nation. The Indians go on the road again with a game Wednesday at Lycoming and return home this Saturday night with a game against Albright at 8:00 p.m.

APRIL 15 DEADLINE

27 Italian Medical and Veterinary Schools Accept American Students

Medical and veterinary school aspirants who are thinking of applying to Italian medical schools, and their families, must act immediately. New Italian government regulations require that preinscription applications be filed with Italian Consulates before April 15, for consideration for medical and veterinary school admission in 1977.

27 distinguished Italian medical schools accept Americans. Several hundred Americans now are studying at Italian medical and veterinary schools. Medical, dental and veterinary school aspirants who need assistance in language and cultural orientation and preparation before, during and after medical school to enable the practice of medicine in the U.S., should contact the Institute of International Medical Education. The Institute has helped more Americans enter European medical and veterinary schools than any other organization. Advanced placement for holders of science post-graduate degrees.

This 'tique at Juniata

By Pam and Eric

Editor's Note: This is a left over article from the parody paper.

The Juniata College Science Departments are proud to announce recent breakthroughs in the field of medicine. Students and indolent faculty personnel have been toiling long and hard, near and far, and round about to create such mind boggling curealls for such dreaded afflictions as piles, constipation, blood cleansing, cow fattening, asthma, whooping cough, diptheria, hives, and women' disorders. Due to this influx of health procuring devices, our answer to the Mayo Clinic has arrived: The Juniata Anti-Illness Miracle Performing Center for the Dysfunctional. The days of listerene, aspirin, wine and roses are over. We now have at our dispos-all such miracle drugs as Kidney-Wort, Sarsaparilla, Barker's Nerve and Bone Liniment, Green Mountain Asthma Cure, and Penny Royal Pills.

The clinic is operating from the rooftop heliport of Ellis Hall and Bordello. A message from the Swedish Prime Minister was given at the opening ceremonies as were tattoes by Madame Butterfly, Inc. F. Armer Almanac gave the predictions for next year's casualty rate, partially resulting from swine flu paralysis and from pnuemonia incurred during a blizzard in July.

The following rates will go into effect, as soon as we make settlement:

— Office Consultation $1.00-$10.00
— Visits in Town $1.00
— Visits in Country for 1st mile-$1.50, 2nd-$1.00, each additional mile-.50, each mile over 10-$1.00
— Obstetric Attendance $5.00-$15.00
— Veneral Disease (cash) $5.00-$20.00
— Amputations Thigh-$50.00, Leg or Arm-$25.00, Minor-$10.00
— Reducing Fracture Thigh $15.00, Leg-$15.00, Arm-$10.00, Minor-$5.00.
— Dislocations (same as fractures)
— Consultation $5.00 with mileage
— Night Visits 50% extra

These rates were quoted from the Clearfield County Medical Society, April 4, 1880.

These future world renowned remedies are on loan from the Miller Institute of Technology for the Advancement of Ethanol. These prize winning pieces will be on display in Huntingdon for a limited engagement. Afterwitch, they will tour such hot spots as Mt. Union, Paris, Blue Balls, Tokyo, and Belleville. Look for it in your area.

Circle K Blood Drive

Last Wednesday's blood drive, sponsored by Circle K, was a success, according to Drive chairman Mark Alex. Alex went on to say that the Red Cross was very pleased with the student effort.

In all 138 pints of blood were collected. Over 150 people volunteered to donate, but approximately 20 were deferred mainly due to colds.

A quarter keg of beer, a case of soda, and a trophy were awarded to the Second Floor of Sherwood for the best showing. Originally, a half keg was to be awarded, but Circle K felt that the number of students donating over the number of students in the school was not high enough.

Mark Alex would like to thank all Circle K volunteers who helped at the drive, and Centerboard for donating materials for posters. More importantly, he would like to thank all those people who donated or attempted to donate blood.

By Barb Rea

With the inauguration of Jimmy Carter last week, most Americans have looked away from the Republican party for new leadership in the upcoming years. This feeling is similar to the one experienced by the Democrats after the defeats of Humphrey in 1968 and McGovern in 1972, both to the team of Nixon / Agnew.

The job of rebuilding after a losing election requires leadership to bring the available, qualified candidates together with the staff of previous campaigns. Funds are not a problem after the candidate has clarified his / her position on an important issue. Special interest groups are always willing to back a candidate for their cause.

President Carter's campaign is a perfect example of efficient rebuilding. He had a dedicated core staff of his own people who knew the established party machine and carefully used its members to prevent friction between new and old staffers. The use of the party staff probably saved Carter large amounts of money.

For the elections of 1968 and 1972 former President Nixon bypassed delicate negotiations on the lower levels to attract his own staff of workers, especially high school volunteers. Large amounts of money were paid for television spots with enough left over to supply any campaign headquarters with thousands of phamplets and posters. Organization within the Nixon campaign gave way to the overkill of material to be spread out into the community.

Winning an election revitalizes the party and also brings the staff together for the next election. However the first candidate must set a precedent by organizing for himself and his / her predecessors.

JC Fashion Awards Announced for 1976

By Brenda Geiger

Well, It's that time of the year again! The best-dressed list among the Juniata faculty has now been released. Before we announce the overall winners, we would like to take this time to mention some minor categories. This year's Marlbora Man has been chosed for his outstanding pointed cowboy shoes, his hat, and his suede-fringed jacket. The award this year goes to Dr. Masters.

In the best hat category, it was a toss-up this year between Ruth Reed, for her wide selection of scarves and Professor Jaeger for his beret. Andy Murray has been selected for the Little Boy Blue Award, Tom Fisher has been awarded the Green Phantom Award.

Professor Dolnikowski has been awarded the Best Nostalgia Dresser; Professor Kaylor, the Flashiest Dresser of the Year; and Mrs. Cherry, the Most Risque. Professor Fagot has received the award for the Most Coordinated Outfit of the Year for his blue polka-dotted shirt and blue pants. Dr. Wright was this year's winner of the Widest Tie Award. The Green Army was nominated for the best All-Around Coordinated Color, for their color variety. Dr. Hocberg received the Best in Sporting Attire for his beautiful hunting vest.

The Kojak Award, for the easiest to manage hairstyle, has been awarded to Robert Fisher this year. Bob Reilly was the recipient of the Teddy Bear Award.

And now for the moment we have all been waiting for. This year's Best-DressedWoman and Man of the Year. The awards this year goes to Janet Lewis, due to her wide selection of dresses, and Dr. Shettler, for his larger selection of jackets.

There are two other awards we would like to mention. They are slightly off the fashion trend, but, we feel, worth mentioning. They are the Campus Cassinova, Bruce Davis and our Do Blonnds Have More Fun, Professor Lasko. We hope you agree with our selections and look forward to a new year of fashion trends here at Juniata.

From The Editor

I would like to thank all of you who took part in the Juniatian's survey last week. From the results tabulated so far, it seems as if the survey will be very helpful in showing how the readers feel about the Juniatian. I appreciate all criticisms and opinions. Anything is helpful, after all this is your paper! We need your ideas in order to cater to your services. The results will be published as soon as all the results are in. I thank you once again for your cooperation.

Jazz Review: Buddy Rich and His Killer Force

By Ibrook Tower

After last February's excellent performance in Juniata College's Artist Series of Bob Greene's "World of Jelly Roll Morton," many people expressed enthusiasm for the inclusion of a jazz group in this year's Artist Series. Buddy Rich and His Killer Force was found to be available for a performance here which took place Wednesday night in Oller Hall.

Reports of a previous performance of Buddy Rich at Juniata College and the name "His Killer Force" did not give me the greatest confidence that the performance would be especially enjoyable. I was prepared to leave at the end of the performance with my ears ringing from being subjected to levels of disorganized sound exceeding the pain threshold.

Wednesday night's performance did not meet my expectations at all. "His Killer Force" turned out to be a band of fifteen (5 saxes, 3 trombones, 4 trumpets, rhythm guitar, bass guitar and piano), musicians of the highest professional caliber whose average age happened to be twenty-four.

The concert began with four swing numbers of varying tempi which showed the virtuosity of individual members of His Killer Force as well as the competence of Buddy Rich's arranger. There were many interesting multi-sectional effects where the usual mono-chromatic / tutti scoring was expected. Buddy Rich's imaginative use of percussion for coloristic effects in addition to providing rhythmic drive was impressive.

In the next section of the performance, unfortunately, His Killer Force lived up to its name. This section contained the worst abuse of a great musical style, rock. The first of the two pieces in this section began with a drum solo combined with guitar and piano rhythm section playing somewhat aimlessly. This already too loud din was joined by brasses to bring the sound level to almost unbearable. At this point the baritone saxophonist stood up to play a long improvised (I assume) solo which could not be heard over the sound of the rest of the band. Evidently, the arranger of this piece feels the louder and more blurred the sound, the better the rock song. The second piece, in disco style, showed somewhat more organization.

At this point, Mr. Rich mercifully decided to perform the quiet ballad, "Round About Midnight," which was one of the highlights of the concert. Tenor saxophonist Steve Marcus was featured throughout in a well structured improvised solo which must have required great forethought on the part of the soloist. The set ended with "So What."

The second half featured an arrangement by tenor saxophonist-flutist Bobby Minson called "Rhoda Rat." This arrangement featured frequently changing meters and a surprise entrance of the brasses and saxes after the opening piano solo.

Most big bands of the last twenty years feature a person in the brass section generally known as a "screech trumpeter" who is usually distinguished by his lack of musicianship and his ability to play the melody an octave higher than anyone else in the band. David Stahl, lead trumpeter in His Killer Force, was soloist in "The Summer of '42" in which he proved to be an extremely sensitive musician with complete control of the highest register of his instrument as well.

Buddy Rich asked the pianist to play a special number for the audience which turned out to be an Erroll Garner-Chopinesque performance of "Mickey Mouse Club March." (Most of the audience did not recognize the tune.)

The climax of the concert was an arrangement to the prologue to "West Side Story." I have always felt that Bernstein, in creating the syncopated four-note mative which follows the unison opening of this show, was inspired by jazz solo drumming style. This motive certainly pervaded Buddy Rich's magnificent virtuoso solo which brought the audience to its feet in applause. The concert ended with an encore, the excellent arrangement of the Beatles' song, "Norwegian Wood".

I enjoyed the evening with Buddy Rich and His Killer Force very much. I hope to see future Artist Series include groups that perform jazz, America's richest contribution to musical style.

Letters to the Editor

What I read in the "From the Gallery" column last week upset me greatly. I read about a supposed "student" (i.e. works for student interests) institution refusing to help provide funds for a popular function to be held in the near future. This student institution is the Juniata College Senate; the funds asked for, by Center Board, are $1,000; reason for the funds; a Center Board sponsored "big time type" rock concert.

The reason for Senate reluctance to help pay for the concert is reflected in this statement made by the Senate Vice President, "We're giving away a thousand dollars and getting nothing in return."

Who cares if the Senate makes no material gains out of their "would be $1,000 donation"? Student enjoyment at the concert should be payment enough for the Senate. The Senate's sole purpose is to look after Juniata College student interests. Many times student needs require money and Senate money helps nobody sitting in the bank. What will the Senate do with the money anyway? Donate it to the "freezing children in St. Louis?" Maybe build a capitol building with it? I, having average knowledge of functions to come, see nothing that can take so much money to break the Senate.

I do realize that we have Senators who are working for the students. These Senators have not forgotten their obligations. These are not the Senators I'm writing about. The Senators who do not understand their duties as a Senator are the ones this article is attacking.

I can summarize with this statement. When the Student Government ceases to work in the best interests of the student body, the Student Government nullifies its purpose.

This letter is intended to serve as an explanation for the situation which developed at the Dance Party that was held this past weekend in the old gym. The last minute changed in entertainment was the result of a misunderstanding on our part for which we apologize and have offered refunds. The poor heating system in the gym was complicated by the campus-wide cutback in heating fuel and frozen pipes in the system. Despite these undesirable circumstances, we feel that the party went well; clearly much better than we had expected on Saturday afternoon.

Juniata has ended its Centennial year without too much of a bang. The country has also ended a celebrant year, the Bicentennial, with a slight fizz. Juniata was obviously the only spot in the country that could celebrate its own Centennial; on the national scene there could have been many spots, but the official city of celebration was the "City of Brotherly Love," Philadelphia.

Much to the dismay of the city fathers of Philadelphia, what was thought to be the center of attraction for the nation's Bicentennial turned out to be a second class hot spot. At one point during the summer the mayor of the city felt it necessary to call in the National Guard to keep the crowds under control. Fortunately, the crowds were at a minimum, but for all of the businessmen in the Philadelphia area who had made arrangements for an over-abundance of tourists, the Bicentennial turned out to be a bad venture.

What happened in Philadelphia? Well, they took second place in the contest to host the nation's birthday party. While everyone was looking for lines of traffic to start heading Philadelphia-bound, New Yorkers found their backyards filled with the tourists Philadelphia had prepared themselves for. What were these waylaid tourists doing in New York? Watching the Tall Ships come up the harbor. Then the City of Brotherly Love came down with the mysterious Legionnaires Disease and people evaded the city as if it had the plague. Next, the Philadelphia Phillies had a chance to hit the top at the World Series, only to be stopped during the playoffs. For Philadelphia, nothing went right for its celebration of our nation's birthday.

What happened at Juniata for this school's birthday? Well, no one was really here for the school's actual birthday; the students were on break. This was easily cured, we just changed the official celebration to a later date. Then came Centennial Convocation, and the Inauguration of Dr. Binder; the seniors were supposed to march in for convocation the same as they do for graduation, but most of them didn't, which was very understandable. But what else happened??

Maybe after a certain age, people really don't get into birthdays — perhaps they would rather not count up the years. Hopefully, the nation's Tricentennial and Juniata's Bicentennial will be different the next time!

Bagel toasting: Juniata's newest social center.

Juniata's Latest "Hot Spot"

By Carol Tolbert

At first, an article about the cafeteria toaster may seem rather senseless, but, upon consideration, its purpose becomes quite clear.

Actually, the toaster has become what might be called Juniata's latest socializing locale. It gives people a chance to check up on friends they don't see very often, or people with whom they have to get in touch. They give each other a quick run-down on the most current gossip.

But the toaster doesn't only gather old friends- it's also a prime place for new relationships to start. Through various methods, students are able to exchange their first bits of communication, thus leading to new friendships.

Another quality of the toaster is that it improved consideration among students. It almost seems as if there were an unwritten rule saying that people wait, and then take only their bagels. Such behavior might be called "bagel respect".

Besides what has been mentioned here, a good deal of other subtlties probably take place at the toaster. (By the way, did you hear what happened to so and so last week?)

Two Juniata Professors Appointed

HUNTINGDON, PA. — Professorial chairs have been awarded to two faculty members at Juniata College, it was announced by Dr. Frederick M. Binder, college president.

Dr. Howard H. Crouch, professor of education, was honored with the Martin G. Brumbaugh Professorship in Education and Dr. Paul D. Schettler, Jr., professor of chemistry, received the Jacob H. and Rachel J. Brumbaugh Professorship in Chemistry.

Funds for the memorial chair in education were contributed by friends of the late Martin Grove Brumbaugh as a tribute to his significant contributions to education. During his life, the late Dr. Brumbaugh served as Juniata president, governor of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia superintendent of schools, a professor of pedagogy at the University of Pennsylvania and Huntingdon County Superintendent of schools.

By his will, the late Dr. Normal J. Brumbaugh designated a major portion of his estate to establish a memorial professorship in chemistry honoring his parents, the late Jacob H. and Rachel Brumbaugh. Prof. Jacob Brumbaugh was a member of the faculty and principal of the Huntingdon Normal School (later Juniata) and served on the board of trustees from 1883-1943.

The professorial chair in education was formerly held by Dr. Miriam Schlegel Mussleman, professor of education emerita, and the chemistry chair was formerly held by Dr. Donald M. Rockwell, professor of chemistry emeritus.

Dr. Crouch, a Juniata faculty member since 1963, is a former chairman of the education department and the college's social sciences division. In addition to his teaching duties, he presently serves as director of Juniata's Early Childhood Education Center.

A 1949 graduate of the Ohio State University, he received the master of education degree from Westminster College in 1953 and the Ph.D. from Ohio State in 1964. He has done additional study at the University of Florida.

Professionally, Dr. Crouch is a member of the Association for Supervision and Curriculum Development and the Humanistic Education Action Group.

Dr. Crouch serves on the Huntingdon Area School District board of directors. Active in all phases of theatre, he was a founder of the Huntingdon Community Theatre and is a founder and a member of the Juniata Players theatre organization. He is also a member of Stone Church of the Brethren, Huntingdon.

A native of Warren, Ohio, he is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Crouch. While in Ohio, Dr. Crouch taught in Ashtabula, Bloomfield Township and Hartford Township, where he served for two years as head of the school system.

Dr. Crouch resides in Huntingdon with his wife, the former Hazel Black. The Crouches have three children.

Dr. Schettler joined the Juniata Chemistry faculty in 1967 following a year's teaching internship at Antioch College. He has served as department chairman since 1975, has worked on various faculty committees and is involved in the development of the college's general education program.

Born in Salt Lake City, Utah, Dr. Schettler received the bachelor of science degree with high honors in chemistry from the University of Utah in 1958. He earned the Ph.D. degree in physical chemistry from Yale University in 1964.

While at the University of Utah, he did research on a theory of gas chromatography with J.C. Giddings, and as a post doctoral fellow at Yale he studied sodium liquid ammonia with Dr. Andrew Patterson.

In addition to teaching, Dr. Schettler has served as director of four National Science Foundation Undergraduate Research Participation frants and two NSF Instructional Scientific Equipment Programs at Juniata. He is currently the principal investigator on a project exploring the interaction of hydrocarbon (natural gas) and shale, which is being funded through a $45,000 grant from the U.S. Energy Research and Development Administration.

During the 1974-75 academic year, he spent a sabbatical leave in Lille, France, where he studied at Catholic University. In his spare time, Dr. Schettler is an avid photographer.

Dr. Schettler resides at Huntingdon, RD 2, with his wife, the former Karen Hegsted, and their two children. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul D. Schettler of 510 M St., Salt Lake City, Utah.

Experience is Best

Interested in social service — but uncertain about a career?

The most sure-fire way to zero in on career objectives is through practical work experience.

Centers for the Handicapped, local near Washington, D.C., offers young people a one-year internship working with handicapped children and adults. Recruitment is underway now for interns to start in January 1977. For the right person, the work-study experience offers many challenges and rewards. Most important, it will affect decisions on one's life's work.

Some participants will work on a rotating schedule, getting experience in different programs within the Agency. All can specialize in their areas of primary interest at some point during their internship. Interns continue their education by taking courses at nearby colleges and universities.

Interns live cooperatively in townhouses provided by the agency sharing responsibilities for cooking, cleaning, shopping and establishing their own regulations. They receive no pay but are given a weekly subsistence allowance. Each participant will receive a $1,000 educational scholarship upon completion of the program.

Centers for the Handicapped programs serve 300 people, covering nearly every major handicapping condition. There are programs for infants, children and adults. Among the services the agency provides are sheltered work, social rehabilitation, recreation, camping, advocacy counseling and transportation.

Applications are now being accepted for the Intern Program. Applicants must have successfully completed some college work. The only other requirements are valid driver's license and good health. Interviews will be scheduled in early December.

Interested students can obtain more information and an application at their college placement office (or campus library, in some cases) or by writing to Centers for the Handicapped, 649 Lofstrand Lane, Rockville, Maryland 20850.

Klan Recruits

A Ku Klux Klan organization has been doing extensive recruiting work on the U. of Alabama campus this fall. The Knights of the Ku Klux Klan — apparently a youth-oriented rival to the United Klans of America, also headquartered in the university town of Tuscaloosa — has taken out a campus post office box and is distributing literature soliciting members "of gentile descent and who are white."

The group is not a registered student organization and the solicitation violated the UA rules but is difficult to stop, says a U. spokesman.

From "Tartuffe" to Tennyson to Tolkien

Next week take a break from the wintry weather and the finals blues; relax for a few hours and take advantage of the world of interpretation. On Monday and Tuesday evenings, February 6 and 7, Mrs. Doris P. Goehring's Play Production class will present "Tartuffe," a comedy by the eighteenth century French playwright Moliere. (It will be done in English, however!) Curtain time both nights will be 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall.

The production of "Tartuffe" will prove to be an exciting adventure into theater interpretation; the week continues as students of Dr. Esther M. Doyle's class in Oral Interpretation of Literature explore the area of interpretive reading. Beginning on Tuesday, February 7, and continuing through Friday, February 11, the class will be presenting one-hour segments every afternoon at 2 p.m. in Shoemaker Galleries. Selections in poetry, prose, and drama, ranging from Tennyson to Tolkein, will provide a pleasant distraction from the weather and worries about finals.

From "Tartuffe" to Tennyson to Tolkien: come and take an enjoyable journey through the world of interpretation with us — you won't be disappointed!!

RELATING EXPERIENCE TO ACADEMIC LEARNING

real

A Cooperative Program of Pennsylvania Department of Education and Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency

If you're eligible for your college's federal work-study program, there's a new program sponsored by the Pennsylvania Department of Education that can give you academic credit, money and work experience in your choses career field.

It's called REAL, "Relating Experience to Academic Learning". Now in operation about six months under PDE's office of Lifelong Learning, REAL offers students internships in public and nonprofit agencies. It's available to all except those in nursing, student teaching and religion-oriented activities.

"All colleges are in the program if they have federal work-study funds," said C. K. Moore, REAL director. State money is used to pay half the student's wages. The college, using work-study money, pays the other half.

Students earn at least the minimum wage, now $2.30 an hour, and work at least 10 hours a week. The college determines how much credit to offer for an internship, which must cover at least one semester or term. Jobs must be associated with the student's career exploration.

For further information, students should see their financial aid officer, college counselor or contact Director, REAL program, Pennsylvania Department of Education, Box 911, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania 17126. Phone 717-787-9602.

M.A.C.'s Here We Come!

By John Paulshock

The women cagers performed with elaborate expertise on January 27, when they proceeded to anihilate the yet untested Grier School (0-0) by a damaging 52-17 margin. (Really folks, this is not another parody!) From the opening whistle it was nothing but child's play and shooting practice for the Indian squaws. At the end of the first period, commander Mardi Frye had led her infamous quintet to a 20-2 lead. At the start of the second quarter she was found lounging in a chair on the bench with her four cohorts; Alison Reeves, Janet Bechtel, Nancy Zinkham and Jan Edgar. The five starters remained comfortable on the bench for the duration of the game, and I'm sure were not the least bit dissatisfied with the exhibition of the reserves.

By half-time, the entire Juniata squad had earned at least two minutes of playing and owned a 28-6 lead. Sophmore center, Sue Stapleton made no hesitation in maintaining ball control and in snagging rebounds. Jill Thayer and Lynn Greenwood seemed to endlessly find loopholes in the contender's offense, and readily turned them into fast breaks which accounted for many field goals. Greenwood, along with Stapleton played a commendable game underneath the boards. Sharon Scott and Heather Morrison rattled the girls in green by hugging close on defense, and controlling the passing game on offense. Junior Martha Klockner worked very well in and just around outside the key, and tallied some rebounds for herself. Freshman guard, Patti Irwin, was also reported as hustling and playing well.

All in all, the evening gave the non-letter winners and rookies a good bit of action and experienced on the courts. Coach Gargula, no doubt, is pleased that he could give the youngsters some playing time, as well as give the starting five a much needed rest. This is one of the busiest stretches in their schedule. The women now sport a four win-two loss slate, and are showing improvement each game. February will be tough as they will be spending lots of time on the road.

Some parting 'free shots':

Lynn Greenwood led the Indians' scoring attach with ten points.

Susan Stapleton led the Indians' defensive stance with ten rebounds.

Indians Thwart Raid

By Hongo

On Saturday, January 29, at Memorial Gymnasium, the women's basketball team upset the Shippensburg Raiderettes with a score of 51-47. This was the first victory over a state school since 1975. The victory increases the teams overall record 5-2.

Right from the start, Shippensburg put on a full court press which caused a few problems, but the Indians handled it very well. Due to excellent outside shooting, the Indians carried an 8 point lead into the locker room at halftime.

The Raiderettes began the second half with a bang and tied the score up. From then on it was a tremendous defensive struggle. Sue Stapleton brought down a majority of the rebounds and stopped Shippensburg from getting those second and third shots. She played an excellent game and should be congratulated.

The Indians worked their offensive extremely well, with a great deal of aggressiveness, fighting for loose balls and grabbing the rebounds for the important second shots. Leading the scoring was Jan Edgar with 17 points followed by Alison Reeves with 11, Nancy Zinkham with 10, Janet Bechtel with 7, Mardi Frye with 5 and Sue Stapleton with 1 foul shot.

Previous to this game, the women's J.V. team were defeated by Shippensburg 43-7. Although scoring wasn't very high, the girls played a pretty good game for themselves. Scoring for the J.V. were Jill Thayer with 5 and Lynn Greenwood with 2.

The Indians next home game is Wenesday, February 9 at 6:30 against Elizabethtown. Come show the team your support and help them go all the way. This is their year.

An Inside Look at JC Athletes: Tod Roadman and Karl Schlichter

By Mindy Anderson

Each athlete views his sport in a personal way, finding different aspects of the sport appealing. Like many wrestlers, Freshman Todd Roadman regards wrestling as a form of personal satisfaction and enjoyment. Besides the obvious competition, Todd cites another reason for wrestling as keeping fit and "staying in shape".

Todd's hometown, Bedford, Pa., has been known to foster many outstanding wrestlers. He began his wrestling career in the fourth grade. His motivation and involvement in wrestling has stemmed from a simple desire to participate in the sport. As a member of the J.C. squad, Todd proves to be a consistently strong competitor to the opposition, displaying a style characterized by quickness and well-deve oped wrestling techniques.

Because wrestling is a team sport, Todd believes team unity is an essential element for success. He explained, "It's a team sport, everyone helping and criticizing each other." Todd enthusiastically supports a good player-coach relationship, maintaining that a good coach can make the difference between just participating and truly enjoying the sport. Concerning the aspect of practice time, Todd commented, "It's easy! You have to learn to budget your time." Todd budgets his time, enabling himself to participate in another favorite pastime-skiing. Todd feels that "wrestling here at J.C. shows strong competition," with the future looking brighter for the wrestlers. One of the goals Todd has set for himself is that one of journeying to the M.A.C.'s With Todd, a strong, quick wrestler with mat moves coming easily to him, J.C. has a firm foothold in the 126 weight class.

The JC spectators this year have the opportunity to watch many players exhibit their talent, thanks to Coach Meditch's platooning offense. By rotating mainly his guards and forwards, the coach feels he can best utilize his recruited talents. Karl Schlichter, a native of Chambersburg, Penna. finds himself included in Meditch's top eight. While not thoroughly impressed with his current role as a substitute, Karl feels that his sometimes brief appearances are better than none at all.

Essentially Karl believes that his basketball capabilities decided the size of the college that he would attend, for as early as elementary school he had aspirations to play collegiate basketball. When asked what factors influenced him to come to JC he replied, "I was impressed with Coach Meditch's recruiting ability. Initially, he (the coach) seemed to be interested in the student-athlete." He also stated that "the atmosphere seemed to be pleasant when I visited the campus."

Majoring in business and psychology, Karl hopes to someday receive a master's degree in Personnel Management.

During Karl's free time one can always find him in the gymnasium, lifting weights, shooting baskets or just spacing around. Even back home when our paths cross, Karl usually is clad in gym clothes and has a basketball in his hand. He feels that "basketball can serve as an escape from reality. When you're out on the court you kind of forget about your problems (personal or academic). Out on the court everything is different from playing basketball a number of years; your thoughts and actions just begin to occur, almost instinctively."

Editors Note: We express our regrets that due to lack of coverage, last Saturday's wrestling match and men's basketball game could not be covered. Both teams did win. Wrestling: 26-20; Basketball: 71-70. Congratulations to both teams!

Juniata Project to Explore Raystown Consequences

HUNTINGDON — Many people in Huntingdon County believe that the development of the Raystown Dam and the huge lake behind it will be a good thing, while others doubt it. In few cases, however, has the general public been engaged in thorough inspection of the long-range effects of the lake.

In order to halp raise public awareness of the impact of Raystown Lake, Juniata College has undertaken a $15,000 project entitled "Should the Raystown Lake Impact be Guided?"

The project, funded through a $7,500 grant from the Public Committee for the Humanities in Pennsylvania and matching in-kind resources from Juniata, is being directed by Dr. Duane F. Stroman, professor of sociology at Juniata.

In Dr. Stroman's words, "The impact of the Raystown dam and lake will be far-reaching. It will affect local industries and businesses and stimulate the creation of new ones. It will affect transportation, schools, churches and hospitals. It will particularly affect land use, land values, housing and the aesthetic quality of the environment. And in the process of affecting the lives of so many people in the area, it will create many basic policy questions and issues of long-term and important consequences for the county's governing bodies."

The proposed program involves three stages of public discussion to provide a forum to stimulate thinking about the impact of the dam and what could and should be done about it.

According to Dr. Stroman, the project will facilitate communication among individual citizens, leadership groups and governing bodies in the county and will raise the level of awareness not only of the range of impacts of the Raystown Lake, but also of the range of alternatives open to the local citizenry.

Among the issues to be explored are support of positive impacts and containment of negative impacts and responsibilities for guiding the impact.

The three stages of the project are designed to move from general audiences and issues to more specifically invited audiences and more concrete policy issues.

Stage I will be a program which will be offered on request to area service organizations, clubs, churches and other groups. It will consist of a ten-minute, locally-developed film and a discussion period. Stage II will involve four open forums in locations considered the highest impact areas of the lake: Huntingdon, Marklesburg, Broad Top City and Trough Creek. The final stage will include two evening workshops designed to explore in more detail the policy issues seen as central in the Stage I and II meetings.

In addition to Dr. Stroman, several members of the Juniata faculty will participate in the project: Dr. Ernest H. Post, Jr., professor of history and assistant director of the program; Dr. Robert E. Wagoner, professor of philosophy; Clayton E. Briggs, associate professor of speech and theatre; Dr. Kenneth W. Crosby, professor of history; Paul M. Heberling, associate professor of sociology and anthropology; and Doris P. Goehring, assistant professor of speech and theatre.

Area persons who are interested in having the Stage I program for one of their organizational gatherings can contact either Dr. Stroman or Dr. Post at Juniata College for more information.

Juniata, Wesley Colleges Initiate Transfer Program

HUNTINGDON, PA. — Juniata College, a four-year liberal arts institution, and Wesley College of Dover, Del., a two-year College, have established a direct transfer program.

Announced by Juniata President Frederick M. Binder, the agreement applied to students graduating from Wesley with the associate of arts (AA) degree in either liberal arts, music, science, education or business administration.

Under the cooperative program, Juniata will automatically grant junior class standing to students who graduate from Wesley with the A.A. degree, providing they have a minimum cumulative grade-point average of 2.0 (on a 4.0 scale) and recommendations from specified Wesley officials.

Juniata will accept all credits taken toward the completion of the A.A. degree at Wesley as part of the total requirements for the baccalaureate degree.

Juniata Signs Agreement With Podiatric College

HUNTINGDON — Juniata College and the Pennsylvania College of Podiatric Medicine, Philadelphia, have initiated a joint undergraduate-professional program in podiatric medicine.

The agreement, announced by Juniata President Frederick M. Binder, provides for a seven-year accelerated program of study. Three years will be spent at Juniata and four at the medical school, leading to the Doctor of Podiatric Medicine degree. Students who successfully complete the program will also receive the bachelor of science degree from Juniata.

Under the cooperative program, each year the Pennsylvania College of Podiatric Medicine will admit up to three Juniata students who have completed their junior year and who have received recommendations (based on cumulative grade point average and results of standard test scores) from Juniata's Health Professions Committee.

Although Juniata has accelerated programs in other friends, this is the first such program for physician training.

The Education Department Announces a New Program in Childhood Education

The nursery school on Juniata's campus has been a tradition here for decades. College students have enjoyed seeing the children at play on the campus playground and have found working with the young children educational, practical and enriching.

Juniata has now structured an expansion of the existing nursery school program into a broader early childhood development. This expansion should help meet the need that exists for trained professionals and non-professionals in the field of early childhood education. There are several reasons why the field is exploding in size: there are more and more women entering the work force and, as we learn more about the learing process that occurs between birth and the age of five, more parents, teachers and other professionals become increasingly aware of the importance of the learning acquired by the young child, a process that begins long before he enters a traditional school structure.

The advantages to a college student's experiencing courses in early childhood education are that they provide alternative career choices in the educational market to elementary and secondary education. Also, such experiences provide an excellent complement to training in the elementary secondary fields as well as in sociology and psychology studies. Thirdly, the experience in the early childhood center is valuable for other fields and provides a supplement for non-professional work with children.

Job opportunities in the field of early childhood education are numerous and include positions in public daycare centers, private kindergardens and nursery schools, home day care centers and Christian academies. State and federal social agencies provide a source for working with pre-school children and parent groups as well as counseling positions.

Juniata's approach to teaching and learning about childhood is a humanistic one. The early childhood center functions not as a babysitting service for working mothers nor merely as pre-school preparation ("reading readiness") for first grade, rather it involves the development of the whole child. More than developing and measuring only the child's cognitive skills, the humanistic approach includes the study of all aspects of the child's growth: the mental, social, physical, and the emotional. (Close attention is given to his stages of development as established by Piaget.) Each of these four areas is related to the other—they overlap and blend so that treating them separately or ignoring one of the areas is to compartmentalize the child's growth patterns. This humanistic approach is an extension of Juniata's growth patterns. This humanistic approach is an extension of Juniata's total approach to the educational process; that teaching and learning are human endeavors and as such, must deal with the whole person. Jessiann Dortch, Demonstrating Teacher of the Early Childhood Center, expresses her objectives for the center in the following way: "When we talk about cirriculum we mean the whole school package. We're interested in the relationships between teacher and child, parent and child, parent and teacher, child and child. Our concern is for the whole growth of the child; whatever enters his environment is relevant."

Consequently, the center will be used by faculty members and students from numerous areas of the college. The center will serve as laboratory and resource center for independent studies and case studies conducted by students, research by psychology classes and methods courses. Primarily the center provides field experience for classes in human growth and development. Students will participate in the centers and aides and as a "think tank" for ideas. They will have opportunieies to help to plan center programs. Prof. Sally Ondrejcak and Ms. Dortch, as program coordinator and as demonstrating teacher respectively for the college students, provide constructive criticism and evaluation of the student's effect on and effectiveness with young children.

The education department is currently in the process of seeking state certification for program approval in Early Childhood Education. When approved, the department will offer a unique certification to Juniata students in Early Childhood that will be especially attractive to those individuals who desire to work with children from birth to age eight in agencies and centers in addition to public schools. It will also be possible for a student to combine a program of emphasis in elementary education and early childhood if that decision is made early in the student's program. Several students who have completed Human Development I and have gained insight in the early childhood field have initiated programs aiming toward early childhood certification. Any student who has an interest in his certification program should contact Ms. Sally S. Ondrejcak, Dr. Howard Crouch, Dr. Thomas W. Woodrow or Ms. Jessiann Dortch for additional information.

FACILITIES

Juniata's on-campus early childhood center fills the lower level of Lesher Hall. Its open, spacious and bright surroundings provide central area for several developmental learning stations for literature, simple math, science, social studies, art and music. There are also areas for dramatic play, gymnastics, and climbing activities, cooking and two outdoor play areas. Of course the center has the facilities of the total college campus at its disposal as well.

Juniata Announces Will Judy Lecture

HUNTINGDON — Dr. Edmund D. Pellegrino, professor of medicine at Yale University and president of the Yale-New Haven Medical Center, will present the annual Will Judy Lecture at Juniata College on Tuesday, Feb. 8.

The lecture, scheduled for 8:15 p.m. in Alumni Hall of the Brumbaugh Science Center, is entitled "Doctor and Patient: Who Holds Moral Authority?"

Established in 1958 by the late Capt. Will Judy of Chicago, the lectureship is "intended to supplement and enrich the academic program of the college." Judy was a 1911 graduate and devoted friend of Juniata.

This year's lecture will be part of a three-day seminar on "Medical Decisions and Human Values." The seminar, co-funded by the Judy Lectureship and the Edith B. Wertz Endowment for Support of Cultural Events, will also include an address by Dr. E. A. Vastyan of the Milton S. Hershey Medical Center of Pennsylvania State University.

Dr. Pellegrino received the B.S. degree summa cum laude from St. John's University, Jamaica, N.Y., in 1941. He earned the M.D. degree from New York University in 1944 and completed his internship and residency in medicine at the Bellevue Hospital and Goldwater Memorial Hospital, respectively. He is also the recipient of seven honorary degrees.

As a physician, Dr. Pellegrino has been associated with the Army-Air Force Regional Hospital in Montgomery, Ala., the Homer Folks Tuberculosis Hospital in Oneonta, N.Y., and the Hunterdon Medical Center in Flemington, N.J. As an educator, he has served the University of Kentucky, the State University of New York at Stony Brook, the University of Tennessee and Yale University.

Dr. Pellegrino is the author of some 200 publications, editorial contributions, articles and reviews in scientific research, medical education and philosophy. He is chairman of the editorial board of the Journal of Medical Education, a member of the editorial board of the Pharos, Journal of Socio-Economic Planning Sciences and Drug Therapy, and editor of the Journal of Medicine and Philosophy.

The lecturer is certified by the American Board of Internal Medicine and is a fellow or member of more than 20 scientific, professional and honorary societies. He is also chairman of the Institute for Human Values in Medicine.

Food Service Begins New System

Juniata's Food Service introduced a new system for handling students who lose or forget their I.D. cards. The system, instituted last week, requires that a student without an I.D. card must obtain a charge slip from the Food Service Office. If he-she presents his card within twenty-four hours the charge will be dropped. Otherwise, it will be sent to the Accounting Office and added to the student's term bill.

Students' reactions to the new system has been varied, but the general feeling is one of displeasure. Students can see no reason for the waste of time and paper for charge slips when the line-checkers know who has and who hasn't a meal sticker.

The truth of the matter, according to Food Service Director Ed Straub, is that the new system is designed to eliminate the practice by the line-checkers of allowing students whom they recognize to go through the line, while demanding that unrecognized students present their I.D. cards. This is a practice that Straub calls discriminatory; the checkers cannot recall every student.

Straub feels that another asset of the new system is that it will force students to get their meal stickers at the beginning of each term. This will enable the Accounting Office to collect payments more quickly. Since a student will be unable to eat without a current sticker he will be forced to pay his bill in order to obtain one.

The Food Service does not think that asking for the presentation of an I.D. card is asking too much of the students. Most other colleges have much more stringent systems than that one of Juniata; Straub said he knows of no school that allows students to eat without some form of identification. He also pointed out that since Juniata students are required to carry their I.D. cards with them at all times that the present system seems to be the best one.

Straub was also questioned concerning the rumors that no more whole fruit will be given out, and that students will only be allowed to take one dessert at a time. He replied by saying that the Food Service runs an unlimited food system. Once students are in the dining hall,

'Roots': Below the Surface

By William Clemens, Jr.

Less than two weeks ago, an unusual but interesting situation occurred on campus. Students left concerts, basketball games and put aside their books to watch Alex Haley's television production of "Roots." Walking down empty halls one could hear students, packed into any room with a TV set, watching impatiently for the next moment of action. Little did these students know they were watching the television production which would outnumber the viewing audience of "Gone With the Wind," and place "Roots" as the number one popular TV production in television history.

"Roots" starred LeVar Burton as Kunta Kinte, a Mandinkan tribesman; Lou Gossett as Fiddler, a slave tutor; O. J. Simpson, an African tribesman (who did more running than acting); and many other stars ranging from Leslie Uggams to Lloyd Bridges. The series of productions lasted eight nights, describing the ancestry of Alex Haley and his saga of an American family. In the first episode the viewer was taken to Africa where the Mandinkan tribe, living in freedom, are threatened with kidnapping by money-hungry white merchants. The story continues as Kunta Kinte, a proud Mandinkan warrior, is forced on a vessel, along with one hundred and fifty other tribesmen, as it sets sail for Annapolis, Maryland. In America they are sold to plantation owners as slaves. Kunta Kinte attempts unsuccessfully to run away, striving to regain his freedom. He is whipped brutally and finally has his foot hatcheted to stop his attempted escapes. Kunta Kinte has a daughter, Kizzy, meaning "stay put," who continues to pass on her African heritage to her son, Chicken George, whose father was Kizzy's master, a white man who assaulted and raped her at age sixteen. Chicken George received his name by raising prime fighting chickens. He puts his ultimate dream of freedom on the line during a chicken fight, loses and goes to England to train chickens for an English aristocrat. Civil war tears the United States apart and life in the South becomes harsh for blacks and whites alike. As the war draws to an end, slave owners become uneasy with the thought of "blacks being free." The townspeople gather to terrorize the newly freed blacks, destroying their homes and crops. Blacks were free, but free from what? Chicken George returns, sets up a plan that outsmarts the townspeople, and moves his family to Tennessee where he raises his family and continues to spread his African heritage to future generations.

"Roots" definitely was an emotional and thought-provoking series. But it does not stop where the series ended, this could more appropriately be termed the beginning. Two hundred years have passed and Americans are still not a united people. "Roots" brought to the surface the fact

Dirty Laundry at Cloisters

By Mark Wiener

If you notice any "Cloisterites" invading your laundry rooms, there's a good reason: they don't have one of their own. It all started last week when someone, probably frustrated that the machines in Cloister which hadn't worked properly since the beginning of the year, (and possessing no respect for school property), looted the coin boxes. "Gordon," the Sherlock Holmes of the green army, masterminded a scheme to catch the culprit. Plain logic dictated to Gordon that the person or persons who "ripped off" the boxes would undoubtedly be the first ones to use the machines the next day. On Sunday, Gordon sneaked in and confiscated the clothes in the dryer for evidence. Of course, the innocent laundry owner was slightly perturbed, and after The Bear convinced Gordon that the laundry could not be used as "exhibit A," the clothes were returned. Since then, however, the machines have been unhooked and unplugged. (They have been occasionally hot wired, but Gordon pulls out a few more wires every time he comes across this.) Well, Cloisterites, you are welcome to come over and use the washers and dryers in Sherwood — that is, if they're working . . .

'The Resident Assistant'

By Gary Lee Baker

Who's the Mcfriendliest one on the hall?
Who's the Mcbossiest one of them all?
Who is the possiest,
The very red rosiest?

The Resident Assistant on your hall, of course. The person you can go to for anything. These chosen few are the authority on the hall. They are the middlemen between student and administration. The R.A.'s job is quite undefinable. You can talk to them about any problems you might have, so that puts them somewhere in the mother, father, chaplin, politician, judge, advisor, plumber, Indian chief, carpenter, policeman, public relations person, doctor, electrician, Scout leader, lawyer, best friend category. Or, you can just hold an ordinary conversation with them.

However, this isn't an article on what an R.A. is. We have all witnessed our own R.A.'s in action. Since a Resident Assistant is in such an active position, I thought "I'll bet they witness some bizarre happenings." I inquired about such happenings and here are extreme cases of what we put our R.A.'s through.

One night during a rowdy party, one R.A. was put into quite a precarious position when a Security Guard caught students in the hall with beer. The Security Guard, in telling the R.A. about the raucous, almost discovered the R.A.'s hometown sweetheart staying over night. Another R.A. was accused of being weird by his-her hallmates. Noticing the accusers still had a Christmas bell hung over their door he-she said, "At least I don't have a bell hanging over my door." The bell ended up hanging over the R.A.'s door and hangs there still.

I received a number of stories about people running around naked. In one incident, naked guys ran outside and jumped in the snow, then ran back in and jumped in the hot shower. Another incident involved naked guys chasing a poor defenseless girl down the hall. And still another time, after a heavy water battle, guys stripped down and slid across the wet floor on their bare behinds.

One R.A. told me of a note he-she found on the room door to contact Dr. Binder, but phoned to discover Dr. Binder never called. He-She said, "It was quite embarrassing." One R.A.'s parents were subjected to a hall prank when they were looking for their son-daughter's room to find every door on the hall with his-

Update: Pot Shop Fire

By Judy Young

The Quonset hut section of the Pot Shop suffered extensive damage in a fire in December, 1976. This area houses the kilns needed to fire the pottery, and, although the kilns are still active, the rest of the Quonset hut is unusable. There was no damage to the central work section of the buildings.

Jack Troy, the Pot Shop instructor, said that the current facilities are sufficient for the usual number of students — about 25 or 30 in regular classes, plus evening classes. He feels that, although the ceramics students are serious about the class, and are working as well as before the fire, the current arrangement is a definite inconvenience.

William Alexander, the Business Manager, discussed the fate of the Quonset hut area. One possibility would be to repair the existing facility. However, "spare parts" for Quonset huts are not the easiest items to obtain, as they are no longer manufactured. Said Mr. Alexander, "It seems more likely that we will take that building down and put up another one." The cost of replacing the hut with a concrete block building with steel rafters and roof would be within $2,000-$4,000 of the cost of repairs. The new building would utilize the same concrete slab the Quonset hut stands on, and would cover the same amount of ground area, housing the existing kilns. There would be no glass front although there would be windows; the total area of the room would be larger, since the roof would not have the tunnel-dome characteristic of the Quonset hut. The new work area would also be much more fire-resistant than the existing one.

In addition to the construction, in the area behind the Quonset hut where theater sets are now stored, there is another old furnace which will probably be repaired.

Although this is the most probable plan for a new building, it is subject to two major delaying problems. The first is that the Quonset hut structure must be removed carefully, so as not to damage the cement base and the kilns; the Business Department is considering bids for demolition. The second delay is — you guessed it — the weather. Because concrete block construction requires a temperature of at least 28°-30° F., construction will have to wait until warmer weather arrives. However, Mr. Alexander believes that the building will be ready for use by next year; there is also a strong possibility that it will be in use before the end of this coming term.

Jack Troy said, "I think it has possibilities for becoming better than it was, although the facilities have been very good for a school this size." He hopes that the planned area, whether through repair or replacement, will allow the pottery classes to learn more about the art form. It would provide students with a place to look at books and slides and be more critical of other works — without worrying about getting clay on expensive study materials.

So, the fire may, in the long run, have been helpful to future Pot Shop students. We would like to thank Bill Alexander and Jack Troy for their time and information on plans for the area.

ALONG MUDDY RUN

By David H. Brown

Juniata — being a small campus — is plagued with rumoritis. This disease afflicts an institution without anyone knowing about its existence and sneaks upon you with pressurized silence. Some of Juniata's best known rumors concern such items as condemnation of Beeghly Library or Founders Hall or the Women's Gym; then there are always the construction rumors such as new sports complexes or a swimming pool . . .

Due to extreme fuel problems and Pennsylvania being in a state of emergency, many rumors started to fly around campus concerning the closing of school, the cancellation of classes for a short period of time, etc. Naturally the list could continue on for who knows how long.

The question is: who starts these rumors, and where do they get some of the ideas for them? Obviously, in the case of the fuel shortage it didn't take too much imagination to come up with a rumor that would be believable. Also, the school's indecisiveness about the whole problem doesn't help matters. Because the school was so indecisive with the fuel shortage, I believe that someone has to take the initiative to make a decision. Therefore, it seems necessary to take the ball and run, so, as of Friday, February 11, 1977 Juniata College, Huntingdon, Pennsylvania will officially close its doors to all students in order to help battle the fuel shortage that is plaguing the state of Pennsylvania and will remain closed until further notice. Students are urged to find a way home as soon as possible and are also reminded that when classes resume, final examinations will be given. Note: none of the above statements are true; it's all a bunch of BS!

Letters to the Editor

The Food Service has come out with a new policy. If you fail to show your meal sticker you must charge your meal. If the Food Service does not see the proof (meal ticket) that you go to Juniata College then the meal is charged to your next bill. I think this new Food Service policy is unfair. Students shouldn't have to pay twice for one meal. If you forget your card you have to go to the Food Service office and have them look your meal ticket number up. After they look your number up they give you a bill for the meal you are about to eat. Your name, recorded in that book, should be proof enough that you've paid for the meal, so why charge?

Technicalities can work two ways. If the Food Service can charge you for meals that you fail to present your card at, then I want a refund for every meal I miss.

I can understand problems with students not presenting their I.D. cards, but charging is an unfair way of going about it.

Gary Lee Baker

I am writing this letter in protest. I am getting quite ticked off at this wanton destruction that is taking place in our dorms. All of us complain about the high cost of education here at Juniata; surely part of that cost is due to the price of maintenance and repairs.

I'm not denying anyone the right to have fun or be rowdy — but seriously folks, THINK before you act. We are all supposed to be of above-average intelligence here. From the behavior in the dorms — who would ever know it???

Another point to this problem is that not only do people wreak havoc and destruction on their own halls, but they take it to other parts of the campus as well. This is the height of disrespect and inconsideration towards the other students. Besides, who ends up paying for the damage? Certainly not those who did it — they remain anonymous!! The innocent victims who live on the hall have to fork over even more money to the school. Some of us really can't afford to pay for these things . . .

All I'm asking is: LOOK at what you're doing!! IS IT WORTH IT???

Radio City: Album Review on Weather Report

By Nathan Wagoner

This was going to be a five album review on Weather Report, one of my favorites, but at the last minute I couldn't find a copy of their first album, Sweetnighter, so I decided to make it a four album review. That should keep me busy anyway. The four albums referred to are, in chronological order of their appearance, I Sing the Body Electric, Mysterious Traveller, Tail Spinnin', and their latest as a band, Black Market.

Weather Report is a jazz band, if you can really call it that. What I mean is, it's jazz, but it's not the kind of jazz one usually thinks of when one hears that name. Jazz to the average layman often implies a sort of semi-incomprehensible music (some call it "noise") composed mostly by egotistic musicians of unapproachable technical skill who try to cram as many notes as possible into their respective solos, which seem to be going on constantly. However, it is really not my duty to explain away the common misunderstandings that surround an entire genre, but rather to convince you that if you're not listening to Weather Report you're missing a lot of fine music.

Weather Report and its principles, Joe Zawinul on keyboards, Wayne Shorter on sax, and Alphonso Johnson (now with the Billy Cobham-George Duke Band) on bass, is more concerned with music first, and jazz second, if you catch my drift. The result is a delicately-structured, harmonious music that is spontaneous without being overbearing. This description certainly holds for the last three albums of the four (and, given a sense of artistic progression, this makes sense; Weather Report moves steadily towards simplicity rather than complication), but it would be misleading to characterize I Sing the Body Electric like that.

I Sing the Body Electric is a weird album; in other words, non-jazz heads stay away! In a way, it could be termed a "concept" album, not that the album is wrapped around one particular concept, but rather one concept pervades the entire album and is also, in varying degrees, carried over to the other three listed (not knowing about Sweetnighter, I'll keep my mouth shut). That concept is the idea of painting musical pictures. What they're really trying to do is, with the help of suggestive titles, Unknown Soldier, The Moors, Crystal, etc., tell musical stories. The listener will find, if he can get past the seeming chaos of sound, that they do it very well, but it is a complicated album and not one to be approached lightly. (i.e. it makes for bad "background music")

For those that are willing to sit down and LISTEN to music and put some real energy into that listening, I recommend it, because you can get a lot out of it; but if you don't take music all that seriously, avoid it, it will most likely offend you.

The personnel is as follows: besides Zawinul and Shorter there are Mirosalv Vitous on bass (Johnson shows up on the next one), Eric Gravatt on drums, the incredible Dom Um Romao, the Brazilian percussionist, and a few incidentals such as Hubert Laws (!) on flute and the amazing Ralph Towner on 12-string guitar.

So much for that album. The next album, Mysterious Traveller, is pure dynamite. It was this album that first got me to like this band, back in the dark days when I didn't like jazz, and anyone who likes music should enjoy it. It is jazz, in that it is basically spontaneous music and it depends on the communication between the musicians to make it work, but at that point the resemblance with "jazz" as a genre ends. The reason for this is that, as a band, they are not afraid to be simple.

Shorter and Zawinul, who do most of the writing, are not so hung up in their technical virtuosity that they feel obligated to shove it down our collective throats, as is so often the case with "good" musicians. American Tango is a masterpiece of inventive simplicity, and Jungle Book, in terms of structure, is little more than a chant, but it's beauty is incontestable. However, lest anyone get the mistaken idea that these people can't get good and funky, try Nubian Sundance or Cucumber Slumber — they should get you moving.

Personnel on this album is basically the same as the last one, with the addition of Ishmael Wilburn and Skip Hadden on some of the drum tracks.

Next in this illustrious lineup is Tail Spinnin', their fourth album. On this one, they have taken their progression one step further, and the music begins more and more to resemble "songs" as opposed to displays. The writers' respective senses for melody are more refined, and the almost orchestral arrangements of the material are tighter and more focused. Man in the Green Shirt is just plain good-time music, and the many, varied cultural backgrounds of the people in the band it becomes universal good time music. Lusitanos (supposedly written about the hill people in Portugal) is, due to the superb bass work of Mr. Johnson among other things, exciting and powerful at once. They also have a sense for musical humor, as is pretty obvious in Between the T highs, which lends a lighter touch to the music. Since, for special reasons, I can't go on writing raves about every song on every album (although I'd like to), I'll confine the rest of my comments about this album to one more number, Five Short Stories. This is basically Zawinul on acoustic piano and Shorter on tenor sax and, well, it's great.

The musical communication between the two of them is nothing short of astounding, and Five Short Stories makes that crystal clear.

Finally we come to their latest, Black Market. In this album they have combined their gift for telling musical stories, as shown in I Sing the Body Electric, with the melodic control developed in the last two albums, so, in a sense, it's a kind of culmination. They use a lot of sounds on this album to get the effects they want, such as crowd noises (speaking some strange language), fireworks, foghorns, etc.; but that in no way interferes with the music — in fact, it adds to it. This album is rich to the point of being ravishing, but at the same time controlled and not overdone. To be honest, all I can really say about it is buy it. Buy them all for that matter; if you love music, you won't regret it.

'Getting To Know You'

By Elizabeth Borton
Thecla Coppolo
Sandra Taylor

"I think I'm making a social contribution that, in some way, I'm making or helping people to be better — and that is important to me."

For those of you who do not already know her, we would like to introduce you to Janet Lewis; a professor of Philosophy, and a woman whose interests and talents distinguish her, quite strikingly, from the common female stereotype so many of us unfortunately possess.

Originally from Scranton, Pennsylvania, she earned her B.A. from Wilson College and her M.A. from Bryn Mawr. Her entrance into the teaching profession, stemmed not from a need to "enlighten" others so to speak, but from her love of philosophy. "I really got into philosophy and I wanted to go on with it, and the only way you can go on with philosophy is to go to graduate school and teach." She came to Juniata from Villanova, after many trials and tribulations, and, like many of us our freshman year, experience immediate cultural shock. "After about a year I really liked it . . . if you live in a big city, coming to Huntingdon — it's really strange 'cause you think, 'Ah, I need this — I'll go downtown and get it' And then you think, 'Oh no you won't — you might go to Harrisburg to get it but you're not gonna get it in Huntingdon!' "

Adjusting to the students that first year presented some problems — problems revolving around a task which confronts every teacher: relating to the people she was teaching. "I was a student in an age which had a great deal of social conscience, there was social responsibility . . . Bryn Mawr was a very liberal campus, this is a very conservative one. I'd start to talk about the war in Viet Nam and I'd suddenly realize that all the students in the class were in favor of the war. And I never heard of that."

Janet's interests are surprisingly non-academic. She enjoys reading detective stories and like most of us gets into television — unlike many of our more learned scholars who see it as a type of intellectual paralysis. "I like to train dogs for obedience in dog shows, and I like to teach people how to train their dogs so their dogs don't go out and bite other people. It's nice to have a hobby like that because the people with whom I associate are not Juniata people — which means that when I go to a party or when I go to a show . . . I'm not having to sit around and talk about the same kind of stuff that I talk about with people every day . . . I'm very simple. I like to go swimming, and I like to hike in the woods, I like all that 'nature stuff' that doesn't take a lot of exertion."

As far as music, Janet listens to both classical and folk: her love of folk music grew out of her student years in the sixties. "The big music in the sixties was not rock-and-roll, it was not hard rock, it was protest music."

Janet's life as she perceives it is valuable and purposeful when she is doing things she wants to do and at the same time enjoying them. "I think I'm making a social contribution that, in some ways, I'm making or helping people to be better — and that is important to me. That is a kind of an obligation I have. I also am very lucky in that I have a job that I really love. And I'm also lucky in that I have something that I like to do outside of my job so that my job isn't my whole life . . . I'd like to hope that just by being here and being a relatively good teacher that I can set a role-model for women to show them that they can be competent in other-than-traditional women's fields — they can argue, they can express their own opinion . . .

"Living day-to-day" capsulizes Janet's attitude on life. She gives an impression of calmness, of control, of harmony with herself and her surroundings — one we'd like to think is contagious.

Juniata succeed in $10-million Campaign

HUNTINGDON, PA. — Juniata College has successfully completed its eight-year, $10.1-million Margin of Difference development campaign, the largest fund-raising effort in the college's 100-year history, it was announced by President Frederick M. Binder.

Initiated on April 19, 1968, under then Juniata president Dr. Calvert N. Ellis, the Margin of Difference (MOD) program concluded with the end of the college's centennial year, 1976. Funds committed totalled $10,155,182.

The program, said Dr. Binder, was designed to provide Juniata with "that 'margin of difference' in the quality of its education without which it could not successfully meet the challenges of the future." Most of the $10-million, he added, was raised during the administration of Dr. John N. Stauffer, 1968-75.

During the first two phases of the MOD program (1968-71 and 1971-73), some $5.3-million were secured for construction of Ellis College Center and for general educational advancement, including increased endowment. The third phase, the Centennial Fund (1973-76), raised more than $4.8-million in preparation for the college's second century.

Attributing the campaign success to "the generosity of Juniata's trustees, alumni, the Church of the Brethren, other friends and especially the Huntingdon community," Dr. Binder pointed out "After more than a year at Juniata, I am still amazed at the selflessness and caring shown by so many persons so often."

He noted that during the MOD campaign, the college's several constituencies also contributed more than $1-million to its first eight Annual Support Funds. These monies, which are added to the current operating budget, bring Juniata's recent eight-year giving total to some $11.2-million.

Dr. Binder also praised a number of MOD campaign leaders, including trustees Cecil E. Loomis of Macungie, honorary chairman for Phase I; Edwin L. Kennedy of New York City, honorary chairman, Phases II & III; and Dr. John C. Baker of Essex Fells, N.J., recently retired chairman of the board.

Loomis is a retired board chairman of the Columbia Gas System, Inc., while Kennedy is a senior partner with Lehman Brothers, a New York investment firm. Baker is president emeritus of Ohio University.

Also singled out were several Centennial Fund chairmen: Charles C. Ellis of New York (general chairman); Joseph R. Good of Hollidaysburg (trustee effort); Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus O. Caulton of Bryn Mawr (alumni); William E. Swigart, Jr. of Huntingdon (Juniata Valley area); Francis W. Zimmerman of North Wales (church); and Atty. Marion D. Patterson of Hollidaysburg (parents).

Attention Juniors and Seniors

With the coming of spring it is time once again for the election of more students into the Juniata College Honor Society. In keeping with the constitution of the Honor Society, it is at this time that we publicly announce that letters of nomination have been sent out. Any senior with a grade point average of 2.25, or junior with a grade point average of 2.50 is eligible for consideration by the Honor Society. Anyone filling these qualifications who has not received notice of his candidacy should contact Lester Himmelreich or Rodney Bednar at Box 418 or 643-6905 to receive the necessary materials for consideration, as soon as possible. If you have any question as to whether or not you are eligible please contact Lester Himmelreich or Rodney Bednar. Remember Juniata does not have a Phi Beta Kappa chapter, the Honor Society is Juniata's only way of recognizing your position and achievement in the college community.

Beating the Winter Term Blues

In the parody issue of last week, in the article, "Study Hazards," you find this statement:

"What can you do during the winter term except study? The weather halts most activities on campus, so, except for the wrestlers and basketball players, we turn into overweight spastics."

That must have been written by one of those fabled students who "live in Beeghly". What ever happened to the intramural programs? And, even without them, the author failed to acknowledge the ingenuity (and desperation) of the Juniata student when it comes to creating new ways to kill time and remain sane.

First, there are the traditional past-times - pillow fights, shaving cream shenanigans, etc. snowball fights to magnitudes never before reached.

Then there are the traditional sports, like hockey (played with genuine equipment) and wrestling, which are modified to be played in a hallway. Other sports, with an added twist, are:

1. Bowling with lamp bases. As those don't tend to roll straight, the challenge is to bowl it fast enough for it to reach the end of the hallway by ricocheting. This can be damaging to your lamp base and hallway walls.

2. Bowling with a shotput. The excitement here is that you're trying to knock down your opponents, and they're trying to get you first. This can be damaging to your body.

3. High-jumping. For this, you need a mattress and broomstick in the hallway. Thrills are added by placing the mattress near a wall phone, so that some of the contestants wipe out before they ever reach the mattress.

4. Hall handball. This is better known as "bombardment". The ball is not played off the wall, but off your opponent's bodies.

Other diversions Juniata students have resorted to are:

1. Getting your entire hallway brainwashed, so that, at the first few notes of Rubber Band Man, they flock from their rooms and begin to Bus-Stop.

2. Racing hamsters in the hallway.

3. Tossing unsuspecting, fully-clothed victims into the gangshowers.

4. Blocking of the gang shower entrances with bed-boards to create a sauna. (If you're in a men's dorm and hear "Sherry Baby", in four-part harmony, coming from the showers, some people have made themselves a sauna.)

5. Cabbage battles. Luckily, these aren't very frequent, as wading knee-deep is very strong-smelling cabbage heads can be downright disgusting.

6. Bogus phone calls. These can be rather illegal, but they have been tried by some people, so they're included in this list so that you can think twice next time you answer the phone and someone asks you for Mortimer Snerd or the Grate Wazoo.

7. Drawing giant caricatures of Juniata personnel on a suitable surface, like a wall. (Actually, there's only one report I've heard of this new form of cave-art, but you'll know if you see it.)

8. Flinch. This is great for your reflexes, guys, but it can be murder for your images.

And then, of course, there is the ever-popular traying. So next time studying gets you down, and "there's nothing going on", don't give up hope.

Death in a Bakery

It was a damp, chilly morning in February. Clouds covered the resettlement area for refugees and light rain fell on Hong Kong. I stepped out of the Catholic Center Bakery to take a breather. I felt good all over with the knowledge that because of our bakery 5,000 school kids were receiving a bun each day at recess period.

As I looked down the shack covered hill and off to the Hong Kong Harbor entrance filled with the colony of boat people floating on Firewood Bay, I thought how different my life had become from what I imagined when I came to Hong Kong as a missionary two years before. I never expected I would be a baker, but when people are hungry, first things first.

A group of workers rushed past me, just catching the 7 a.m. bus. As they reached the street they all looked at a low bush near the road. All of a sudden I noticed that others were also turning to look at the bush as they passed. Driven by curiosity I walked down the steps to the street. Perhaps a dog had been hit by a passing bus. I reached the bush and to my surprise there was a little old man lying under it. He was soaked to the skin. I asked him in Cantonese if he would like my help, and he eagerly accepted. His name was Chan. I tried to stand him upright, but he had no control of his legs. As I picked him up in my arms I became aware that he had no control over any other bodily functions either.

Without realizing any strain, I carried Mr. Chan up the hillside steps to our bakery. A pile of flour sacks served as his bed while I called for an ambulance. Mr. Chan told me that his son had turned him out of their shack three days before, and he could not remember when he had last eaten. Felled by a stroke the previous night, he had managed to crawl under the bush. Shortly before the ambulance arrived, Mr. Chan turned toward me and said, "please tell my son that I forgive him . . . I understand his actions." A few moments later he died. His death was caused by a combination of stroke, exposure, and hunger. The irony was that he died in a bakery on a bed of flour sacks.

When I remember Mr. Chan, I can't help but think of the fact that we in the United States live in a bakery, with people dying of want in it. Isn't it about time we realized that we cannot shut our doors to the needy of the world who are looking with longing into our store window? Poverty and hunger are a reality and we must accept the inevitable fact that we must do with less, so that they can be more.

I'm Ron Saucci.

one helping. By portioning the food the first time around, waste is eliminated. If students want second desserts they may get them. As for the fruit, Straub stated that too much food is being taken from the dining hall. Since $10,000 a year is lost in unavoidable waste, the Food Service does not want to add to the loss with "rip-offs" and thrown-out desserts.

Straub is hoping that these recent developments will be understood by the student body. He stated that if anyone can think of better alternatives the Food Service is willing to listen to them. Until a better system can be developed, it appears that the students will have to tolerate the inconvenience of a charge slip if they forget their I.D. cards.

that much needs to be done on racial relations within our own country. A good place to start is right here on Juniata campus. What does this college really have to offer the individual black? What efforts are being made to show blacks as well as whites that Juniata offers a college experience to everyone? Perhaps this is asking too much for an institution to do, since it is not apparent that American society is willing or able to produce equality of all men. Think about it.

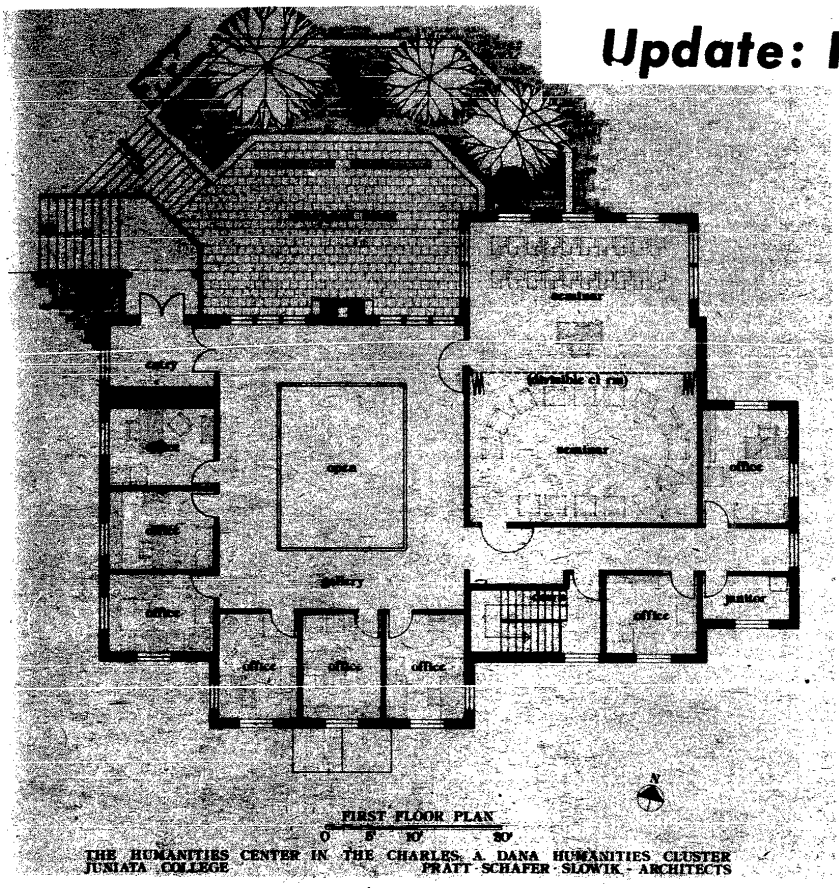
her name on it. Another R.A. was pleased to see a lump of clay splat up against the wall with a humorous face sculpted out of it with his-her name placed underneath.

Those were just specific incidents; they must also suffer commonplace things like messy birthday parties, the making of swimming pools in the shower, wombat fights, shaving cream battles, tennis ball fights, hall hockey and on-the-hall snowball fights.

The Resident Assistant has a very interesting job. And it is the student with wild ideas, a good sense of humor or an unsatisfied mean-streak that makes their job so interesting. Sincerely, thank you, R.A., for all your services!

Update: Humanities Cluster



By Brenda Geiger

Once the Natural Sciences and Social Sciences were properly housed in their new and renovated facilities, a concern was expressed for the Humanities. The construction of a new Humanities structure similar to that of Good Hall was considered. Unfortunately, the cost would be more than $1.25 million and would require an appropriate land site. Both of these are limiting factors.

In March, 1976, Juniata College submitted a proposal to the Dana Foundation. The College was seeking support in the amount of $200,000 for the renovation of the six properties owned by Juniata located on Seventeenth Street between Mifflin and Moore Streets. This proposal also included the possibility of the development of a mall or park area to replace the street. The proposal for closing the street has already been placed before the borough council but, as of yet, no final decision has been made. Some of the goals of this project would be to repair and redecorate the old Carnegie Library (Shoemaker Galleries) for continued use as an art gallery, special events, classroom space, and the housing of the Juniata Museum. The plan also entails the repair and redecoration of the Faculty Club, which is located at the southeastern corner of Moore and Seventeenth Streets, and the renovation of the Manse as an office building and seminar rooms. The same renovation would be done to the I. Harvey Brumbaugh House which is located on the north corner of Mifflin and Seventeenth Streets. The Buildings and Grounds Committee of the College's Board of Trustees approved the demolition of Oller House and the construction of a new building on that site. This construction cost will amount to $355,000, making the total cost of $550,000 for the development of the Humanities Cluster.

In May, the Dana Foundation granted Juniata College $100,000 for this renovation. It was offered as a challenge gift and the College was required to raise a matching amount. This matching has already been completed, providing $200,000 for the renovation. The Humanities Center, to be constructed in Georgian style architecture, costs the remaining $355,000.

The cluster development will house the departments of art, history, foreign languages, philosophy, and English. The Cluster will also offer seminar rooms, small classrooms, and faculty offices. Construction will begin hopefully by the summer of 1977, but no later than 1978.

Food Tray Song

By Teddy "Bear" Williams

Where Have All the Food Trays Gone?

(Sung to the tune of: Where Have All the Flowers Gone?)

Where have all the food trays gone?
Long lines passing.
Where have all the food trays gone?
Long, long time ago.
Where have all the food trays gone?
Slidin' down Roundtop everyone.
When will Ed ever learn, won't Ed ever learn?

Where have all the food trays gone?
It's distressing.
Where have all the food trays gone?
Long, long time ago.
Where have all the food trays gone?
Cracked and broken everyone.
When will Ed ever learn, won't Ed ever learn?

Where have all the food trays gone?
It's depressing.
Where have all the food trays gone?
Long, long time ago.
Where have all the food trays gone?
They'll return in Spring everyone (almost)
When will Ed ever learn, won't Ed ever learn?

'Oh, God, A New American Hero

A well-stocked supermarket, a middle income home in the San Fernando Valley and the glow of California's winter sun are the precisely proper surroundings for John Denver's first film.

His ear-to-ear smile, Dutch-boy haircut and granny glasses are evoking wistful "oohs" all over Los Angeles as Denver plays the assistant manager of a supermarket in "Oh, God," a picture as inevitable for the young singer as the fact that he would become a film star

Friendly and private, he comes and goes on the set with self-effacing ease, and if it weren't for the shiny reflection from his teeth and glasses, one would never suspect him of superstardom and utter professionalism. This time, instead of Frank Sinatra, Joanne Woodward, Doris Day, or another of his previous show-mates, he is teamed with George Burns, two and a half times John's age and surely the biggest octogenarian star in the world.

"Oh, God" is directed by Carl Reiner who knows a humorous situation when he sees one, and is produced for Warner Bros. by Jerry Weintraub, who has put together Denver's hit TV specials, his concerts and his nightclub teaming with Sinatra.

It seems that America has elected John Denver today's — and maybe tomorrow's — hero. The affection with which audiences regard him has come mostly, of course, through the music he writes and sings. His record albums have sold something more than 30,000,000 copies. But his wholesome physical appearance, the aura of joy that surrounds him and his oneness with nature and humanity are surely qualities that endear him to listeners and lookers. This sunshiny aspect has apparently brought audiences a welcome remission from the sordidness of the drug culture and panic of student riots, which characterized the '60's and beyond.

At any rate, John is playing a reasonable, common man in "Oh, God." But unreasonable and uncommon things happen to him as God, in the gruff reassuring presence of George Burns, appears before him and suggests he spread the word that it's about time people get their act together.

John likes the picture, he likes the idea of it and he likes Burns and Reiner. "It's pleasant and comfortable and I think it's going to work," he said. It wouldn't dare not work.

Travel—With a Plus

A Foundation located in Amsterdam is offering a unique service to American Students planning to visit Europe.

Engaged in promoting intercultural contact & understanding, they have a series of Programs to give the kind of experience many travelers are seeking.

Gased on budget travel both Trans-Atlantic and within Europe (they can arrange all the travel details & issue tickets), they add courses in French, German and Spanish, Volunteer Work Projects, Seasonal Jobs, and Tour Programs.

Straight employment openings are limited by the general labor problems and the difficulty in obtaining every temporary work permits, but the Volunteer work projects available in IO countries are highly rated for cultural encounter, language improvement, community experience. They provide free Room & Board.

Travel opportunities around Europe on discount tickets are extensive. Country by country information & planning is provided, along with intelligence for back-packers.

They have opened a downtown Travel & Student Union on one of the main canals where they meet and counsel young travelers. Also their Atlantic budget flights include accommodation & meals for 3 days in Amsterdam for Orientation.

To take part in these programs and benefit from these services, it is necessary to be an annual subscriber, but this only costs $10.00.

You will receive information on all aspects of these programs and services by spending your name & address with 2 International Reply coupons to: INTERCHANGE FOUNDATION, P.O. BOX 5579 AMSTERDAM / HOLLAND.

A Cow in the Where?

University Park (PANS) — Some people take their milk drinking seriously. Seriously enough to take a cow from Penn State's dairy barns, anyway.

About a half a dozen fraternity pledges decided late one night that it would be a hoot to park a cow in the fraternity living room with all of the other trophies. They selected a likeable Holstein from the barns and paraded her around campus.

Just as they passed one of the University's gymnasiums, a campus policeman spotted the pilfered heifer and confiscated her.

The police haven't yet decided what, if any, charges will be filed. We imagine they're stymied as to how they should deal with cow theft. We thought that went out with goldfish swallowing.

The culprits are hoping for leniency. "The cow was just standing around," one of them said. "We were just going to put it in the living room and let the brothers wee it, then put it back. It's just a damn cow."

Indians Win non-League; But Lose in MAC Play

By Scott Pearl

Last week the Indian's Mens Basketball team had a tough traveling schedule — having to play two out of three games on the road during a five-day period. They started out the week with a big revenge win at home, beating Lock Haven 65-57, on Monday. The Bald Eagles defeated the Indians earlier in the season, 66-46. High scorer for the game was sophomore, John Grzesiuk with 17 points and 19 rebounds.

The Indians went on the road next and defeated the Messiah Falcons in a non-league game, 90-84. High scorer for the Indians was junior, Tay Waltenbaugh who had a JC season-high of 41 points. The Indians were forced to play without sophomore Roger Galo, who missed the game due to a foot injury. Although the Indians led by as much as 12 points during the game, they had to turn back a brilliant 44-point performance by the Falcon's Brian Hoyt. The JC game-plan called for conservative inside shooting which accounted for Waltenbaugh making 72 per cent of his shots. The Messiah defense, however, could not contain the awesome Indian offensive attack, so they continued to feed the ball inside to their big-man. Hoyt made his assault differently by sinking most of his shots from 15 to 20 feet out.

The next game was on the road also, as the Indians traveled to take on the University of Scranton Royals in an MAC contest. The Royals, who were the NCAA Division III champions last season, proved their superiority in the MAC by defeating the Indians, 85-59. This was the largest point-margin in any defeat of the Indians so far this season. The Royals are 15 and 4 overall and have won 3 and lost only 1 game in the MAC — to Philadelphia Textile. The Indians couldn't muster the needed offense, as Scranton led from midway through the first half. The Indians did get to within 11 points, however, with about 12 minutes remaining in the game, but the Royals pulled away from that point on, with their largest lead coming at the end of the game. High scorer for the Indians was Roger Galo, who returned to the lineup after his injury, with 16 points.

The Indians, who were in the top ten Division III teams in defense a few weeks ago, have had their points-against average raised about 5 points within the last two weeks — knocking them out of that category. They return home this week with a game Wednesday night against Elizabethtown College and a Saturday night contest with the league-leading and undefeated Rams of Philadelphia Textile College.

Inside Look at JC Athletes

By Mindy Anderson

Wrestling seems to begin at an early age for most wrestlers. Senior Steve Winters is no exception. Steve embarked on his wrestling career in the 7th grade, after being prompted to start by friends.

Steve is not only a member of the JC Matmen, but is also an active member of the Juniata Judo Club, as wrestling is a takeoff from judo. Steve has been actively involved in judo more so than wrestling. He participated on the JC judo squad from his freshman thru junior year, deciding to come out for wrestling in his senior year.

Steve believes that wrestling is both an "individual and a team sport." He supported this statement by adding that you "win twice" — that is the victory achieved by the individual wrestler is also a victory for the team. The consensus among Steve and his fellow wrestlers is, in wrestling "You only get out what you put in."

Steve commented that a good wrestler is characterized by natural ability, the willingness to learn and master the wrestling techniques. Steve also felt that another quality of a good wrestler is the amount of time the athlete is willing to give to the sport.

With regards to the JC squad, Steve stated that this year's team is one of the best JC has seen, composed of a mixture of strong, skilled freshmen and seasoned veterans. The JC Matmen have the necessary ingredient to success: strong team work with a strong player-coach rapport.

Steve feels judo will continue after school because "wrestling usually ends after school."

From Muncy, Pa., Steve also finds enjoyment in camping, when he is away from the mats. Possessing skill in wrestling as well as judo, JC is lucky to have Steve on the mats.

After seven successful starts at home it appears as though the cagers of Juniata are establishing a winning tradition in Memorial Gymnasium. Tay Waltenbaugh, a 6-6 junior-transfer has been an instrumental contributor to this success.

Hailing from Tarentum, Pa., Tay originally chose American University to develop his basketball skills. After about a year and a half of major college competition Tay became somewhat disillusioned and unhappy with the larger school. While in the process of deciding where to transfer to, he remembered an old high school friend Roger Gale, and soon matriculated. Upon further questioning Tay stated that he "likes the people here, they seem to care about the individual and are willing to help you with your problems."

Majoring in Sociology he intends to pursue a career in criminal justice, but that aspiration however, is secondary to his desire to play professional basketball. In reply to the following question concerning his switch from major college ball to Division III ball, Tay remarked, "that there is no difference between big-time basketball and M.A.C. competition." He further stated that essentially making it to the Pors is basically knowing the right people."

Outside the career aspect of the game, Tay believes that "basketball or just athletics in general helps mold the individual in a more social than academic sense, which is also a valuable experience in itself."

Undoubtedly Tay has been an added dimension to the Indians' success in the 1977 campaign. According to Coach Meditch, "he is one of the best players in the league." With four conference games remaining and Tay's scoring production constantly increasing, he should definitely be in contention for the M.A.C. Northern Division MVP award.

Women B'Ballers Drop Two

By Hongo

On Thursday, February 3, the women's basketball team traveled to Franklin and Marshall where they dropped a close game, 47-46. The Indians maintained a tight defense but couldn't seem to get their offense working effectively. The Indians were at a definite height disadvantage with three of F & M's players being over six feet tall. The team saw they could play against a height disadvantage and will be ready to take F & M on again, if need be, at the MAC's. The Indians played very aggressive ball in the last couple of minutes and almost pulled the game out; but the ball wouldn't go in no matter how hard they tried.

Scoring for the Indians were Nancy Zinkham with 13 points. Jan Edgar and Mardie Frye with 12 points apiece. Alison Reeves with 5 and Janet Bechtel with 4.

Saturday, February 5, the Indians attempted to get back on a winning streak by taking on Scranton University at Scranton. Although playing much better ball, they were defeated by the aggressive Royalettes 67-57.

The Indians stayed within 6 points of the Royalettes most of the first half with both teams displaying tight defenses. Going into half-time the Indians were down by 6 points, 28-22. This didn't discourage the Indians, as they came back and tied it up 30-30 early in the second half. The two teams remained very close for some time until the Royalettes broke loose with a 12-point shooting spree. The Indians applied a tight full-court press towards the end of the second half which was good for a number of steals, but it was too late, as time ran out.

Leading the defense was Jan Edgar with 15 rebounds. Mardi Frye played an aggressive game under the boards and accumulated 21 points while Nancy Zinkham followed close behind with 20. Jan Edgar and Janet Bechtel added 8 points apiece. Nancy Zinkham completed 50 per cent of her field goals while Mardi Frye hit 70 per cent from the free-throw line. The team record is now 5-4 with 6 games remaining to be played.

The Indians have four more home games and want your support to help them on to victory.

THE GOOD OLE DAYS

(This article was taken from a Renaissance of Winter, 1970.)

Calamity of the Cafeteria

Reluctant officials of the Mariana Food Service yesterday announced that the once unconfirmed rumors about something being wrong with the food were indeed true. This statement was made after the Pennsylvania Department of Emotional Security, Health, and Inner Peace had issued a report that the bubonic plague was being spread through the food that the cafeteria was serving.

This was the worst calamity to strike the food service at Juniata College since the great "Disaster of '03;" on that black day, not only did several students die of malnutrition while waiting in line, but also Herbie Zukowski, a townie, sneaked in line and ate lunch free.

Federal reaction (the forces of reaction?) has been swift. After President Nixon had declared the cafeteria a disaster area, and the pillars in front of Ellis Hall a fake, Attorney General John Mitchell sent 3,000 F.B.I. agents to infiltrate the cafeteria staff. A committee of prominent political figures, including such well-known authorities as Barry Goldwater, Harold G. Carswell, Charles Percy, Abe Fortas, Mohammud 27X Kenyatta, Timothy Leary, D. Davis, Charles Addams, Nygun C. Ky, the Mormon Tabernacle Choir, and also Vice-President Spiro S. Agnew, will investigate the possible, indeed probable, Communist infiltration of the campus. The infiltration was reputed to have been done by the ultra-Marxist Student Environmental Action Committee. An undisclosed number of the Secret Service and C.I.A. agents have been assigned to gather information for the committee, and 6,000 troops of the battle-hardened Second Division of the Army of the Republic of Viet-Nam are being transferred to Huntingdon in an effort to Vietnamize the struggle. This move has been hailed by critics of the Vietnamese war as "a rational step towards a meaningful, relevant, and peaceful peace in Asia." Troops have been alerted in West Germany for a possible airlift to the strife-torn area. Admiral J. P. "Bull" Nimitz-Halsey, Commander of the Sixth U.S. Fleet in the Mediterranean, has been quoted as saying, ". . . damn the torpedos, we're coming up the Juniata . . ." In addition, units of the Huntingdon Civil Guard are being reactivated and armed with zip guns.

Officials of the State Health Department believe the cause of the dreaded plague to be one of two possibilities:

First, the aforementioned S.E.A.C. somehow sneaked a shipment of suspect meat into the food lines. This meat, of unknown quality or origin, was salvaged from a sunken World War II warship by a Japanese salvage company, carried across the wastes of China by 50,000 coolies, of which 10,000 died and were added to the supply, and thence shipped by sampan to New York.

Or, second, the pancakes served at breakfast (known as the Huntingdon Heavies) could have been infected by the fleas from a stray dog which occasionally wanders into Ellis Hall.

At present, we can only add that all meals have been cancelled until further notice; K-rations are being distributed; a curfew has been announced for all Juniata girls to protect them from the South Vietnamese troops; and the police are stopping all students and requiring them to give loyalty oaths and will continue to do so until martial law has been lifted.

(Note: We do not mean this as a disparagement of the food service. As a matter of fact, we like the food and think it's far better than the stuff we had in high school. It's our hope that this article will merely bring a little mirth and humor to an issue that has been blown out of proportion by everybody. So if this report causes a chuckle or two, and the thought that "things aren't really that bad," we'll consider it a success.)

Are You Liked?

By Dave Robison

Are you the least liked person on your hall? Most people don't have this problem but some do, and don't realize it. If you are not sure here is a list to check and see. You can be sure that you are not liked if:

. . . you come out of your room and see all the other guys from your hall running down the hall with their coats around supper time.

. . . your roomie always locks you out.

. . . your RA won't unlock your door when your roomie locks you out.

. . . the only time anyone goes into your room is to borrow something, or to watch your TV.

. . . you are standing in line for lunch with your friends, and you turn around and they all went in the other line.

. . . you are not invited to hall parties on your own hall.

. . . everyone shuts up when you unexpectedly walk into a room.

. . . your name appears in the center of dart boards.

. . . you ask everyone to get you up at a certain time and no one does.

. . . no one on your hall says "hi" to you when you are not in the dorm.

. . . people beat on your door all the time just for fun.

. . . people order records from TV ads and then send them to you C.O.D.

. . . people put obscene signs on your door.

. . . your sleeves to your shirts are sewn shut.

Now that you know whether or not you are the most hated person, here are some serious suggestions on how to extract yourself from this dubious honor. You can:

. . . move to another floor or dorm.

. . . stop mooching things from hall mates.

. . . don't play your stereo too loudly. (too late or too early)

. . . take a shower at least twice a week.

. . . don't smoke in friends rooms if they don't like it.

. . . stop talking as if you know all about everything.

. . . stop "pricking off" your hallmates.

. . . be willing to lend your hallmates a hand, and not charge them.

. . . wash your clothes more than once a term.

If none of the above work you can always hope for better luck the next year.

Washington Field Trip

By Mark Wiener

Last week the two peace studies classes took a two day field trip to Washington. Among the more interesting lectures and discussions were those at the Egyptian and Israeli Embassies, The Federation of Atomic Scientists, and a tour-discussion at the Pentagon. On the more unusual side, one student's car was stolen, (later found in a tow-away zone and towed away), several of the girls were occasionally propositioned, and a group of students and a prof were followed by a car with two shady characters in it as they walked down a street in Georgetown at night. Unfortunately the classes could not afford to stay for the weekend . . . no telling what may have happened!

New Journal for Career Women

Corporations with revenues totalling more than $30 billion and women managers combine to encourage women's progress: they join to create a new journal for career women.

To help professional women develope in the corporate work environment, a new journal has been founded with aid of the nation's major corporations. Though this journal has been created for a select group, every career woman should have access to it, because it focuses on women and where they spend most of their day-on the job.

The editorial focus of the publication is as practical as it could be. Most of the articles in the coming annual issue are written by successful corporate women and leading academicians. The major objective of the editorial design is to help career women distinguish and cope with the problems uniquely encountered by them. Along with the corporate perspective on women in business, leading authorities in the field address the critical concerns of a career woman: How can she balance career and family life? How should she handle the issue of sexuality in the work setting? How does gender affect her professional career? The journal provides a career woman with life-style role models as well as covers various career options and the entire career planning process.

Further information on this invaluable publication could be obtained by writing to: The Woman MBA, P.O. Box 6722, Stanford, CA 94305.

Rites of Spring

By Elaine Joyce

Spring term begins the final round for the 1976-1977 school year. Center Board has many events planned to help initiate the annual rites of spring.

Center Board begins its spring term with Casino night on March 11th. It will be held in the Old Gym (alias the Women's Gym). The gambling festivities take place in the basement, and dancing (with the infamous "Forces" group) in the upper level of the gym. Admission is $2. The J Club will provide the manpower at the gambling tables.

The following weekend brings Dave Mason to Juniata's campus. Friday, March 18th, Dave Mason will be performing in the Memorial Gym. Jennifer Warren will be warm-up. The concert begins at 8:15 p.m. Admission is $4.75 for students and $6.00 general admission. Tickets are now available at the Information Desk in Ellis College Center. To insure a free outdoor concert later in April or May, Center Board's Concert Committee needs your support for the Dave Mason concert now. The concert promises to be an exciting acoustical rock and roll concert. During the next week WJC will be playing many of Dave Mason's music. Listen to WJC during meals and buy your tickets now.

All Class Night will make its annual appearance April 16th, Saturday night. The theme this year is comedy. All Class Night is an evening of thespian presentation by each of the classes. Each class writes, produces, directs and acts in a play centered around the theme of comedy. The judges are faculty and/or administrators. No one from the classes knows the identity of these judges until after the judging. The competition should prove keen this year as the seniors try to win the All Class Night Bowl for the third year in a row. If the seniors should be successful, they will retire the trophy. Go seniors! (Being a senior I try not to be too biased)

Sometime towards the end of April, Center Board will launch the Raft Regatta. The date has not been set at this time. Stay alert for further details.

May will bring with it May Day Festivities. At this time the Man and Woman of Juniata are elected and the annual breakfast takes place.

These are the major events the Board now has planned for the term. Other activities will occur throughout the term. If you have any suggestions as to what you would like the Board to program this term, attend any of our meetings. We meet Tuesday evenings at 7:00 p.m. Announcements are made during meals regarding the meeting location.

Dancing away the weekend in last weekend's MS marathon. (See related story on page 2.)

The Week

President Jimmy Carter met with Mexican, Puerto Rican, Canadian, and Israeli leaders during the week. Prime Minister Pierre Elliot Trudeau of Canada reported to Congress that he would do everything in his power to keep Quebec from seceding from his country. Carter, in keeping with his policy of human rights, also met with controversial Soviet dissident Vladimir Bukovsky. The Soviet Union is becoming increasingly angry with Carter, saying that his strong accusations on Soviet violations of human rights and his praise of Soviet dissidents is interference in their internal affairs.

Ugandan President Idi Amin closed all borders early in the week, trapping over one hundred Americans in the African country. He later reversed the order. Amin then claimed that the U.S., England and Israel sent 2,600 mercenaries to march through neighboring Kenya with the intention of invading Uganda. Carter refuted the statement.

Melting snow caused flooding and partial collapse of a coal mine in Tower City, Pa. Robert Adely was rescued after being trapped behind a fifty foot wall of coal for nearly five days. Eight other men were trapped.

An earthquake in Romania, measuring 7.2 on the Richter scale, killed an approximated two to three thousand people in Bucharest and surrounding areas.

Despite the backing of Rosalynn Carter the Equal Rights Amendment failed to be ratified in North Carolina.

Students Take Trip to Phila.

By Kathy Jacobs

One of the most valuable learning experiences is to be able to see in real situations, theories and concepts learned in the classroom. This is a prominent feeling of the Business Department at Juniata, and one which prompted a recent week-long field trip. During the past vacation 35 Business students accompanied by Professors Cherry, Wise, Nollau and Bargerstock had the opportunity to visit several companies in the Philadelphia area.

The trip started out with a visit to the King of Prussia shopping mall. Here students did some price comparisons and took note of why certain shops attracted a particular type of customer. The next stop was a visit to Franklin Chemical and Equipment Company. This is a small company run partly by Mr. Clarence Good, father of Randy Good, a member of the senior class. It was interesting to see how a small business is started and how it operates, especially in comparison to the operation of larger companies, which was emphasized during the trip.

At John Wanemakers in Center City, the group was given a tour of the store and was able to see many aspects of retailing in progress. The group then went to Smith, Kline and French, a pharmaceutical company with diverse subsidiary branches. Some students had the opportunity to visit Crozier-Chester Medical Center, a hospital famous for its burn unit. Others went to the Fidelity Bank where they met among others, Dr. Lacy Hunt, a well-known economist. At the Sun Oil company the group met the President, Mr. Theodore Burtis, who gave an interesting perspective of the oil industry.

At the Philadelphia Electric Company the visit included a tour through their impressive computer center and control room, where most of the electricity for the greater Philadelphia area is controlled. The group also went to the Memorex Corporation, a company which almost went bankrupt but was able to survive. This provided a different aspect of the large corporation to the students.

Finally, the trip ended up in Bethlehem with a visit to the Bethlehem Steel Corporation. Everyone was impressed by their facilities and particularly seeing the process of making steel first hand. The trip proved to be very worthwhile in terms of seeing the operations of real organizations in progress, and by being able to talk to the decision makers who run them. As one student summed it up, "The trip was an experience relevant to my studies now, and one which will benefit me in the years to come."

Marijuana Farm Deals Hope

On a five-acre tract at the University of Mississippi at Oxford, the federal government is growing what it is seizing, burning and otherwise destroying wherever it finds it elsewhere in the country — Mexican and Turkish varieties or marijuana.

The illegal weed, grown by the National Institute for Drug Abuse — and described by one institute official as "good stuff" — is used in federally approved marijuana research projects.

In a few weeks, Dr. John C. Merritt, a Howard University Hospital ophthalmologist — a physician who specializes in diseases of the eye — will become one of the nation's few federally sanctioned marijuana distributors.

Over the next two to three years, Merritt will distribute the weed — which is sold illegally for about $35 an ounce — free to 50 persons with severe cases of glaucoma, a serious eye disease, to determine if marijuana will help control the effects of the disease.

The ultimate goal of the marijuana research on glaucoma is the perfection of a "marijuana eye drop," Merritt said.

Most glaucoma sufferers now take drops daily to relieve the pressure in their eyes. A research group at the University of North Carolina has developed an eye drop containing synthetic marijuana and the Medical College of Georgia is testing the drops on rabbits, Merritt said.

ATTENTION SOPHOMORES, tonight, Thursday, March 10, the sophomore class will meet in South lounge to vote on three "All Class Night" scripts. Help will be needed to build props, cast parts, and your ideas would be appreciated.

Some serious volleyball playing took place in last week's Marathon Weekend.

Marathon Weekend

By Judy Lee Young

The twenty-six-hour card-playing, dance, and volleyball marathons for the benefit of multiple sclerosis seems to have been a great success. Many people from the college and the surrounding community, about 200 people in all, participated, either competing for prizes or just having fun for a good cause. In the dance marathon, considered by many (the dancers, at least) to be the hardest to complete, the winners were Patty McElwain and Mike Gibbony. Others completing the dance marathon were Lynne Wiley and Ron Bierwas, Diane Stuart and Dan Cox, and Diane Morrow and Jeff Snyder. The Key Club Volleyball Team won their event, and John Bowser's team won the card-playing division.

The 26 hours went smoothly, except for the expected minor flare-ups about volleyball plays and card deals. The card-playing marathon, a new division just added this year, also caused some commotion on the dance floor, as some dancers seemed to view the announcements for card-playing breaks as not only a bit of a travesty, but part of a conspiracy to remind them of how badly their feet wanted that break. There was also some uncalled-for taunting by a certain D.J. who shall go nameless, but, as a dancer who made it through his shift, I suppose we should sympathize with his having to lose two hours of sleep for nothing but a worthy cause.

When asked how she felt about the marathon being over, Diane Stuart said, "It was a lot of fun, but I'll never do it again!" She did admit that she might change her mind, though. Most of the other participants agreed that they had a lot of fun, regardless of which division they were in. Dave Robison, a volleyball player, said he would definitely be willing to do it again, but added, "I wouldn't do another 26 hours starting now." When asked how she felt about being in the marathon, Kristen Storms, another volleyball player, announced proudly, "I almost learned to serve!" Yes, it does seem that the participants got a lot more out of that 26 hours than sore feet. We hope that as many as possible will try again next year, and will tell their friends what they've been missing.

Exit Gates Locked and Hundreds Die

By TWIG

The headlines could read this way in event of an emergency in the gymnasium. Many times in the past theaters, stores, and public buildings have locked their exit doors to foil people from sneaking into the building. But what they have actually done is set a death trap for anyone caught in the structure during such a calamity as a fire. This has happened in the past and we would be fools not to learn from history. Our gymnasium has limited exits. Leaving after a game is hard enough let alone in a panic with a gym full of people. Yet most all of the exit doors have chains on them so that entrance or exit is impossible. True, with enough force the chains could be snapped but the question is how many people would be crushed in the process.

Obviously the doors need to be open for exit. Leaving the chains off and appointing one person per side, they could easily guard against unwanted entrances from the outside. This simple service could eliminate the inconvenience of leaving the gym and act as a safety measure. Being that the gymnasium is old and susceptible to the failings of an old building, we should take every precaution to ensure the safety of the public which uses it. This general welfare could be greatly enhanced if the exit gates were opened during major events.

Center Board Minutes

By Gary Lee Baker

Center Board has come forth with good entertainment for the spring term.

Dave Mason will appear here in the Juniata College Memorial Gym Friday, March 18, 1977. The show is costing $12,000.00 and Center Board will break even only with a sell-out crowd.

The Juniata College Raft Regatta is tentatively scheduled for April 30. There are also plans being made for a car rally after our vacation in April.

Ideas for an all day outing were also brought up: A "Festival of Life" day during which students could listen to an all day concert; also Raystown Dam day.

Center Board has had $500.00 donated to them for movies. The movies will be picked by Center Board with one senator sitting in.

Letters to the Editor

Being a resident of Sherwood, I would like to expose to the rest of the population at Juniata one of the luxuries of living in Sherwood, our lounge. There is no furniture in our lounge, but of course we like it that way. Besides, due to the abundant heat supply and absence of sunlight the furniture would probably dry rot anyway. It would be nice to have furnishings, curtains and such luxuries of home, but it has been said that we like it this way. Not true.

SHERWOOD

The Student Business Organization put on some good movies last week. I'm glad to see someone knows how to pick the good ones.

Ark to be Built in Huntingdon

By Barbara Frezza

Ah, yes. The winds of Spring are wafting through the bare branches of the trees. To worried townspeople, they signify the potential loss of Huntingdon to the whims of the Juniata River during a rainstorm. There is one townie, though, who is not at all worried by the possibility of Spring flooding.

Crazy Lonnie is planning to escape the ravages of an impending flood by building an ark. Yep, he's building an honest-to-God ark smack in the middle of his back yard. Lonnie had sent away to a shipbuilding firm in Chicago for the plans to build his ark. This particular firm couldn't supply Lonnie with the plans for an ark, but they did provide him with the blueprints for a 100 foot Viking warship, instead. Lonnie still isn't sure how he's going to be able to work all of the oars at once, but the dragon's head on the bow fascinated him; so he decided to use the plans for the Viking craft, anyhow.

Lonnie is doing everything by the Book, too. Right now, he's in the process of collecting two of every kind of animal. He already has two each of dogs, cats, horses, goats, pigs, etc. He did have two hamsters, but he forgot to separate them. He now has 26 of them, and isn't quite sure which were the original two. Lonnie also has seven pairs each of parakeets, budgies and canaries, and fourteen pigeons have taken up residence on the oar-locks. The boat looks, sounds and smells like the pet center of a Murphy's Mart. Lonnie plans to improve upon Noah by stepping on the pair of ants and cockroaches sometime when the vessel is afloat; but the pair of termites is already holed-up on board somewhere between the mast and the devil. Lonnie also plans to take two cows, as he drinks lots of milk; but he's having a hard time finding a male and female mule.

Lonnie had asked his family to join him, but for reasons which he has not as yet figured out, they declined his invitation. Rather than face the prospect of 40 days and 40 nights alone on a boatful of animals, Lonnie has decided to take along 14 fun-loving females. To keep things kosher, they've been included on his list as "7 pairs of chicks." In his preparation for the inevitable, Lonnie is also taking along 40 quarter-kegs of beer, loads of munchies and plenty of Zip-lock Baggies filled with "weed." As directed, he's also taking enough grain to feed the animals; although he was never aware that it was possible to keep animals alive on grain alcohol.

Lonnie may be crazy, but he is prepared. And he's sure that after the rest of Huntingdon has been washed away, his "ark" shall come to rest on the top of Tussey Mountain when the waters recede; sometime in late April or early May. Lonnie has no definite plans for the foreseeable future. He did mention, however, that Sahib Productions of Turkey have already made a bid for the film rights to his story; to be called, appropriately enough: Lonnie's Ark.

Question and Answer

By Mark Wiener

Dear Q: A:

I would like to know why I and others like me were not warned before the first day of class that the Basic Foundations of Education course was not a VCU as it was listed in the Spring schedule. That's what I was taking the course for, as a VCU, and now that it isn't, it has screwed up my whole term.

— Angry Student

Dear A.S.:

I went to see Professor Crouch, who told me that the Basic Foundation course was never a VCU, (he showed me last fall's listing where it was not offered as one), nor was it ever designed as one. A couple years ago, a basic education course called Purpose and Structure of American Education Institution was a VCU, but it ended in 1975, and this course took its place, but not as a VCU. He thought that the listing was a mistake by the Registrar.

Mr. Nolan sang a different tune at first. He thought that Dr. Crouch had designed and listed the course particularly as a Value Centered course. He seemed less confident to pass the buck when I told him that it wasn't listed as a VCU in the Fall.

Regardless who's to blame, it makes one wonder just how much the College values Value Centered Units, if the title can be accidentally slapped on a course not suited to a) "Raise the question of values explicitly;" and b) "require the student to grapple with the origins or meanings or criteria for the values under study." (Pathfinder definition.)

picture by Jerry Keenan

Senior Bob Cunion wrestles impressively for Juniata.

picture by Jerry Keenan

Senior Scott Simmons entered MAC's seeded number one in his weight class.

By Mindy Anderson

Senior salute continues with wrestler Bob Cunnion. The popularity of wrestling in the Williamsport, Pa. area is what prompted Bob to go out. His liking of the sport grew from seventh grade thru high school. As he continued he found it more enjoyable, learned new techniques enjoying the competition.

A change occurred upon coming to college — Bob played football for J.C. for three years before deciding he "missed the participation" derived from wrestling.

Bob views wrestling as a good sport in that it incorporates determination, ability and "personal contribution" to a team. Proud to be a member of this year's squad Bob also found the "freshman strong, general positive attitude towards the sport and a good coach." Encouragement from Coach Berrier to come out. As the team's "extra man" — the one to lose or gain weight to fill in, Bob started late in the season, achieved an impressive 6-2 record. At MAC's Bob stated "I wrestled disappointingly." He offered no backup statement saying "I'm not making excuses."

A product of Loyalsock High School, Bob hopes to go into "ground level" personal management and then "move-up." A senior with personality, good technique and agility, Bob will be missed by many.

Almost every sport played anywhere, has a senior among its midst. Juniata teams are no exception. The matmen of J.C. boast of seniors in captain, Scott Simmons, Bob Cunnion and Steve Shultis.

From the town of Churchville, Pa. comes Juniata's Scott Simmons. Wrestling became second knowledge during high school. Prompted at the urgings of coaches and friends, Scott followed the sport through until college. Scott stated, "wrestling just grew on me."

Talking with Scott on the topic of wrestling here at Juniata, he feels that this year's squad "is the best since I was a freshman." Scott is proud to be a part of a team with strong talent, adept wrestlers and five season wins under its belt. Scott commented that "Juniata will be top-notch in a few years, and I wish I had a couple more years."

As team captain, Scott maintained a strong squad functioning as a "unit" as well as allowing the individualism of one-on-one competition. In terms of practice the atmosphere was "loose" with the individual wrestler working to make himself the best wrestler possible. Scott showed what a fine wrestler he is, leading the team with an admirable record of 15-5 on the dual season. Entering the MAC's, Scott was seeded number one in his weight class. During the competition of MAC's, a few bad breaks occurred with Scott commenting "the events just happened."

Scott's wrestling abilities and strong personality will be missed by the returning J. C. Matmen. After graduation plans include working as a researcher in the Philadelphia area, and seeking a Masters in Marketing.

Another senior deserving recognition is Steve Shultis. The wrestler in the 177 weight class hails from Conestoga High School in Devon, Pa. A strong, consistent wrestler, Steve contributed to the successful 1976-1977 campaign. Majoring in political science, Steve plans to join the Marines, to become an officer after graduation.

JC Matmen: Best Season

By Mindy Anderson

As every sport winds up its season coaches, players and spectators begin to evaluate their efforts and strive for newer goals in the oncoming season.

Coach Berrier, now involved with the onslaught of eager baseball players gave me his comments on the 1976-77 wrestling season.

The Juniata Matmen achieved their "best season since 1968." They succeeded in winning five matches, with two breaks they would have had a winning season. Nonetheless, the victories they achieved were sweet and prove that Juniata is an up-and-coming wrestling stronghold.

Impressive wrestlers for the season encompass almost the entire squad. Scott Simmons completing a 15-5 record, and another senior Bob Cunnion chalking up a 6-2 record starting late in the season.

In terms of the MAC's, Juniata found the limelight for a while in wrestlers Randy Leopold, who had a chance of being champion in his weight class. Teammates Joe Paskill and Todd Roadman proved they are "better than average" with strong futures ahead.

Next year, the squad can boast six returning starters while other schools in the area will be losing roughly the same number. The team will have a "strong nucleus" with valuable experience under their belts. A new change for next year is that most of the matches will be on home mats.

The Matmen of Juniata's 1976-77 squad should be proud of their achievements. With determined, agile wrestlers Juniata may prove to be a formidable opponent in the future.

The Week

A black gunman in Ohio with a "hang-up about white people," held a white police captain hostage for nearly 44 hours. He released his hostage only after President Carter agreed to hear his grievances. Carter stated that he realized that he was setting a "dangerous precedent."

Gunmen of the Hanafi Moslem sect held over 100 people hostage in the B'nai B'rith Jewish Center, Islamic Center and Washington District Building in Washington, D.C. They demanded that the movie "Mohammed: Messenger of God," be banned from the U.S. for its blasphemous references to their God, Allah. They also demanded that 6 men convicted in 1973 killing of 7 Hanafi Muslems be sent to them for execution. All national monuments were closed, and security forces greatly increased in the city. The two-day seige ended when ambassadors from Egypt, Pakistan, and Iran persuaded the gunmen to release their hostages in exchange for freedom without bail for the Hanafi leader.

The controversial House Assassination Committee stated that they had unsubstantiated evidence that others had prior knowledge about the assassination of John F. Kennedy, and that James Earl Ray may not have acted alone in the slaying of Civil Rights leader Martin Luther King, Jr.

At the world's first Afro-Arab summit, Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat and Jordan's King Hussein were reconciled after many years of bitterness. Both agreed that any territory given up by Israel would go to Jordan, where previously the Palestinians had demanded some territory.

The Food and Drug Administration has banned the use of the artificial sweetener, saccharin, because it was found to have caused cancer in laboratory mice. Several experts have denounced the ban, and an appeal may be upcoming.

Why is TM so Popular?

By Andrew S. Bargerstock, Teacher of the TM Program

The answer: it is effective and easy! On Wednesday, March 23 at 8 p.m. at my home, 1925 Moore Street, Apt. 2, I shall provide an introductory lecture on the TM program for those interested in learning more about a very practical way of improving all aspects of individual and social life. That the TM program is so holistic in scope is a fairly bold statement, but one which is supported by the direct experience of hundreds of thousands of regular meditators and verified by numerous scientific experiments. Yet, even though so much has been written about this subject in recent years, it is amazing to find that so many people still have misconceptions about the technique of meditation offered by the program through the International Meditation Society, a federally approved non-profit educational organization. Perhaps, the world "meditation" conjures up esoteric images in the mind.

My experience in teaching meditation has been that 95-100% of the preconceived notions which people have about the of Transcendental Meditation program are not appropriate. It is not a philosophy, religion, special way of dressing or eating. Neither does it involve any form of self-hypnosis, concentration, or contemplation. Then, what is it? Actually, what we have here is a simple, effortless mental technique (practiced 15-20 minutes twice a day) which provides a profound level of rest physiologically and allows for the spontaneous expansion of awareness.

These two qualities of the meditation deserve some analysis because they are responsible for the very practical benefits that become self-evident with regular meditation. In about the fifth or sixth hour of sleep, the human metabolic rate (as measured by oxygen consumption) normally drops an average of 8%. This is the deepest level of rest that most humans have ever experienced— although the word "experienced" is really not applicable to such a flat state of awareness as sleep. During the first couple of minutes of a period of the Transcendental Meditation technique, the metabolic rate drops an average of 16% and stays at that level throughout the period of meditation. Remarkably, the subjective experience of the meditator is one of inner wakefulness. Why? Utilizing the natural tendency of the mind which the mind motivated by its own nature seeks its source which is an unbounded field of pure creative intelligence.

As the mind settles down, awareness becomes less localized, more expanded, yet remaining alert. The body is in intimate relationship with the mind also settles down resulting in a profound level of rest which has a revitalizing effect on the entire nervous system.

Some of this expansion of awareness and revitalization of the nervous system carries over into our activity. With regular meditation the improvements in daily life become more striking. More energy, more clarity of mind, and improved social behavior are among the benefits which one could expect to receive. The entire program is very pragmatic and well-suited for the practical people who want to be successful and dynamic. It is in the field of activity that we want to live in fulfillment. That is why so many distinguished people, such as professional athletes, congressmen, business executives, housewives, doctors, lawyers, teachers, and students, have started the TM program.

'V' for Vanished

An "A" is still the highest mark, but there is a new grade being given at Metropolitan Community Colleges. A "V" means the student has "vanished".

Is there really a problem of students vanishing? College officials thing there may be and they intend to find out for sure.

When no-fail grading was in vogue three years ago, Metropolitan, a four-campus system of colleges in Kansas City, Mo., initiated a non-punitive grade policy. No failing grades are given, only a "W" which means the student has withdrawn. All students who, whatever the reason, didn't complete the course successfully were lumped into this category. And that included those who vanished.

"We discovered that about 30% of all grades were "W" and we began to suspect that som students might be exploiting the non-punitive system," says Dr. Sue Duitt, Metropolitan's director of education development. "They possibly were enrol ling, receiving funding from some agency, then being non-conscientious about their class work." Like vanishing.

So a computer study is now being made to see how many of the students receiving non-punitive "W's" withdraw for legitimate reasons, how many flunked, and how many simply vanished.

CHET Performances

Juniata student Richard Kraus and Professor Bruce Davis are currently appearing in "After Margritte" at the Carriage House Experimental Theatre (CHET).

"After Margritte" is a surrealist mystery in which Kraus portrays a young police officer, and Davis has the lead role as Reginald Harris. The play was written by Tom Stoppard.

Tickets for the March 17-19th performances can be purchased at CHET (317 Penn Street), or by contacting Professor Hofelt. The student rate is $3.

Radio City: The Last Record Album

By Nathan Wagoner

I am not reviewing The Last Record Album by Little Feat because it's a new album. It is not a new album, it came out sometime in mid '75, but it is a good album and one that not too many people have heard of. At least I thought that it was a good album (that's what I had been told), but It's really more like a good first side with one good song on the second side. Even so, the first side is good enough that I would say it's worth buying, and the band is most definitely worth watching (but then I've been saying that about Little Feat for almost two years now).

They have very good people, a keyboards player with jazz chops, a tasteful rock guitarist, etc., etc., but it's really their approach that makes them interesting. They play a peculiar mixture of rock, country, and funk (not disco, there is a difference!) with a few jazzy changes thrown in every now and then for a little spice. They're a tough band to categorize, which is good, I suppose.

Getting back to their approach, the music on this record is very rhythm oriented, and the rhythms they use are very original. If you haven't heard the band, I doubt that you've heard anything quite like it, but that is their weakness as well as their strong point. On the second side of the album, the music degenerates into rhythmic incoherence, losing the lyrics and the melody.

It was a nice try though (I can forgive musical failure in search of originality) and the first side is still great. Romance Dance and All That You Dream are two really good rock and roll songs, although I'm not at all sure that that label really applies here. They don't say who does the lead vocals, and I don't know the band all that well, but whoever he is, he's got a fantastic voice for it. On these two the rhythms are really tight and well put together, and the guitar and key boards work really cooks, not to mention the bass in All That You Dream. (This may be a trite comment, but this side kinda reminds me of old Jo Jo Gunn, if anyone still remembers them.)

The next tune is Long Distance Love, a slower love song, but even here they've managed to carry over their rhythmic originality, and in a slow song, doing that tastefully is no small feat (no little feat?). I have to wonder about this line, though: "You know her toes were so pretty...", Oh, well. Day or Night is the last song on this side, and this is good funky rock. They also unleash their drummer for a minute, and that's always nice for a change.

I believe I did mention an exception on the second side, and One Love Stand is it. This is good tune, but the rest of this side just doesn't make much sense. The verses and the choruses all run together, there isn't any definite structure to the songs outside of trying to make them as funky as possible (which they do), but using as many instruments (two pianos, two or more guitars, synthesizer, bass, drums) as they do, with two or three voices on top of that, it just doesn't make it.

Just for my amusement's sake, I'm going to toss in a quickie on Manfred Mann's new record, The Roaring Silence. It's OK. That's about it. The single, Blinded By the Light (a Bruce Springsteen original) is pretty good and there are a few other highlights such as Singing the Dolphin Through, The Road to Babylon, and This Side of Paradise, (although I take objection to the use of the choir in the chorus of On the Road to Babylon,) but the rest of it is pretty uninspired and uninspiring stuff. It's nice enough music, but Manfred tries to cover up rather boring melodies with lots of fancy vocal and synthesizer tricks, and in this reporters opinion, it's somewhat dissapointing.

Sorry folks, I realize this isn't the best article I ever wrote, but what the hell can you write at nine o'clock on Sunday morning?

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor,

After over six months of writing critical articles on the Juniata Senate, I have come to realize that it has served no purpose. I failed to get students interested in what their elected representatives were doing. I also failed in getting the Senators to respond to my criticisms and inform the students directly about the proposals of the Senate. I therefore reluctantly resign my column, "From the Gallery."

Several students did attend the last Senate meeting to question their Senators, and I thus feel it was the most signifi cant Senate meeting of the year. I found the Senators receptive to the student input. In response to my complaints, the Senators agreed to take a closer look into the use of the media to better their Senate-student relations.

I wish to thank those Senators and friends who privately encouraged me to keep up my critical reporting, and who helped me tremendously throughout the year. To the entire Senate, I would like to remind them that is now up to the Senate to inform those who elected them. I hope that they do not let us down.

Nancy J. Rowe

By Dave Brown

March seventeenth holds a special meaning to many people throughout the world, and some of those people are among us here at Juniata. Obviously, what I am talking about is St. Patrick's Day, a great day for those who celebrate.

This festive day is celebrated to numerous degrees; probably the greatest celebration that takes place in the United States is in the city of New York, where the streets are painted green and a large parade is staged. Huntingdon even gets into the action, for those who wish to celebrate this day, and from past experience a lot of students here do celebrate St. Pat's Day, (Kelley's Bar always has green beer on tap)! A different twist is entering the picture in Altoona—a baker is going to make green bagels. I'm not quite sure what a toasted green bagel would look like, but it would have to be great, because there is nothing bad about March 17th, everything is great!

Probably the greatest thing about St. Patrick's Day is the fact that the Irish people are probably the best party people and they are not possesive of their holiday—everyone can get in on the action and have a good time. Maybe others could learn from their example.

The question that enters my mind is, what can Juniata do to celebrate St. Patrick's Day? I thought of something obvious with the food service, but the food is already green. That leaves it up to the administration; the best they could do would be to sent out a green memorandum cancelling all classes, as a matter of fact that wouldn't be a bad idea! Well, let's all help Kelley's kick their kegs, so they don't have green beer for the next two months.

Rec Jobs Available

An estimated 12,000 summer job opportunities at summer camps will be available for college students for the summer of 1977. There are numerous camps for children of all ages located throughout the entire nation. The heaviest concentration of summer camps are in mountainous and recreational areas.

Summer job opportunities include counselors, swimming instructors, riding instructors, cooks and helpers and general maintenance. In most opportunities these jobs include board and room. In many cases summer camp employment for college students will also provide additional credits.

Student job seekers are encouraged to apply early. Over 30,000 additional job opportunities for summer employment exit at national parks, guest resorts and recreational areas. Students interested in obtaining additional details on student assistance may request a free brochure by sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Opportunity Research, Department SJO, Lock Box 4000, Kalispell, MT 59901.

Animals Predict Earthquakes

Chimpanzees may be able to help humans predict earthquakes, because they seem to become abnormally restless when tremors are on the way, scientists say.

"We believe we have the first scientific evidence there are behavior changes that precede earthquakes," a group of researchers from the Stanford University School of Medicine said Sunday. They addressed a meeting sponsored by the U.S. Geological Survey.

"But to prove it conclusively, we will have to predict the next earthquake," the scientists added.

Watching animals for hints of earthquakes is not a new idea. Chinese scientists reported that abnormal livestock behavior was noted before a major quake struck the city of Haicheng this year.

Dr. Helena C. Kraemer, associate professor of biostatistics, said the possible connection between chimps and earthquakes first emerged when she was conducting a study of chimps at the school's Outdoor Primate Facility — which is adjacent to the San Andreas Fault.

She said observers at the facility noticed "intriguing behavorial changes" among the chimpanzees prior to a series of minor earthquakes last June.

Bruce Hirsch: Juniata's Own Music Man

GETTING TO KNOW YOU
By Elizabeth Borton, Thecla Coppolo, and Sandra Taylor

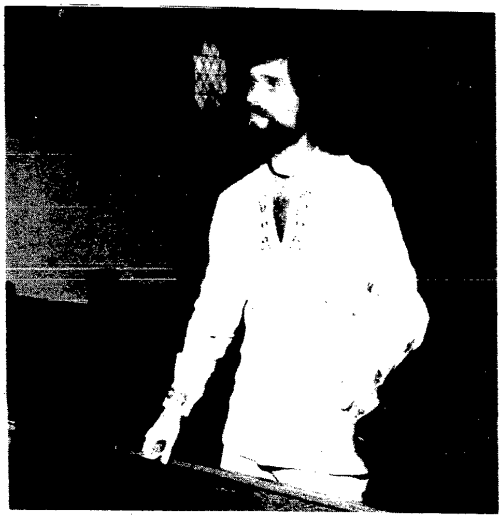
We would like to introduce you to Dr. Bruce A. Hirsch, Professor of Music and director of the Juniata College Choir. Born in a small Nebraska town, he grew up with athletics — not music — as his prime interest. It was at the University of Nebraska at Omaha, where he had been a radio and television speech major for two years, that Dr. Hirsch was greatly influenced by a dynamic choir director. This meeting resulted in his transfer to Westminster Choir College in Princeton, New Jersey, as a music major, where he received his B.A. and M.A. As a member of the Westminster Choir, he traveled around the world visiting more than twenty-five countries. The experiences encountered on this tour affected him in many ways, leaving the desire to one day return again, still very much alive today. His education at Westminster included many performances with major orchestras such as the New York Philharmonic and the Boston Symphony.

After earning his M.A., Dr. Hirsch headed west to begin doctoral studies. With this move came an important exposure to the music of the West coast, which when fused with the music of the East, provided him with a great variety in the presentation of music. Moving from the West, with its abundance of opera workshops, theater, and other cultural activities, to Huntingdon, was a cultural shock for both he and his wife. "We felt like we were creating our own culture when we got here because there just wasn't that much going on. We finally adjusted however, and have found that this has been a very pleasurable time, and I suppose if we were asked if we'd like to return to a metropolitan city today to work, we would say 'no'."

Dr. Hirsch, not unlike other musicians or performers, finds himself always looking ahead to the next concert, or the next recital, which he is planning. "I don't know if this relates to other professions in the area of teaching... but we sort of keep our blood flowing because of the next goal we're planning, and if we didn't have those things we'd probably wither and die, like a vine."

His main interests today center in music, although the athletics of his youth are still very present — especially in the summer. "I'm involved in baseball all summer, from the time late April rolls around, the baton is replaced by the baseball bat." He directs a church choir and is also involved with the Boy Scouts. "I like to put things together and see them fit and see them balanced...I like to build things out of wood...There was a period in my life where I liked to make hooked rugs...A hobby that I would love to take up again is flying. I used to fly and started lessons when I was in school at Princeton and got my license and flew until I ran out of money...I found that to be very relaxing."

Dr. Hirsch sees music as offering a rich opportunity for personal injoyment and satisfaction to the Juniata student. One of the plusses is certainly in the fact that "as a pre-med major and pre-law or an education major, that they can be a part of an ensemble, instrumental or choral, that is performing whereas if you go to a large school you're in competition with all of these professionally-oriented music students and you can never get into it." Music often tends to be therapeutic and Dr. Hirsch has watched its effects on many students he has worked with.



Bruce Hirsch: Juniata's Own Music Man.

Even a perfectionist, he is always striving to do better and it is this striving which often becomes a source of frustration. "I guess a goal would be that I could be alert to the fact that I need to be satisfied much more of the time."

When presented with the fantasy of an ideal job apart from music Dr. Hirsch replied: "I'm in this business because I enjoy watching people have pleasure...I suppose if there were another job I would like to do, I'd like to be a physician— if you can help someone be well. I've always been interested in the idea of healing." The vital spark of his life is provided by his family. "I need them to help support me so I week their company and love." His life is further enriched by the interaction he enjoys with members of his choirs and he explains, "I fall in love with members of my choir and ensembles. The main thing that gives me pleasure very often is to show a stu dent that they can do about ten times better than they think they can do."

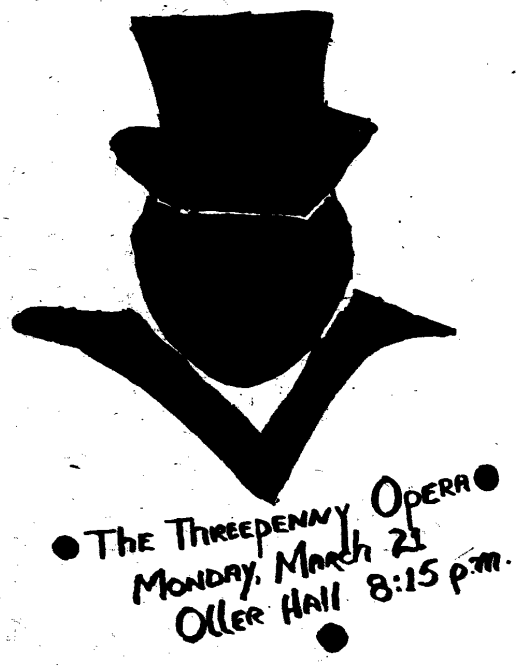
After speaking with Dr. Hirsh, it is easy to see why with just a subtle movement of his arm, he can command such control over 64 individuals on a stage. He is a man of such sensitivity and depth that through his interpretation of music both the audience and the performers simultaneously participate and enjoy in an entertaining experience. This spring Dr. Hirsch is tackling the Rogers and Hammerstein production of OKLAHOMA. We would like to wish Dr. and Mrs. Hirsch and all those involved in his admirable undertaking, the very best luck. OKLAHOMA will be presented on the evenings of May 20 and 21 in Oller Hall — hope to see you there.

Old Mackie's Back!

Some have labeled it "a classic"; others have called it "a theatrical legend." Most agree that it is a piece without comparison — and now it is your chance to discover why. On Monday evening, March 21, the Juniata College Artist Series will present the New Shakespeare Company's production of "The Threepenny Opera" in Oller Hall at 8:15 p.m. Written and first produced by Berthold Brecht and Kurt Weill in Germany in 1928, the play was adapted for the American stage by Marc Blitzstein. This off-stage version was first presented on March 10, 1954 at the Theatre de Lys in Greenwich Village, where it gained the acclaim of New York Critics.

The Threepenny Opera centers on the complications of living the life of a robber in Victorian London — especially when that robber is Macheath by name. The play presents a highly satirical (often savagely so) look at the inequalities of society during the gaslight era. Although light and humourous on the surface, the work provides insight into the overwhelming bitterness which prevailed in the lower classes in late nineteenth-century England.

The New Shakespeare Company, possessing a reputation for deft, professional productions of all its repertory, promises that its presentation of this twentieth-century work will be no exception. Admission to the performance will be Artist Series Ticket; non-ticket holders may purchase them at the door on Monday for $5.00. Come and find out exactly what "Mack the Knife" is all about!



Summer School

The 1977 summer session of the Grindstone School for Peace Research, Education & Action will be held on Grindstone Island (50 miles SW of Ottawa) from July 30th to August 19th. The School offers students, teachers and activists an intensive course on major social justice issues with a special embhasis on working toward solutions through academic research, public education and community organizing. For more information and application forms, write: Coordinator A, Grindstone School, 562 Johnson St., Kingston, Ontario, Canada; or phone (613) 549-4129. DAVE MASON

BIOGRAPHY FROM COLUMBIA RECORDS
DAVE MASON

Born in Worcester, England on May 10, 1946, Dave Mason took up the guitar at age 14 with great diligence, his main early influences being the blues in general and Elmore James in specific. Eventually, he formed his first group, The Jaguars. His next band, The Hellions, included Jim Capaldi, Gordon Jackson and Luther Grosvenor. They gained a local reputation, and played Hamburg's Star Club among other venues.

Dave's first professional experience was as a roadie for the Spencer Davis Group. In between turning guitars and changing strings, Dave would grab a few jams with the then boy-wonder Stevie Winwood. He even participated on the "I'm A Man" session—playing tamborine. Two other musicians also made cameo appearances in the beefed-up rhythm section of that session, those three along with Stevie Winwood, scheduled themsel ves in a Berkshire cottage to create Traffic. At the outset, Dave was a integral force in the band. Traffic's first bona fide hit— reaching number two on the british charts — was Mason's composition "Hole In My Shoe." On their first album, Dear Mr. Fantasy, Dave's whimsical melodies and good-time vocals privided a delightful contrast to Winwood's contributions, and the dichotomy between the two helped make Traffic's early recordings very diverse and energetic. Dave's material for the group's second LP, simply entitled Traffic, showed greter maturity and depth than any of his previous works. One of the Mason's songs on that album, "Feelin' Allright," has become a classic, having become a million seller for Joe Cocker and a hit for Grand Funk Railroad and Three Dog Night as well as Traffic.

By the time Traffic was released, however, Mason had already decided to leave the group in order to pursue a solo career. For the next year and a half, Mason wrote material for an upcoming album and managed to involve himself in several interesting projects along the way. He produced Family's First album, Music In A Doll's House, a classic which was musically and technically ahead of its time. Later, around the middle of 1969, Mason joined the Delaney & Bonnie and friends tour with Eric Clayton. By the end of that year, Mason was ready to record his own album and, with the aid of Delaney & Bonnie, Leon Russell, Rita Coolidge, Carl Radle, Jim Gordon and many others, he made Alone Together, which received widespread critical acclaim on both sides of the Atlantic.

Once again, Mason turned to various outside projects to keep himself busy over the next year and a half. During the summer of 1970, he played various gigs with Clapton's Derek and the Dominoes. Early in 1971, he joined up with the late Mama Cass on a three piece group which recorded one album and embarked on a national tour in the U.S. Upon returning to England, Mason surprised one and all by rejoining Traffic for a series of concerts, which resulted in the recording of a live LP, Welcome To The Canteen.

Back in the States once again, Mason journeyed to San Francisco, where he met up with drummer Rick Jaeger and bassist Lonnie Turner. After only five weeks of rehersal, they had a stint at The Troubador in Los. Angeles where their show was recorded. Afterwards, the trio entered the studio to lay down some additional tracks to what eventually became Mason's second solo album, Headkeeper.

In 1972 Dave signed an exclusive recording contract with Columbia Records and, in March, 1973, he went into studios in Los Angeles and San Francisco to cut his first album for the label. Arranged and produced by Mason, the album ended a period of almost three years since his previous studio album. Appropriately titled It's Like You Never Left, the LP showed Mason in fine form with backup help from the likes of Stevie Wonder, Greg Reeves, Jim Keltner, Graham Nash and Chuck Rainey, among others.

October, 1974, saw the release of Dave's second Columbia album, simply entitled Dave Mason. In addition to the usual compliment of outstanding Mason compositions, the LP included imaginative renditions of Bob Dylan's "All Along The Watchtower" and Sam Cooke's "Bring It On Home To Me." Mason continues to win more fans both on record and on stage, this being exemplified by one of the most impressively extensive tours seen in years. From October, 1975 to January 1976, 45 cities will see Dave, with a projected audience exceeding 500,000.

The Dave Mason Band on this tour is the same fine collection of performers that highlight Dave's latest LP, "Split Coconut": Gerald Johnson on bass, who has provided the back bone for such talents as Elvis, Sweet Inspiration and Steve Miller; Jay Winding, the keyboard talent behind Jackson Browne and Seals & Crofts among others; Rick Jaeger, drummer with Dave for several years now; and the phenomenally gifted guitarist, Jim Kreuger, a constant compliment to Dave's creation on stage and on record.

An important and refreshing artist, Dave Mason continues to build a reputation of tasteful creativity, adding personal dimension to rock and roll today.

JENNIFER WARNES

APPEARING WITH DAVE MASON ON MARCH 18th.
For further information call Marilyn Lipsius

JENNIFER WARNES

It is hard to describe the kind of pleasure one gets listening to Jennifer Warnes sing. Her range is so vast and her control over her instrument so exciting that she can penetrate deeply with a few short notes. It is her gift to others, to be able to move people with a song, and with the release of her debut Arista album, "Jennifer Warnes," she is offering this beautiful sensation to everyone who listens.

Born and raised in Orange County, California, Jennifer spent her high school years in pursuit of musical knowledge. Over weekends and after school she spent time in area coffee houses where performers who eventually would be making waves nationally were perfecting their styles. In those days, the singing talent included singer songwriters such as Jackson Browne and Jack Tempchin and the comedic talent performers such as Steve Martin, Diane Keaton and Pat Paulsen.

Jennifer watched them work and studied at home to the Everly Brothers, Boby Dylan, Edith Piaf and Ray Charles. Summers were full-time performance pursuits, including stints in civic light operas and lead roles in dramatic productions.

If one looks for the "big break" in performer's career, in the case of Jennifer Warnes it was probably being cast in the leading female role in the Los Angeles production of "Hair." It was from this strong performance, coupled with enthusiastic critical notices, that Jennifer managed to branch out into nightclub and concert tours as well as performing on network television shows.

A performer of vast and varied styles and moods, Jennifer's debut Arista album "Jennifer Warnes" utilizes a host of stellar musicians and a cornucopia of diverse and exciting mat erial. One of the cuts on the album, Steve Ferguson's "Mama," was featured on an episode of ABC's "Rich Man, Poor Man" with Jennifer performing the vocal. Also included in "O God of Loveliness," a remembrance from her early days in church choirs, an old Everly Brothers tune, "Love Hurts," and Jennifer's own "Daddy Don't Go." Jim Prive, who also produced "You Are So Beautiful" for Joe Cocker, is largely responsible for the album's rich arrangement and production. Jim Ed Norman also handled some of the production work. The album, like Jennifer's live performances, is beautifully unique as it is the most fully reqlized showcase to date for her tremendous vocal capabilities. It should certainly bring Jennifer Warne's talent to an ever- growing audience.

Cheerleading: An Alternative Look

By Judy Smagula
"Beacon"
William Paterson College

Most people think a cheerleader is a fluffy, brainless female who bounces around, makes a lot of noise, and goes out with the captain of the football team. Sure, this can be true of some cheerleaders, usually while they're at the grade school level, but its not true for the majority of us.

A cheerleader is usually used as a derogatory example of what the typical girl-next-door was before she caught her husband, and became the happy homemaker.

Most cheerleaders at the college level have been cheerleaders since pre-puberty. This means they have been subjected to unwanted verbal and physical abuse for at least half of their lives.

First of all, besides leading cheers at athletic events, the cheerleaders are primarily regarded as sex objects. The motion picture industry has encouraged this stereotype by producing an X-rated movie a few years back, "The Cheerleaders", and more recently, an R-rated movie, "The Pom Pom Girls", both of which exploit the sex lives of "typical cheerleaders." If you are a cheerleader, hardly a game goes by without being grabbed while walking through a crowd. This action is of course encouraged by the fact that a cheerleader is associated with short skirts and cute little bloomers, which are visible to the crowd when she performs a cartwheel. This outfit tends to give the impression to the male crowd, that a girl so free to flaunt her behind is probably "fair game" off the field as well. The brief uniforms are worn fundamentally to enable a cheerleader to freely do her stunts, just as short are worn by male athletes, such as basketball and soccer players, to give them freedom of movement. Both of course, male bouncing around in shorts are not as susceptible to getting pinched as females.

And then there's the crowd's neverending demand for splits. I used to think the crowd really appreciated this one particular stunt, but I've been given the impression that it's for a different reason than for what I'd like to believe. At every game there's always a handful of males leaning over the fence, leering and making comments such as, "C'mon, girls, we wanna see you b ounce," or "Shake your booty," and of course "Splits!" Fulfilling this request, game after game, has led me to believe th at the crowd, especially the males, are fascinated at the chance of seeing 10 females at one time with their legs apart! And of course, out there somewhere I'm sure, are some cheerleaders who prematurely lost their virginity after landing too hard in a flying split.

Most of us didn't go to school to land that football player for a husband, settle down, and have babies. We're int erested in pursuing a career after we graduate. Being a cheerleader is something we've been into since adolescence, and it had taken up a lot of time and energy. It's hard to work a part-time job because of the demanding schedule. And school work, also suffers when you have week night away games that you don't return from until two or three o'clock in the morning.

Being a cheerleader is just another way of being involved. We put so much time and effort into what we do, mainly because it's fun. We get to meet a lot of good people who are just as interested and involved with the school as ourselves.

So, before you make a wisecrack at a game, or laugh as you walk by one of our practicers, or think of a cheerleader as a dumb female, think of us just as any other club or organization at WPC. We're all here for the same reason, promoting our school.

This 'Tique at Juniata

By Pam and Eric

Well folks, we're back from vacation laden with loads of finery for the up and coming Easter season. These treasures, in the showcase, have been designed and executed by some of the world's foremost "gauds" of the early twentieth century for use by some of the early twentieth-century foxes. We have accummulated some of these lovely pieces from such reknowned institutions as Bailey, Banks, & Biddle, Sanks, and Murphy's. The necklaces, purses, earrings, etc., will compliment anyone's evening attire— from a dinner at McDonald's to an Opéra at the Met. So start planning now to augment your Easter dress and bonnet.

This type of jewelry was common during the early and all the jazz. Popular in speakeasies, such as Lesher and the Old Tote, these choice bits of schlock were in vogue to make the rich feel common, and the common feel even worse. From the hallmarks on the back, you can sort of tell what type quality you were really wearing—cheap or very cheap.

Probably the oldest article related to bodily adornment we have are the two necklaces composed of cut crystal beads. They are a beautiful shade of royal flamingo pink with rhinstone inserts. They are somewhat valuable and sort of rare, but others can probably be found if you look hard enough. As far as the remaining crap goes, with this stuff around there will never be a storage of tin and glass!

To keep one's change and kleenex from falling out of an 18-hour, mesh bags became quite handy. These pocketbooks were popular, before, during, and after the turn of the century. Made of metal mesh, some were left plain while others were enameled in various artistic patterns.

An improvement found in later models is Color-Vision, a process to prevent moisture and salt water damage. This allows the chic and debonair beachcomber to collect crustaceans in both styles and safety. This process permitted the purse designer free reign of the spectrum in color and pattern.

Evolving from the flat type are the cylindrical shaped purses. These mutations (for you genetics freaks) came about as a means to disguise the shape of the inner stash. They were quite the rage.

So, there you have it. What more can we say?

Judo Club Sweeps Eastern

By Barbara Frezza

Students who haunt the biology wing of the Brumbaugh Science Center may have noticed that Dr. Fisher has been in an unusually good mood this past week. If you coached the club that placed first in team competition at the 16th Eastern Collegiate Judo Championships held at West Point last weekend, you'd have to work to suppress a smile, too.

The team tournament involved 153 competitors from 28 colleges and universities; many of which are noted for being Judo "powerhouses" and include Judo as a varsity sport.

Juniata's formidable five-man team of Steve Winters (77), Brian Kerr (77), Dennis LaSorda (77), Don Page (77), and DeWayne Rideout (79) embarrassed some major powers with scores such as: Lowell (Mass) 40-0; Temple 22-5; Howard 35-0 and Navy 25-0.

Navy placed second in the team tourny, while Howard and Slippery Rock State tied for team third place.

Juniata's efforts weren't as well rewarded in the individual events; although Don Page, who weighs in at a modest 270 pounds, placed second in the unlimited (heavy) weight division. This qualifies him for individual as well as team competition in the National Collegiate Judo Championships. Steve Winters, Brian Kerr and Dennis LaSorda were recommended for promotion to first degree of brown belt on the basis of their performances in the individual events.

Congratulations are also in order for: Brian Smith (78), Mark Miller (80), Carl Brown (80), Steve Rust (79) and John Wetmore (77); all of whom performed well in their weight classes in the individual events, but did not place.

Coach Fisher plans to take a team of 6 of our best men to the National Collegiate Judo Championships, to be held at San Jose State on March 26th.

This will require funds-as well as a lot of hard work from the six who expect to go. Much of the money we've raised during the past two terms has been used to meet the expenses involved for food and lodging while at the Easterns and to defray the cost of gas for our matches at other colleges. We have worked hard to prove that we are a winning team. If we should win-or even place in the Nationals, this would be an excellent source of publicity for Juniata College; and would be less expensive, in the long run, that many of the freshmen recruiting campaigns the administration has thought of in the past. We are making a plea for funds to Juniata College Alumni, various civic organizations and interested persons, to support this worthy cause. If you wish to contribute, please make checks payable to the Juniata College Judo Club c/o Dr. Robert L. Fisher. All contributions are greatly appreciated.

Center Board Minutes

By Gary Lee Baker

On April 22, our campus minister, Andy Murray will perform in a coffeehouse. Mark Smith, manager of the coffeehouse on campus, would also like to have one, maybe two more on-campus shows. If you can put a good musical performance on, he'll be glad to talk to you.

"All Class Night" will be April 16th, the first weekend we're back from Easter vacation.

There is a possibility of an "Almost Anything Goes" day here on campus. Halls and Towers would compete for prizes and fun.

Question Answer

By Mark Wiener

Dear Q/A:

Did Juniata lower its academic standards last year? It certainly seems so, what with the great influx of Freshmen, who are now dropping off like flies.

Upperclassman

Dear Upper:

In an interview with Tom Snyder, Director of Admissions, I brought up the question. He said that there was no change in standards, and that actually the overall academic level of the freshman class (Board scores, etc.) was one of the highest in the last ten years. The size of the class was due more to a successful campaign for students last year, plus for some reason enrollment was up in most colleges all over the country. He didn't know if there was a greater percentage of drop outs and transfers this year over previous years, but since the class is much bigger, such cases would increase proportionally, making it seem like a lot more are leaving than last year.

Casino Night

By Judy Lee Young

Last weekend, in the great tradition of Brigadoon, the basement of the Old Gym was transformed into the Juniata Casino (the Casino Juniata?). The place was soon packed with all the self-professed "gambleholics" of the campus, who finally chose to come out of the closet and openly revel in the abundance of blackjack, craps, poker, three-dice roll, ad infinitum, and to dance to the live music provided by Forces. Forces, other than being a bit too loud, seemed to be a quite capable dance band, but few of the casino patrons took advantage of their presence. It seemed that most of the patrons were totally caught up in the outcome of a new deal or roll of the dice and couldn't tear themselves away. Even those who ran out of the $10,000 provided by the management would put themselves in play-money debt to their luckier friends, and I know of one gambler who resorted to selling himself for dances to get that all-important dinero. Of course, some people are luckier than others, and it's rumored that one player was $60,000 "richer" by the end of the night. What a shame the money wasn't real!

The evening was helped by the enthusiasm of the casino staff, alias the J Club, many of whom got into their roles as if they'd been born to wheel and deal. The attendance was said to be much better than in past years, and although this resulted in over crowding of the basement, not to mention the packed situation of the gaming tables, no one appeared to mind a great deal (no pun intended), and they could always escape to the relative solitude of the dance floor. It was a great evening and a real change of pace, and, if our luck holds up, maybe Centerboard will consider reviving Casino Night more often than once a year.

yakovski and Miss Catherine Lvoff, a French researcher on a course in Sofia, were sentenced to three and four years' jail respectively.

They were said to have been planning the destruction of the socialist order in both countries, presumably because they had been discussing human rights and the problems of political dissent.

Mr Makarov was also alleged, according to Bulgarian press reports, to have been working for unspecified foreign intelligence agencies, but that was not mentioned at either his interrogation or trial.

Mr Makarov, who was born in pre-revolutionary St Petersburg and applied for Soviet citizenship after the Second World War, was also accused of disseminating "slanderous fascist literature and propaganda material". It is thought this referred to publications in his possession which included material published by the Russian Student and Christian Movement and the YMCA Press.

Three weeks after the trial Miss Lvoff was released as a result of French diplomatic intervention. She now says that she intends to marry Mr Makarov.

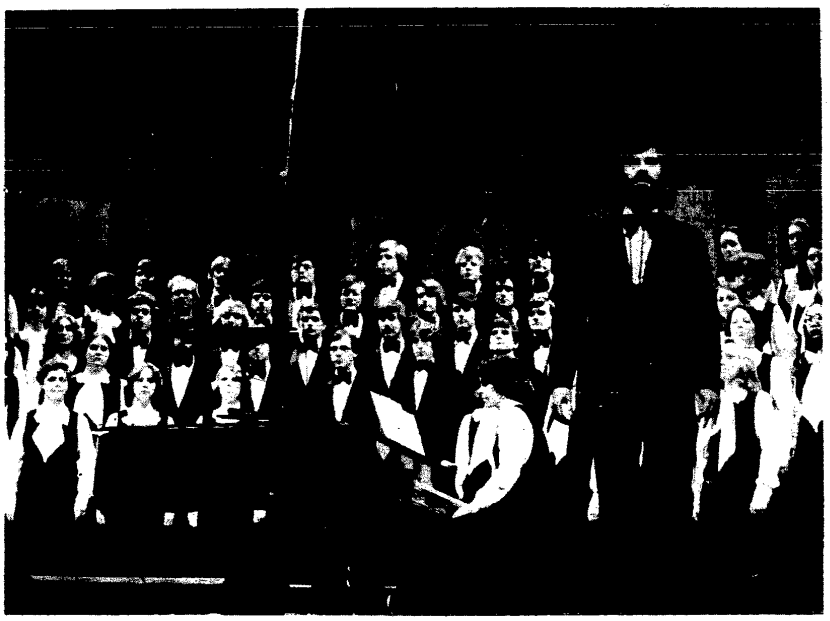
Choir Tour: Vacation With Added Dimension

By Carol Tolbert

The choir's tour began on the morning of Tuesday, February 22, when it departed from Juniata. It sang in many high schools and churches in Pennsylvania, New York, and New Jersey, usually performing two concerts per day.

The tour was certainly enjoyed by most, if not all, choir members. They said that it was a very valuable experience for a variety of reasons. To begin with, it was a chance to do something as a group for other people. This means that there was a good deal of teamwork and cooperation among the members. Moreover, there was the satisfaction of giving the audiences the result of their efforts.



Carol Tolbert

Choir Tour Homecoming: tired, but happy!

Another important part of the tour, choir members said, is that one of getting to know each other better. For instance, during the long bus rides, members talked quite a bit. Cathy Connell, a freshman in the choir, added that "since you're with people for hours, you must talk; we got into topics you normally wouldn't." Dave Powell, a junior in the choir, felt much the same way as Cathy did. He said that there is a total improvement in the relationships: already-existing ones improve, new ones form which, in turn, become lasting friendships. In addition, senior Dave Corman thought that the overnight stays— living with each other—were a valuable part of the tour. He said that it required cooperation and "it was an added dimension with people."

One outstanding feature of the tour, members agreed, was their hosts. Bob Hench, a freshman, commented that "the first thing that stands out are the people we stayed with. Meals were great, they'd do practically anything for us. Their kindness really impressed me." Dave Powell said that his hosts told them an awful lot, and that they were extremely willing to share their past experiences.

Ironically, one of the tour's strains was that members were in almost constant company with each other. Cathy Connell, for instance, said, "I found it a little uncomfortable at times when you're with people but preferred being away." Another difficult part, according to Dave Powell, was waking up early in order to travel. Despite such strains, members under the supreme direction of Professor Bruce Hirsch, worked as a group to "put it together."

In contrast, Dave also thought that their Fifties' songs were a real hit. High school students, for example, "went wild about them." Even the elderly people who attended the evening performances at churches were amused and delighted with the number.

Professor Hirsch received a number of different compliments from various members of the audiences. They mentioned that they were impressed by the choir's discipline, and by the personal warmth of the group. Furthermore, it was remarked that Juniata "has excelled...all groups." Professor Hirsch himself congratulates all choir members on their performance and representation of the school. He too, however, deserves full credit for his superb endeavors.

The whole choir seems to have been satisfied with their tours. They enjoyed themselves while experiencing a great deal of growth. Such success has created enthusiasm for next year's tour. Cathy Connell, for instance, stated that "I'll be looking forward to another successful tour in '78."

THE GOOD OLE DAYS

'Lusty Look' Latest In Men's Clothing

A progressive haberdashers' movement decrees that the keynote of clothing purchases should be "rugged masculinity." This is further designated as the "lusty look." Step one in acheiving a stylish lust is the introduction of large patch pockets. There ought to be four, at least, on coats, suits and jackets. Sex appeal now comes in tweeds, serges and gabardines.

Pastels are prophesied with all certainty on the Easter horizon. Within a month it is expected to be a la mode for a man to sally forth in a cutie shipped up in robin's egg blue, pea green, or eggshell...only because he's rugged.

Clothing Softer

A matter of great concern to the male fashion dictators is the fear that, in attempting to masculinize their clientele, they should in any way make them uncomfortable. For instance, the materials selected for Spring fashions are to be of softer texture. All the less to scrape against little male selves.

Then there is to be a marked prevalence of widespread collars. This might well be corrupted into plunging neckline for the hairy-chested. Summer shoes are going to be of even lighter weight than the lattice-work sandals of yester year.

Finally — A Cigar

But best of all is the final touch to this bizarre swain of '49. Absolutely indispensible in creating the all-out rugged "lusty-look" is — a cigar. "It's the ultimate indication of the man who truly enjoy's living," goes the justification.

If this is a preview of the flashing fifties, it looks as though the era to come will revolve about an anti-joey movement which has as its basic platform the abolition of white bucks and pipes.

Juniata College's permanent residents; Mike and Zda Sier. (see story on this page.)

The Little House on the Campus

By Nancy J. Rowe

"When people ask, 'Where do you live?' we say 'We live on the Juniata College campus!' " chuckled 82-year-old Zada Sier. Zada and her husband Mike live in the small green house on a two-acre plot next to Ellis Hall.

Zada, a delightfully friendly woman, recounted how she watched the Juniata campus evolve. When the "campus" consisted of merely Founders Hall and a connecting dorm, Mike lived in a house approximately where South dorm now stands and Zada lived where Lesher is, with a house between the two. Both Mike and Zada have lived on Scott Street for more than 63 years. They were married in 1920 and moved across the street to their present home in 1945. All during this time they watched the campus expand, as building after building was erected.

When asked about their relationship with the college students, Mrs. Sier's face began to beam. She related how their home had once been used as a "hang-out" for students. Because students were not permitted to smoke on campus at one time, they would gather at the Sier home, since it was considered off-campus. Their relationship with the students, "especially the boys," became rather close. Zada told of one student who would come every day after lunch to visit Zada and Mike and tell them how his day had been. It seems as though they had practically become "adopted" parents. Several of these former students still visit the Siers when they return for Alumni Day or sports events.

The Siers like meeting the present students who pass by their house. Mrs. Sier told how several years ago she had baked Christmas cookies and waited for some students to pass by their home. When she saw two girls passing across the street, she offered them some.

"You never saw two girls stop dead in their tracks . . . (chuckle) The one girl said 'I beg your pardon?' " Zada repeated her offer of cookies, and they "dashed across the street. They thought it was wonderful and I said 'Oh, you're very welcome!' It pleased me that I could do something for someone who was so appreciative."

Although one single event in the college's history did not stand out in her mind, Zada said that she and Mike always liked the annual May Day event. They would also go to commencements, basketball, football, and baseball games. They could almost be considered honorary alumni.

Throughout the interview, Zada continuously stated that she felt that a story on her and Mike would be of no interest to anyone. However, their knowledge of Juniata's past and their general interest in the students deserve recognition and admiration from students, faculty, and administrators alike.

A visit with Mike and Zada could lift the spirits of any student caught in the doldrums of Juniata life. (Zada may even tell you some humorously revealing stories about past administrators!) As Zada reminded us all at the end of my interview with her, "You're the only neighbors we have." Zada and Mike Sier have done quite a lot for the students of Juniata in the past. We ought to return the favor.

Special Article to the Juniatian

On the Road with Juniata

On the Road with Juniata
by J. C. Kuralt

A trend is growing at Juniata—a dissatisfaction with ivory-tower learning. Textbooks can't do the job alone. Neither can professors who supposedly have a wider set of experiences than undergraduates just out of high school. And even the old movies and labs where a little of the outside "real" world was brought to campus can't do the job of exposing students to it.

So now we see it growing — taking students to the world so they can have real experiences and get down to the nitty-gritty of things. It probably started with geology and biology. Local flora, fauna, animals and rock formations are, let's face it, very limited. There is no sand or seashore locally and it's tough to read about it only or to touch such small samples of it in the laboratory. So Florida and Carolina, here we come. Furthermore, those places have warm weather beaches unlike New Jersey in March.

Then urban history got into the act. How can you study urban problems in Huntingdon or Mt. Union or even Altoona with only 65,000 residents? No heading for the hills for these students. They need to experience poverty in the polluted big city canyons of Philadelphia. Periodically they exodus from campus to experience first hand what textbooks only describe to unimaginative students.

Then the Business Department, certainly not to be outdone, got $20,000 from the surplus profits of industry to take their green kids to the citadels of the private enterprise system. If they want to compare prices in stores do they check out Huntingdon? No sir, they went to King of Prussia to compare prices and pick up a free lunch along the way. Local factories or hospitals or retailers don't work the same as in Philadelphia or Ohio. And students love it with the plush motels and restaurants and excuses from all those dreary textbook classes where they try to make you think. Business students are being introduced at an early age to the expense account.

Some other departments need to learn from these pacesetters. English students should go to the mines and golf courses of southern Appalachia to find out how people speak and write in these locales because the locals are uninteresting types who can be studied without a week off. And sociology students — why don't you put pressure on your profs to study stratification in California instead of Mill Creek. Language and art students are being cheated by not going to New York, Mexico and Europe. Chemistry students need to get out of their lab and visit the real ones at Dupont and Lilly. And since human behavior is different in Chicago, psychology and political science students should visit the mental hospitals and power structures of the windy city.

Professors and students take note. If you can get on Binder's priority program, you too can vacation while educationally observing at college expense. Rather than have departments divided by differences on who can put on the biggest road show, why don't we all go the route of adventurous learning. In fact, if this trend continues, we can probably close Juniata during the winter months and go south with the business department so we can see the world first hand. This, indeed, would be liberating from those stuffy old classrooms.

The Drawer R Show at WJC

By Kathy Jacobs

Every Monday night from nine to twelve, Todd Kulp hosts The Drawer R Show, a show especially for the inmates at the State Prison in Huntingdon. (He calls it this because "Drawer R" is where all the prisoners mail is sent). Todd got the idea for his show after asking his listeners to write in and request songs for him to play. He got a good response from the prisoners and decided to have a show directed toward them.

Most of the music they request is hard rock and country. They especially like Foghat and Led Zeppelin. Todd talks to them and usually brings up a specific topic to get their opinions and ideas on different subjects. He gets between fifteen and forty letters a week from the prisoners — but he finds it difficult to answer them all. If anyone is interested in writing to them or in helping Todd with his show, contact him at Box 1221.

Todd feels that he is helping the prisoners to feel more a part of society. We at the station feel that this is a good opportunity for Todd to express his concern for others — reaching out to them through WJC.

THE WEEK

A U.S. delegation was sent to Vietnam to discuss the MIA situation this week. Vietnamese officials identified the remains of twelve Americans who had been unaccounted for after the Vietnam conflict. The fate of over 2,500 Americans is still unknown.

Folgers Coffee Company, the nation's second largest roaster, raised their prices 50¢ per pound to an unprecedented $4.18 per pound. The new prices will reach the supermarkets in about two months.

The U.S. has sent military and monetary aid to Zaire, who has been invaded by Angolan mercenaries. The Angolans are reported to be assisted by Soviet-backed Cubans.

President Carter instigated a sudden change in American foreign policy by calling for a homeland for the Palestinian refugees.

Paul Warnke was sworn in as Carter's chief arms negotiator and head of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

Jimmy Young won a twelfth-round decision against George Foreman in the heavyweight championship bout in Puerto Rico. Foreman was hospitalized after receiving severe blows to the head.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

Although I had been asked to write a parody concerning the bathroom showers of Lesher Hall, after discussing the subject with other students in the dorm we have decided the following: The situation brought forth by the extreme temperature changes in the water system of Lesher is no longer a problem that can be treated in jest. Before continuing we would like to emphasize that we do not wish to point the finger of blame to any one individual, because we realize the water system within the dorm is old and in need of repair.

We really don't know what the exact problem is but here is what we have witnessed and experienced: We have been inflicted with an extreme change in water temperature with the passing of each season, that is, in the winter one experiences an 'ice shower,' while in the spring one is exposed to scalding jolts of water. However, the problem seems to be more complex. With the flushing of each toilet, any one individual who is attempting to take a shower will notice the complete absence of cold water, resulting in a spray of water which has the ability of inflicting excruciating pain as well as red scald marks. Yet the problem resulting from flushing is not merely confined to one floor. One has had to atune their ears to the distant rumbling of toilets on upper levels, that will bring forth a surprise attack.

We realize that this same problem regarding water temperature and pressure changes is not confined to only Lesher. However we believe that our problem has reached a serious and extreme level. Again we wish to state that we feel this is a problem that can no longer be laughed at, but requires attention. We hope that with our return in the fall, we will be greeted with a consistently warm flow of shower waters.

Residents of first Lesher.

Dear Editor,

In regard to the article written by "TWIG" headlined Exit Gates Locked and Hundreds Die. I am very disappointed that your writer did not check his or her resources. If he had, he would be aware that prior to any major event all exit doors of the gym are unlocked. The gym doors are locked daily in order to prevent non-students from entering the building and deprive our students of the use of our facility. In case of an emergency, our students still have four doors to enter and exit the gymnasium.

I only wished the individual would have checked with me before writing the article to make sure that the information printed in the Juniatian was correct.

Sincerely,
Bill Berrier
Athletic Director

The 1977 Charter Flights Guide Free

CIEE has just announced the publication of The 1977 Charter Flights Guide listing over 150 flights to Paris, Amsterdam and London.

This unique guide includes charters designed and operated by CIEE especially for students, teachers and university staff — enabling them to travel abroad for part or all of their summer vacation or to spend a full semester or sabbatical year abroad. Summer round trips range in length from 4 to 12 weeks, while the academic year flights extend from 4 to 12 months!

Prices for these hard-to-find flights are pretty hard to beat. They start at $330 for New York departures, $399 for Chicago departures and $459 for Los Angeles and San Francisco departures.

CIEE's advance booking charter (ABC) program has been authorized by the Civil Areonautics Board, which requires all bookings to be made at least 45 days in advance. The airlines operating the flights are Trans International Airlines, World Airways, Capitol Airways, Martinair and American Airlines. CIEE is a membership organization of nearly 200 colleges and universities and has been active in the field of student travel for over 25 years.

The 1977 Charter Flights Guide is free from CIEE, Department PR2, 777 United Nations Plaza, New York, New York 10017; or 236 North Santa Cruz Avenue, Los Gatos, California 95030.

Centerboard Minutes

By Gary Lee Baker

Casino night was a big success. Participation in the event was the best in years.

Steve Rossi and Frank Yesko will be doing a coffeehouse March 26th. Our campus minister, Andy Murray, will put on his own coffeehouse on April 22nd.

$500 promoted by the Senate for the movies will be given only if the Movie committee does a survey, otherwise no movies.

At the last meeting it was proposed to make faculty pay for the use of the canoes just as the students do. A motion was made, voted on and passed unanimously. The faculty will now, just as the students, pay a $10 deposit on each canoe and $3 a day to use them.

Centerboard elections will be held early in order to give the new chairmen some experience at his/her job before next year. Beginning March 21st, petitions were available. They must be in by March 26th; elections will then be held March 31st.

How many times have you wondered why eight o'clock classes exist? I myself have wondered about this many times. Eight o'clock is really a terrible hour to start out on, and I really doubt that a lot of profs relish the thought of lecturing at that hour either. Unfortunately this makes no difference.

The reason you can find at least one eight o'clock class per department is because the administration decreed that each department has to have at least one class that is scheduled to meet at the ungodly hour of eight o'clock. And, as Groucho Marx would say, "now isn't that the most ridiculous thing you've ever heard?"

Why is it so ridiculous? First of all, for the greater part of every lecture, the prof can count on at least half of the class being there physically, but by no means mentally. Secondly, this is a terrible waste of time and energy not to mention money.

The only possible solution to the problem is to have the profs go out on a limb and refuse to schedule eight o'clock classes; if that doesn't work the students can just refuse to go to eight o'clock classes. It just might work, then again it might not, but something has got to be done . . .

Mason and Warnes — "Bringing It On Home"

By The Ranch

The Memorial gym was transformed from a basketball bouncing and weight clashing clamour to the serene music of Dave Mason and Jennifer Warnes. This was the second gym concert sponsored this year by the concert committee, under the direction of Ken Rodgers and Paul Endress, (good job boys!)

I approached the concert with some amount of skepticism, I hadn't heard from Dave Mason for a while, and I never heard of Jennifer Warnes. My skepticism soon turned to surprise when Jennifer casually took the stage. I could sense a nervousness in her manner and it continued for the rest of the concert. A part of this nervousness stemmed from having a bad cold which restrained her voice. She sang well, wheeling about the stage, cup in one hand and a drumstick in the other. She had a "girl next door" appearance you couldn't help loving. At the beginning of each song she would say, "I'm going to play this song for you," and you really felt that she was playing the songs directly to you. She penetrated that thin line between audience and artist that must be broken to get the musical messages across.

I had remembered Dave Mason from my High School days, and wondered why he was playing the college circuit. My question was soon answered, "We just thought that we would cruise around for a few weeks and play some music."

Dave Mason, surrounded by two excellent musicians, paved the way for what was an exciting evening of song.

Most of the songs that the band played were off of his "Dave Mason" album. He also gave us the pleasure of hearing two cuts from his latest album which will be released in April. His professionalism came through when he faded back from the spot light to let other musicians do solos. A touching point in the concert happened when he sang the song, "Give me a reason," which he wrote for his seven year-old son. In the true tradition of concerts Dave was given a match-lit demand for an encore. Obliging the audience, he and his band came back for two encore songs, and Dave did the last song by himself.

Musically, Mason's style was a mosaic of many types; his own twelve-string picking and easy singing style; a rendition of "Take it to the Limit" by the Eagles, and an old blues standby, "Bring It On Home," which brought the house down. Although his band was missing there were plenty of good musicians on stage which made it very easy to sit back and enjoy the concert.

P.D.Q. Bach at Juniata??!

By Ibrook Tower

The Music of P.D.Q. Bach, Johann Sebastian's only forgotten son, is represented this Friday, March 25th in Oller Hall at 8:15 P.M. on a concert by the Juniata College Band under the direction of Ibrook Tower. The manuscript of the "Grand Serenade for an Awful Lot of Wind and Percussion Instruments" was discovered by Prof. Peter Schikele of the University of Southern North Dakota at Hoople in a box marked "Seditious Material" among the belongings of an 18th century Tory.

Also featured on the band concert will be a march, "Manhattan Beach," by John Phillip Sousa; Copland's "An Outdoor Overture;" the British band classic, "Folk Song Suite" by Ralph Vaughan-Williams; Music from Oklahoma; music by Glen Miller; and music by John Lennon and Paul McCartney. Admission is free and all are invited to this extraordinary entertainment before your routine Friday night party.

Coffeehouses to Arts and Crafts

On Saturday, March 29th, the Coffeehouse/Dance Committee presents STEVE ROSSI in a coffeehouse performance. It will be held in the Basement of the Old Gym at 9:15 p.m. Admission is $1.00 and refreshments will be served. It promises to be a good show, so stop at the Old Gym for some good entertainment.

Micki Gaunt is currently planning an outdoors Arts and Crafts Festival for later this term. Any student, faculty member or administrative member who is interested in exhibiting and participating in this festival, please contact Micki Gaunt. If you know of any professionals or individuals outside the college who would be interested in exhibiting in such a festival, please submit their names to Micki Gaunt, Box 1707.

CENTER BOARD ELECTIONS

Petitions! Campaigning! Balloting! Elections! It is Spring Term, and with its arrival enters the election of new Center Board Chairmen. Petitions are now available at the Information Desk in Ellis College Center. They are due no later than midnight, Saturday, March 26th. Elections will be held Thursday, March 31st.

In case some students are not aware of Center Board's existence and/or functions, allow me to elaborate upon the organization, and its various committees. Center Board is a student-run programming organization. The Board programs films, coffeehouses, dances, concerts, Artist Series, Homecoming, Madrigal Dinner, Winter Tournaments, Casino Night, All Class Night, Raft Ragatta, Mountain Day, Spring Weekend, May Day Breakfast, and just about any type of programming that presents itself in the minds of the committee chairmen. Operating on such a broad base enables maximum versatility, ingenuity, and creativity in programming.

Center Board is organized into 14 voting members. These include the executive positions, chairpersons of the committees and other representatives from the college community. The positions are filled through a general election within the student body. Any individual may run for an office.

There are three executive positions. The General Chairman presides during all Board meetings, assists the committee chairmen, acts as a spokesman for the Board, and is a member of SAC. Elaine Joyce is the present General Chairman. The Vice-Chairman presides during Board meetings when the general chairman is absent, runs all elections and assists the other chairmen when needed. Presently Corrie Foy holds this position. The Secretary-Treasurer records the minutes of each meeting, keeps financial records and sorts the mail to the various chairmen. Sonia Bahner is this year's secretary-treasurer. There are seven committee chairmen. The Chairman of Coffeehouse/Dance is responsible for programming coffeehouses and dances, and works in conjunction with other chairmen for special programming. The present chairman is Mark Smith. Concert Committee Chairman programs all major concerts and mini-concerts. Ken Rogers and E. B. Endress are co-chairmen this year. The Chairman of Films Committee programs the film series for the year. Jim Donahue is this year's chairman. Fine Arts Chairman helps program the Artist Series, sets up and plans the art displays within the College Center and may program special programming events. Micki Gaunt is the present chairman. Publicity Chairman is responsible for the publicity of Board-sponsored events. David Corman is chairman this year. Special Events Chairman program a variety of events throughout the year: Homecoming, Madrigal Dinner, All Class Night, Casino Night, May Day Breakfast and Spring Weekend. The present co-chairmen are Bev Martin and Katie Middleton. Recreation Chairman is responsible for planning Mountain Day, Winter Tournaments, Raft Ragatta plus other events. Mitch Wells is the present chairman.

If you are interested in running for any of these positions and have questions concerning specific responsibilities, please feel free to contact any of this year's chairmen. They will be able to honestly answer any and all questions.

A Pre-Season Look at J.C. Baseball

By R. Morris

Spring is here and along with the robins comes the sound of leather being slapped and bats cracking. It is the sound of baseball. All over the nation, young and old prepare themselves for America's national pastime, the grand old game of baseball. It is called Spring Training, used to condition the body and practice the fundamentals. It is a time to let the muscles come out of deepfreeze; a time to look up into the sun and not into gym lights; a time to throw, not dribble; and a time to swing a bat, not a hockey stick. As the basketball and hockey seasons wind down, the fans turn their minds to the season opener. From little league to the major leagues, early April means the start of something new: a baseball season to better the one before.

What is the point of all this nonsensical rambling, you ask? Well, if you haven't noticed or don't know, Juniata has a baseball team. This year, as others have said in the previous years, sounds promising.

The squad of 34, including twelve lettermen, is a mixture of experience and youth. Since the team lost only three starters, experience abounds. Of the twelve lettermen, only four are seniors — Steve Harper, James Kudel, Todd Wise and Dave Wichrowski. The youth comes from the fifteen freshmen who make the total squad. The standouts include pitchers Randy Cassell and Chris Lyons, both categorized by Coach Bill Berrier as being ". . . starting pitcher calibre." The other spring sensation is first-time-out sophomore Mike Henry, who has been described by another player as ". . . hits a ton."

With the pitching squad back intact and the big hitters also back to give them some runs, the team's immediate future looks bright. In Coach Berrier's words, "The upcoming season has me optimistic." Well, onto the MAC championships, right?!?! Wrong. A few things stand in the way. They're called good teams. The schedule stands loaded with championship teams such as Wilkes, Penn State, Indiana, Lock Haven, etc. Even with his optimism, Juniata's Walt Alston foresees the team having to play ". . . outstanding ball to break .500." One thing the schedule does favor is the fact that Juniata has eight of its twelve MAC games at home. That's supposed to be a big advantage, and with big fan support, the sky's the limit. So we'll see you all out there on Langdon Field (that's what it's called) on April 2 for the opener. DON'T MISS IT!

THE GOOD OLE DAYS

(This article was originally printed in a Juniatian of 1967.)

By Kathy Snyder

Judging from the rather abundant snowfall outside, it seems the only fever one will have this spring is from a cold or pneumonia. I write about spring fever, then, tongue in cheek, hand in glove, foot in boot, not as an observer, but as a harbinger of spring, like the first robin spotted on the campus some days ago — dead from frostbite. Protest is useless, however, as winter is still within its constitutional limits.

There were a few days of premature sunshine in which blanched feet and legs were exposed to the still rather thin rays of sun. Students avoided studies with the universally accepted excuse "spring fever" which merely means being lazy outside instead of in. Oller Hall ranks as a favorite gathering place with at least one segment of students who defend themselves, Acropolis-like, behind a barricade of guitars against the disdaining glances and comments of passers-by.

Motor paralysis has been eliminated by the thawing powers of the sun, and if one stands on a street corner for a sufficient amount of time, he can observe the same cars and motorcycles going past time after time, around and around the adjoining blocks, like homing pigeons recently released from their cage. Another mode of transportation recent under the sun is the skateboard, which has already claimed one victim in the form of a bone contusion, inflicted when the person was skating in bare feet.

Footballs have been traded in for Frisbees. Frosh female gymnasts have been daylighting in jump rope. Halldwellers have been combining their hard-saved laundry dimes to buy kites, flown on the football field. Circumventing the dining halls on the way to picturesque sites by the Juniata River and the adjoining railroad tracks, picnickers can be seen toting paper bags full of food. Not aware of the river tides caused by the hydroelectric dam at Warrior Ridge, two picnickers were recently trapped in the middle of the Juniata on a large rock which had been connected a moment before, to the shore by smaller rocks. They rejected Kierkegard's solution of walking back in favor of the stimulating sport of wading in the brisk March morning.

An Extended Winter Vacation . . .

By Sally Carn

What do you do after church on Sunday? If you lived in Brazil, you could go to a local monastery and taste wine until you're loaded. Then, if physically able, you could go home to spend a quiet afternoon watching a soccer game on TV. If that doesn't interest you, how about a trip to a coffee plantation to ride horses, go swimming (and get a terrific tan) and eat some fantastic sweet desserts? Or, you could skip the monastery and stuff yourself and eleven friends into a VW and go to an all-day party. All these crazy things and a few others is what I did during winter term, instead of suffering through a freezing winter in central Pennsylvania on the Juniata Campus.

It all started my sophomore year in high school when I was chosen as a Rotary Exchange Student. Consequently, I spent my junior year in Brazil living with a family, attending the Brazilian schools, learning a new language (Portuguese), eating a lot of strange food, and learning a completely new way of life. I really loved the country and the people and stayed for more than a year. This past summer, three years later, I decided that I was "homesick" and wanted to go back to visit. Fortunately, it worked out that I could take winter term off and I flew off to spend six weeks visiting "my family" and friends.

The seasons are reversed because Brazil is in the southern hemisphere, so we were right in the height of the summer season. For the first three weeks I was there it rained continuously; the temperature was about 86 degrees. During the last three weeks, there wasn't a cloud in the sky and it was HOT! During the day, it was usually about 100 degrees while at night, it went down to 65 or 70. We went swimming everyday and got wonderful tans.

Brazilians, like their weather, are also hot. They are very friendly, very helpful and very interested in foreign people and countries. They go out of their way for Americans especially. For example, a friend of mine who speaks a little English and I walked into a bar and started speaking in English only. The waiter came over and thought that we were both Americans, so he served us wine and all types of food. We were low on funds, and soon started wondering how we were ever going to pay for everything, but soon we realized that he was giving it all to us for free!

Many things about Brazil are different from the typical USA run-of-the-mill happenings. The houses have no heating systems because it never gets cold enough. Everyone has at least one maid and a cook, plus a woman to do the laundry. You can expect to see ants in the kitchen and tarantulas in the backyard. The Lincoln Continental of Brazil is the Dodge Dart or Ford Maverick! You go to school for eleven years in a private school if your father has any money at all. School is only half a day, either from 7:30 to 11:30 or from 12:30 to 4:30. One can become a teacher right after graduation from high school without going to college. If one wants to be a doctor, he simply takes the entrance test for a medical school and studies for four years without suffering through four years of pre-med. However, if one does want to go to a university, it is different to get in because there are so few places and so many people applying. In one school that I looked into, there were 3,000 applicants for 70 places.

Parties in Brazil are another thing. You tell everyone to be there at 10:00 and they start arriving at 11 or 11:30. By one a.m. the party is really moving, and by six or seven you're left alone to clear up or stumble into bed. Brazil and its people are like that...time is of no essence to them. They very rarely look at their watches. They do what they want to do when they feel like doing it (in larger cities of course, time is more Americanized).

During my visit, I was lucky

New FBI Documents on Kent State Killings

(CPS)—A massive document being released by the FBI under the Freedom of Information Act may shed new light on the tragic 1970 Kent State shootings.

Bill Gordon, a California author who is writing a book about the Kent State upheavals, and a Washington-based reporter for the Akron, Ohio Beacon Journal should be receiving copies of the 1,050-page report within two weeks. Gordon, who initiated his request for the documents in August, 1975, thinks that they are forthcoming now possibly because of "the change in Administrations." Lawyers who participated in the prosecution of the Ohio National Guard asked for a number of FBI documents related to the case in July, 1974, and hope that the new files may include a "burn report" which deals with the burning of a Kent State ROTC building several days prior to the shooting.

An FBI spokesman in Washington says that the files center mainly around early FBI surveillance of events on the campus leading up to the debacle. More volumes will be released at a later, unspecified date, he continued. Gordon believes that "enough mysteries" surrounding the student deaths may be solved by the unearthed files.

Congratulations to the JC Concert Band for a well-done performance last Friday!

Revelations of a Naive Freshman

As the year draws to a close, I begin to dread the summer-time onslaught of various and sundry relatives, neighbors, etc., chanting the inevitable, "So what did you learn away at college?" It's not so much that I'm not thrilled by the prospect of reciting the proper method of determining pH (I happen to know that my parents wouldn't be ecstatic about hearing it, anyway); it's just that the "college experience" has had a greater impact on me than any of my courses (including Modes) have.

I realize this may not be true for everyone here, but I was an incredibly naive high school senior — I actually believe that the "rampant consumption of alcohol and drugs in our nation's schools" was a myth created by some fanatical Temperance members. Looking back, I've decided that I was either very blind, or else the victim of a school-wide conspiracy to keep me uninformed. (I believe the conspiracy idea, myself.)

Constant association with my "peer group" by living on campus has made it easier for me to see the ways of the world, but, more than that, I've learned about people. I con't mean just the trivial, "If you laugh at Dr. —'s jokes, your grade will be enhanced by X brownie points;" I mean how people think, and deal with each other. I've met people who really do seem to think that the universe was created for their especial benefit (that may seem to be a very narrow view of someone, which is why I'm surprised that, no matter how much I see them, they never show any other attitude). But, for every one like that, I've met many other people who are honestly concerned; who try to understand what other people need from them, because they themselves need people in their lives, in a more rewarding setup than a vicarious existence through soap operas could give them. If there is "some good in everyone", then campus life is the ideal medium to bring it out. Unfortunately, it becomes much harder to hide the dark side of yourself for long, but this just makes me face what I should have seen in myself long ago.

More than anything else, it has been finding that other people have hopes and fears and dreams like mine, and, especially, finding a person I can share these with, that has become most important about this year. I Haven't really "learned"; I have begun to understand. I only with that I knew how to say "what I learned away at college" in a way that would help my little brothers and sisters to understand, too.

One of the most outlandish films of the decade was in Huntingdon this past week, and I'm not talking about "Network." The film which I am speaking of is none other than "Deep Throat." Probably a good percentage of the male population and some of the female population travelled down to the Clifton Theatre to see this flick. Naturally, your reasoning was so you could say you saw it before Pennsylvania ruled it obscene.

Actually watching the audience responses is more interesting than the movie, but not always! "Deep Throat," might well become a classic in pornographic filming. One thing is certain you can use "Deep Throat" as a standard, so the next time you go see an X-rate you can rate it with respect to your standard.

If Pennsylvania does rule "Deep Throat" as obscene a number of other pornographic flicks will also be banned or edited, and with this comes the question of the First Amendment; The same question that Larry Flynt is facing now because of his magazine "Hustler." (A word of caution, don't use "Hustler" as a standard for pornographic magazines, because you're likely not to find any to match or come close to the "standard" you've set!)

An interesting study would be to determine how much money is spent on pornography here at Juniata, then again it might be too interesting. What ever the case may be, pornography is with us and no one can answer the question as to how long it will survive and to what extent it will go, so a word to the wise, enjoy it while you can. That is if you enjoy it at all.

Radio City

When Frank Zappa's new album, Zoot Allures, was released about two months ago, it got bad reviews. The general consensus was that Zappa had finally taken his style and run it into the ground. The reviewers were mostly of the opinion that, lest he become boring, Frank had better do something new.

Since I've become familiar with the album, however, I've realized that this is it. There are several subtle, but distinct departures from the style of his last four albums. There are also many similarities, but part of Zappa's genius is in the continuity of all his work, so we can hardly belabor him for that.

The humor found on all of Zappa's albums underwent a major transformation on Zoot Allures. It has become less humorous per se, as in Yellow Snow on Apostrophe, and become more and more satirical. He's going back to a direct frontal assault, which is somewhat reminiscent of his early music, We're Only in it for the Money, for instance.

Musically, Zappa is progressively becoming more aware of himself as a guitarist. There are three guitar instrumentals on this album, all of which are excellent.

The first song is entitled "Wind Up Working in a Gas Station." Besides being a general slam on his audience, it seems tailor-made for college students: "You ought to know now, all your education, won't help you nohow, you're gonna wind up working in a gas station."

The next song is "Black Napkins," the first instrumental. Relatively simple in structure (pretty much like an old blues), it's all Zappa and it's excellent. "Black Napkins" falls right into "The Torture Never Stops," a lengthy (it never stops!) excursion into a medieval torture chamber, with F.Z. listed as "director of recreational activities." I really don't know about this one, my friends think it is purposefully humorous, but they have strange senses of humor and I'm not quite so sure. "A sinister midget, with a bucket and a mop, where the blood goes down the drain." Is that funny or not? I'm still undecided, but I think I'm safe in saying that if there is a real change in Zappa's music anywhere on this album, this, (and "Zoots Allures" on side two) is it.

The director of recreational activities then introduces us to Ms. Pinky, a plastic, inflatable party doll. "I got a girl with a little rubber head, rinse her out every night just before I go to bed, She never talks back like a lady might do, and she looks like she loves it every time I get through." Sick, sick humor, folks, but I love it, and the Seventies seem to require it.

The second side of the album is a little more cheerful. It starts out with "Find Her Finer," a "how-to" with semi-obscene overtones, done in a fifty-ish crooner style. It's very good music, but you really have to hear it.

"Find Her Finer" blends into "Friendly Little Finger" (hmm.) which is the second guitar instrumental and another very good one.

After "Friendly Little Finger" we have "Wino Man." This song caters to (and pokes fun at) all your bourgeois preconceptions of the life of a drunk. "Wino Man" most obviously carries over the style of the last four albums.

"Zoot Allures," the title track, however, is a complete break. This song is easily one of the finest instrumental guitar pieces I've ever heard. It was recorded, with the exception of the drum track, entirely by F.Z., using several different guitars and bass, and it's magnificent, so I won't try to describe it.

The last song on the album is "Disco Boy" and the subject matter is easily discernible from the title. Zappa's attitude is easily discernible from the lyrics. "Run to the toilet, boy, and comb your hair, button your lip and check your shoulders cause some dandruff might be hiding there, ...Leave his hair alone, but you can kiss his comb." Ironically enough, Zappa did this as a rock and roll song.

Anyone with a sense of humor should like this album. The music is excellent (a peculiar mixture of rock and jazz that Zappa is famous for) and the lyrics, unless you're a Disco Boy, should keep you amused. If you already like Zappa, I guarantee it.

Lower Postal Rates

The Nation is dissatisfied with the postal service and must wonder if there is a solution. Yes, there is a solution, but the Postal Service Director of the Office of Resources Management, Mr. J. M. Williamson, stated that the solution offers insufficient improvement to be in the public interest.

The first step in improved mail service occurred years ago with the coding of the delivery areas (zones). The second improvement occurred when the code was expanded to include the distribution centers, thus, ZIP code (Zone Improvement Plan). Logically, the final step in improved mail service is to code the address.

The purpose of the postal code is to increase accuracy and speed in the dispatch and delivery of the mail to the delivery areas. An address code would give greater accuracy and speed in the dispatch and delivery of mail to the address. By using the address code the Postal Service could reduce operating cost by 50%. This reduction in cost could be passed on to the mailers in the form of lower postal rates. Since June of 1975, management has been aware that an address could be coded. But, as has been pointed out, management claims that reduced postal rates, greater accuracy and speed in the dispatch of mail to the address is not in the public interest.

If the public wants lower postal rates, accuracy and speed in the dispatch and delivery to the address then it appears the public must write to their Congressmen to get results.

Letters to the Editor

In response to last week's letter from Mr. Berrier on the article Exit Gates Locked; Hundreds Die the writer would enjoy the final statement concerning the matter. Mr. Berrier criticized that the exit gates have always been open at major events in the gym while the reverse was found in the article. Having again asked several people about the matter the consensus remains unchanged and hence the author stands behind what he has already written. Also about the fact that four doors remain open, it is not the opinion here that in case of an emergency those doors could handle a crowd in panic.

The author noticed that exit doors in the gym were open at the recent concert held there. Student guards watched the doors to make sure no unwanted guests would sneak in and the process worked well. Thanks and congratulations to the person or persons responsible for this act of preventive safety.

"TWIG"

Dear Juniatians, Faculty and Administration:

I am writing this letter in hopes that I can clear up a few problems that have arisen because of the lack of foresight that was taken on my part.

I am referring to the incident on Wednesday night, the 16th of March, when the S. S. Raiding Squad temporarily borrowed some of the pieces of furniture from other dormitories on campus. We intended to return the furniture on Friday but the bad weather off-set this plan.

The point that we were trying to make was that Sherwood lounge does not, and has not, for a number of months, had any facilities in it.

More than apparently our purpose was misinterpreted by various members of the Juniata community.

On behalf of the members of the S. S. Raiding Squad, I would like to express a deep apology to anyone who was inconvenienced because of our actions, or anyone that had to take any criticism or harassment because of this incident. I would appreciate that any ill feelings about this subject be expressed to me as I feel fully responsible for what has happened.

Sincerely
Gary Moellers

Worshippers Plague Campus

By Daniel W. Lindley

(CPS)—Police in the college town of Huntington, W. Va. still are seeking local "Satan worshippers" who allegedly beat and raped a Marshall University coed the evening of February 21.

Capt. Norman Noble, commander of the Huntington investigation unit, noted that "we're doing everything in our power to arrest and break up this group." About 60 people have been interviewed by local and campus police, but there has been little uncovered beyond the rumors and general knowledge already surrounding the sect and the evening's events.

The Marshall student, who had been walking in Huntington and was abducted by four men in a car, was discovered later behind the Campus Christian Center. She was in a state of shock and had cuts of her hands, abdomen, and forehead. Local police have indicated that they do not believe the slices were related to any Satanist ceremony.

The Satan worshippers, a Huntington group, whose membership is estimated at around 25-30 persons, apparently had been recruiting openly by word of mouth on the Marshall campus prior to the assault. According to police and other investigators, a number of Marshall students belonged to the cult, but an early rumor which contended that only black men and white women are admitted to the group has been dismissed. One police official still contends, however, that the sect's recruiters prefer "young, white males."

The victim meanwhile has left the campus and is not talking about the incident. According to several sources, she was a member of the Satan worshippers before she entered college and she was beaten and raped for trying to sever her ties with the group. Another source claims that the woman had been beaten physically in a previous attempt at escaping the sect.

The occult group itself naturally has dropped from public sight in Huntington. Local police told the editor of the campus newspaper, The Parthenon, that the clan "is known to have a very dangerous and frightening initiation ceremony." However, police are reluctant to discuss the nature of these practices because of the ongoing investigation.

"I'm not at liberty to say anything about it (the events surrounding the case) on the phone," said Capt. Noble.

"As far as I'm concerned, we have nothing concrete," said one campus security guard. Marshall University observers say that no other incident of similar intensity has been linked with the Satan worshippers, although one local television station claimed that a stabbing death near the campus last year was connected to the woman's abduction. Capt. Noble denied any connection between the two events.

Despite the presence of the malevolent group, the campus community has not been inundated with paranoia, although The Parthenon editor admitted that many in Huntington are "agitated."

"Nobody's up in arms about it, though," he continued. "I guess there are groups like this all over the country."

Spring was given a "grand welcome" last Friday evening by the Concert Band.

To my understanding roommate, whom living with is a joy (sometimes), I dedicate this so-called poem.

IT'S NOT YOUR FAULT
(Ode To A Roommate)

Though you've made me live in much pain
I'm not the one going to complain.
I've been through worse, as you can tell
I can even put up with your smell.

I've tried to make it plain to see
That sharing, kindness, and trust is the key.
But what can I do, from time to time,
When everything I do, to you, is a crime.

Now I don't want you to think me bad —
A nice, clean, handsome considerate lad.
I can't help it if your nose
Runs all day like a leaky hose!

And the sound it makes, dear me!
Sometimes it can drive me up a tree.
And all your bad habits which I put up with every day,
I'll learn to live with, what else can I say?

I know I'm no angel,
And I don't pretend to be
But what possible faults
Can you see in Me?

I don't snore and I don't smoke —
(Okay, so I tell rotten jokes).
But can't you see, all of these
Come and go as they please.

I don't want you to get upset with me
If I tell you one more grieve.
You know the poster behind the door? —
It's what some would call an eye sore.

One more thing before I close,
Now that I've told your cons and my pros,
I hope you take this with a grain of salt
Because I know, IT'S NOT YOUR FAULT.

Signed,
A. ROOMMATE

enough to travel and visit many places that I hadn't seen before, such as Brasilia, the capitol, and Santos, which is comparable to Ocean City. I also got to participate in "Carnival" again, which is a type of Mardi Gras, but even better. It began on February 19 and lasted until February 22. During this time, Brazil in its entirety stops and parties. During the day people go to their favorite bars to talk with friends or maybe go cruising in their cars. At night, everyone dresses up in costumes (similar to Halloween) and dances in the street. At about eleven p.m., the townspeople migrate to one of the various country clubs in town and dance, drink, and act crazy til five or six in the morning. They then go home and sleep until one or two in the afternoon and start all over again. On the fourth night, when no one really knows or cares what they're doing, everyone jumps into the pool at about six or seven a.m. and then spends the day "sleeping it off" either at the club in the sun or at home.

Brazil, of course, does have many problems, just as all countries do. Some are the same as we have here, others are different. They are having problems with fuel shortage, strict government controls on production and importation of goods, strict controls concerning who can leave and enter the country, coffee being frozen or rained out, inflation, etc. Despite these problems, Brazil is a country that is going to move ahead and become very important in the future. As I've already said, I really love the country and the people, and if everything works out, I'd like to go back there after graduation to live permanently.

Water Water Everywhere...

By Barbara Frezza

The Student Government has played an active part in keeping Juniata College open this winter, when other colleges and schools were forced to close, temporarily, due to the scarcity of fuel oil and natural gas. They have also worked closely with the business office and the students to figure out ways to save energy, avoiding an increase in tuition. These lists of practical suggestions have been posted on each hall by R.A.'s and in Ellis. None of the suggestions are difficult, time-consuming or costly. This is one list it would pay you to read.

There are also several ways the college could do their part to keep fuel bills as low as possible; one of which is to conserve water. I realize that it's impossible to regulate the amount of water each student uses for showering, toothbrushing, toilet flushing and cleaning paint brushes; but it costs money to heat water, and a dripping hot water faucet can waste over $200 of fuel each year. Multiply this figure by six or eight sinks, and at least four showers, and you come out with a figure that exceeds $2000 per bathroom — and this is excluding sinks in basement bathrooms and broom-closets.

Okay, so we'll launch a massive campaign to turn off water faucets that aren't in use to lower our tuition; right? Wrong! Because the rubber washers in the fixtures are cracked or worn, most of the faucets can't be turned off completely. Also, archaic plumbing often causes the metal fixtures to reach ungodly heights in temperature. Replacing these washers each term and as needed would cost the college approximately $100 each year, and would save thousands of dollars in fuel bills.

Another way in which fuel could be saved would be to install more efficient temperature regulators on the hot water heaters. These devices would not allow the temperature of the water to exceed 110 degrees Fahrenheit. Many large apartment buildings have installed these mechanisms, and have found that they've paid for themselves in savings of fuel — sometimes in less than a year. They also eliminate the possibility of severe scalding; which, in dorms like Lesher and Cloister, is a potential health hazard.

I hope that the administration, business office and maintenance staff will take these suggestions into consideration. With the projected rise in the cost of fuel oil and natural gas for this coming winter, we really can't afford to throw money down the drain.

THE GOOD OLE DAYS

(This article was reprinted in a Juniatian of 1967, after being first printed in the Carolinean of the University of North Carolina.)

Wind-up dolls have had their day; magazine hybrids never got started: "would you believe" has been run into the ground — it's time for something new. A new rhetorical pastime suggests itself — exams for the examined. "The examined" are those whose foibles are on the collective lips of the nation. The exams are designed to represent these foibles. The following are several to get the ball rolling.

The Hubert Humphrey exam: You start off with an original thesis, but end up repeating the lectures verbatim.

The Bob Dylan exam: Good answers, but you can't read the handwriting.

The William Manchester exam: You have to cross out half the essay.

The Warren Commission exam: Convincing at first glance, but tends to fall apart on second reading.

The Stokely Carmichael exam: Most of the class flunks.

The George Hamilton III exam: You flunk the exam, but get an "A" in the course.

The Adam Clayton Powell exam: You get caught cheating.

The TIME Magazine exam: Your style is entertaining, but your content is distorted.

The Cassius Clay exam: You get sidetracked by answers which have nothing to do with the course.

The Ronald Reagan exam: The same exam given in two different courses.

The Dean Rusk exam: You repeat the same answers over and over again.

The Beatles exam: You scream as soon as you see it.

The Robert Kennedy exam: Pretty good, but not nearly as good as the last one.

The Johnny Carson exam: The professor interrupts you every ten minutes for further instructions.

The George Romney exam: You decline to answer the most difficult questions.

The Students for a Democratic Society exam: You attack the professor's sex life.

The Bill Moyers exam: You shoot your bolt on the first two questions and leave early.

The Marshall McLuhan exam: Returned with a large question mark.

The LSD exam: You take twelve hours to finish it and two days to recuperate.

The New York City exam: You can't pull any of your answers together.

The Charles de Gaulle exam: You announce to the class that you don't want to take it.

The George Wallace exam: Your girlfriend takes it for you.

The Berkeley exam: You rip up the paper three times and try to start again.

The Draft exam: You try to cut the class.

The Richard Nixon exam: You give ten different answers to each question.

The Martin Luther King exam: You use the same techniques as on the last test, but it doesn't work.

The General Ky exam: You keep asking for more time.

The Jimmy Hoffa exam: You didn't know the material on the others either, but this one you flunk.

Martin Slates Career Fair

Mr. Martin, of the Career Planning Office, announced the date of Juniata's first Career Fair. It will take place on Wednesday, April 20th, 11:00-3:00 p.m.

The purpose of the Career Fair, according to Martin, is to allow students to get information on a particular career from a Juniata alumnus involved in that same field. Alumni will eat lunch at tables in the dining hall which will be specially labeled with the alumnus's particular field. Students will then have the opportunity to eat lunch with the alumnus.

The Career Fair is different from the previous Career Day in that the latter dealt more with recruiting students for specific jobs, rather than giving information and guiding the student toward career goals.

Mr. Martin said that if the response was good, the Career Fair will be repeated in the future. He also stated that an outgrowth of the Career Fair may be a career tape library where students could listen to taped discussions on a wide range of careers.

Hosts and hostesses for the alumni are needed for the Career Fair. Interested students should see Mr. Martin in the Career Planning Office.

The JUNIATIAN

APRIL 28, 1977 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | VOL. XXXII No. 20

Bruce Jenner, 1976 Olympic Gold Medal winner, will appear on May 5 in the Memorial Gym.

Bruce Jenner

Bruce Jenner, the 1976 Olympic Gold Medal winner, will appear on May 5 in the Memorial Gym. Mr. Jenner's lecture program will consist of a combination lecture/movie dealing with his participation in the Olympics. Tickets will be available at the Ellis Hall Information Desk beginning April 28, 1977. Tickets are: all College personnel — $1.00 and non-college personnel — $1.50. Due to limited seating capacity, students are urged to purchase tickets as soon as possible.

It's About Time For Some Consideration

The Concert Committees, Rick Harpster, Cheryl Blazer

With the Pure Prairie League concert less than a week away, it seems appropriate to reflect upon the essential work of Juniata's Maintenance Crew, perhaps the greatest under-rated unappreciated group of hard working individuals at this institution.

The Pure Prairie League concert could not be held at any cost without the volunteered services of the Maintenance Crew, simple and straight forward. "Big Deal" one may say! But consider the following: The Maintenance Crew is going to donate approximately 100 man/hours to construct, test, and disassemble the stage for the performers.

Their contributory effort will not be seen, it will not be considered by many, and will not be paid for. We, the students, simply buy tickets, party before, during and after the concert with the ultimate end being a stupor slumber. This is fine—we're not saying don't. But do consider the Maintenance Crew and their work. Don't make more work for an already overburdened, underpaid group of talented individuals.

Simply put, keep your trash confined to your room and your frustration for the pinball room.

We owe them so much more, because without them, we would not have had the pleasure of Hall and Oates, Bonnie Raitt, Styx, Dave Mason, and now Pure Prairie League.

The Maintenance Crew is made up of devoted individuals. World with them, not against them.

The Week

President Carter dropped his proposed $50 tax rebate for nearly every American. He also withdrew his proposed $2 billion tax credit industries.

Carter's new energy program has run into problems with Congress. Carter proposed a gasoline tax as high as 50 cents per gallon. Also under consideration is a plan to tax between $60 and $125 on cars which emit too much nitrogen oxide.

Lawyers for Richard Nixon argued before the Supreme Court that Congress violated Nixon's privacy and the Constitution by seizing 200 reels of tape and 42 million documents. The Government claimed that the tapes and documents are public property.

The Supreme Court ruled that

Geo Department goes South

The JC Geo Department and principally its petrography class enjoyed a trip to the Smokies of North Carolina and Tennessee from the 14th through the 18th of April. We were mostly interested in studying the outcropping Precambrian crystalline rocks of the Blue Ridge Province of the Appalachians.

Our trip began shortly after an early breakfast on Thursday with 12 rock heads jammed into a rented van. Dr. Washburn and Dr. Sipling were our leaders and guides for this excursion of hard rock delight. Our first destination was the Skyline Drive in Virginia just south of Front Royal. Here we were fact to face with the Pedlar Formation composed of granodiorite; the Catoctin, a metabasalt; the Swift Run which wasn't too exciting and the Hampton Formation of metamorphosed graywackes and shales.

I enjoyed the Catoctin and the Pedlar the most since they were really hard rock. The Catoctin had exposed some really excellent examples of Columnar Jointing and the Pedlar was your usual granodiorite which are always interesting to pick at. Unfortunately we weren't allowed to use our rock hammers in the park which depressed our spirits but we made the most of it by smashing the rocks against themselves to get a fresh surface. You just have to have a fresh surface.

Our camp high in the Blue Ridge was pleasant but a bit breezy. Lloyd, Wayne and myself enjoyed the camping thrill of steaks on a stick cooked over a fire which is something you really ought to try. The rest of the group ate the usual fare cooked over disgusting camp stoves.

The next morning we made a few stops along the Skyline Drive and then a long boring trip to North Carolina. Most tried to sleep, told dirty jokes or said silly things to pass the time but all in all it was pretty boring. And of course, we got lost just when we were getting clost to camp and we were all tired and hungry and irritable. I ate a few Pop Tarts but they didn't help too much. A lot of other munchies were passed around while we watched the beautiful mountains go by that we gave to the Cherokee Indians. We passed a lot of tourist traps including the Museum of the Unexplained and tourist cabins shaped like tepees.

The third day we finally got to use our rock hammers. Joy of joys. We made a couple stops on the way over to Ducktown, Tennessee, collected a bunch of minerals and whaled away at the rock One of our crew was feeling a bit under the weather after having too much fun the night before and we had to stop a couple of times for him to recover his composure.

You know what's in Ducktown? Nothing. Around the turn of the century they used to roast copper ore in the open and the gases and stuff killed everything for 20 miles around. It looks like the Painted Desert minus the cactus or anything else that grows. Very Scenic.

We took a quick trip down to Georgia just so we could say we'd been to Georgia. Next we went back east to make a traverse of the Smokies. Here we saw more slightly metamorphosed graywackes, dirty sandstones for the layman, and shales or phyllites. Went up to Clingman's Dome and took the short hike up to the summit to enjoy the view. Looked at rocks along the way.

The fourth day we headed back north and across the Smokies. But first we stopped at the Spruce Pine Mining District. Here we found a large hole in the ground that Feldspar Mining Co. had made. They were of course mining feldspar. This is a pegmatite locality composed principally of plagioclase feld-

Kulp Sees J.C. As 'Liberal'

By Nancy J. Rowe

Newly elected Student Government President Todd Kulp recently stated that compared to most colleges, Juniata is "extremely liberal."

Todd recently attended the Pennsylvania Independent Student Association in Philadelphia, and found Juniata to be one of the most liberal colleges presented. Eighty to ninety percent of the other colleges attending had no drinking on campus. Many had no student input in the college budget, and others maintained 11:00 curfews for women.

Kulp stated that PISA could greatly help Juniata. The association wants to lobby to increase financial aid to colleges. It is advocating raising PHEAA grants from $1,200 to $1,500. It also hopes to pull more money from public coffers. PISA advocates lowering the drinking age to 18.

President Kulp would like to see Juniata become more involved with student issues in Harrisburg and Washington.

Along Muddy Run

By Dave Brown

A lot has happened in the last week that deserve some time in print, such as the infamous All Class Night and the upcoming Raft Regatta; but through the "grape vine" I have heard a rumor concerning Juniata's alcohol policy.

This college has the good fortune of existing under an alcohol policy that is workable for the students. Last year everything seemed to go fine and the same was true for the beginning of this year, but now one hears rumors flying around campus to the effect that there will be no kegs allowed on campus next year. Why the sudden change in policy? Are things that bad around this campus that the administration has to place a ban on kegs of beer?

What seems to have happened is that some people have carried the alcohol policy to extremes, examples being: during a party a large group of people decided to go outside and mess around, or someone took a keg and put it out on the intramural field. Who's fault is it that the alcohol policy now has to change? The most obvious answer is the students, but that is not the correct answer.

The administration will claim that the students have to take a certain responsibility and rely on their better judgement in throwing a party, but human nature dictates that we humans will take a point as far as it can possibly be stretched and then some. This is precisely what has happened here at Juniata in relation to the alcohol policy, and to make matters worse, the administration did not try to enforce the written policy until the situation got out of hand.

Therefore it is with a certain degree of pleasure that I place the blame on our illustrious administration and ask them to wake up for the sake of the school. This problem is not unsolvable, it's just going to require some time and patience to alleviate the neglect that has run rampant on this fine campus.

Letters to the Editor

Being an active participant in this year's All Class Night for the first time in my three years at Juniata, I unfortunately have to submit to the student body how appalled I was at the raucous behavior exhibited in the Oller Hall audience.

It is the opinion of this writer that the purpose of All Class Night is to offer both the cast and audience an evening of entertainment and relaxation. Instead, what was evidenced in the chaotic audience was a rage of loud, cut-throat, vile remarks, and a total disrespect toward the performing acts.

This is not to imply that a cast member should expect to find an audience with the sophistication more accustomed to a Shakesperean play at England's "Old Vic", but he or she should not be treated like he were a gladiator in a lion's den as was portrayed on the eve of April 16 in Oller Hall! It is both shocking and pathetic to speculate that the Juniata Community has degressed to the point where it will not even allow its own peers to take part in and share a little fun.

New President, New Ideas

By Nancy J. Rowe

Student Government President Todd Kulp has planned and activated many changes for the Juniata Student Government.

Kulp's major goal for the 1977-78 school year is to "bring back an interest in Student Government." Todd feels that the lack of student interest in the past has been because there were no real "issues to fight for."

One way to get more student interest was to revise the Senate structure. Next year, there will be one Senator from each dorm so that students will more readily have "someone to go to" with problems.

Student Grievances is a new Senate Committee that will be activated next year. Such issues as the reliability of the maintenance crews, and the policy on damages will be investigated.

Kulp would also like more input in the college budget. He would like to work towards actual student voting on the budget, although he realizes that this will be difficult to achieve.

All Class Night is a concern of Todd's. He believes that the performances should be for students only. The only non-students, claims Kulp, should be the judges.

Todd would like to expand the Senate's responsibilities to outside the campus. He feels that improvement could be made in the college-town relationship.

Center Board is a major concern with Todd. He feels that the Board must have "free and open" elections rather than the ratification process for the top three executive positions.

Money problems strained relations between the Senate and Board this year. The Board sought monetary aid from the Senate several times, and was turned down. Todd stated that any money not being used by the Senate could go to help the Board.

Todd wants to work closely with Warren Sheer, Vice-Chairman of Center Board, to help better relations between the two organizations. Kulp stated that the Senate and the Board "can do more together....but keep our priorities straight."

President Todd Kulp strongly encourages feed-back on his ideas and those of the Senate. His proposals can only become realities through the backing of an interested and well-informed student body.

Radio City

By Jim Donahue

Due to the largely incompetent and highly psuedo-intellectual posturing of this column's author, he has been fired and expelled from college. A minor skirmish with the Boro Police and a 12-year-old's indignant family have led Mr. Wagoner to bequeath his column to me. ("She told me she was twenty-six," Wagoner told the patrolman.)

The Eagle's album never fail to provide us with a few really BEAT moments, and the last few are prime examples. One of their favorite motiefs being the (now famous) maudlin lushness that has never afflicted their Southern Californian predecessors and mentors (notably the Byrds, Buffalo Springfield, the Dead, Poco) with such nauseating regularity, the Eagles always include a few weepy sleepy dirges that always sound like "The Beach Boys Go To A Funeral". These excesses really blew away much of the merit of their ambitious "Desperado" album; "One of These Nights" was pathetically excessive. The trend is to clean up their act and commercialize-Muzak — wise at the same time; faultless mixing and production can't reconcile these two. Even their best efforts can't shake the expense-account-Cowboy smake-in-the-saddle sound, aided and abetted by the repeated use of a string section on the ballads and elsewhere. (It is a prejudice of mine that Rock and Roll strings are to be found only on guitars — three-chord rock sounds pretty beat on thirty or forty violins.)

The Eagles are basically a seventies rehash of the sixties hybrid called Southern Cal. Rock, or LA-Cowboy Rock-mellow accoustic rhythm guitar complemented by a soft-edged electric and tight rogynous vocal harmonies mixing country and rock. The Byrds and Buffalo Springfield also took stabs at social documentary with their lyrics, and the Eagles continue from a Pop stance-(may Dylan burn in hell for bringing 'relevant hipness' to Billy Haley's medium.

With Hotel California the Eagles dual-pronged attack, good rockers and beat ballads, seems almost natural given the manic-depressive lyric material. The title cut could be a classic of the L.A. Cowboy genre; a disinterested James Dean longer-type arrives at the hotel, a luxurious hideaway on a dark desert highway. Endeavoring to characterize a commercial nouveau-hip-chic and personally bankrupt quotient of society:

Such a lovely place, such a lovely face. . .
Her mind is Tiffany-twisted
she got the Mercedes bends
She got a lot of pretty boys
'that she calls friends...

They insinuate some of the nightmarish but everyday realities that we embrace, as we will next year's trends and GM cars. I cannot listen to this song without thinking of Juniata:

Mirrors on the ceiling
the pink champagne on ice

And she said, "We are all just prisoners here on our own device...

The people in these songs are models of bored bravado and vigorous anonymity — ("They knew all the right people, they took all the right pills"), zombie-personalities delineated soley by their posessions and desires. Juniata's country-clubishness and it's pseudo-relevant value-centeredness find paralles in the Hotel California:

They livin' it up at the Hotel California
What a nice surprise, bring your alibis

If this song has a message, it is kiss-it-off-and-split, if you can; the problem is that some of us have the hotel in our heads and will always be guests, if unwilling or dissatisfied ones:

Last thing I remember, I was Running for the door...
"Relax," said the nightman
"We are programmed to recieve
You can check out anytime
but you can never leave,"

Think about Juniata when you listen to this music — "The Last Resort" "Life in the Fast Lane," and "Wasted Time" may not have anything to do with our hotel at all. It's such a lovely place.

New Courses Offered

By Kathy Jacobs

There will be several changes and additions in the business and economics curriculum for the 77-78 school year. Instead of the Economic Problems courses that have been offered for the past few years, Principles of Micro- and Macroeconomics will be offered. These courses, taught by Dr. Lakso, will still emphasize problem solving, but will offer a broader spproach to economics. "Micro" will concentrate on topics such as the allocation of resources and "Macro" will concern the national issures. One can take either course without the other one, and there is no additional prerequisite for either.

In addition, two upper level economic courses are being offered by Dr. Lakso, Competitive Environment of the Firm is basically economic theory of firm and market structure. The firm will be studied as a decision-maker depending upon the competitive market in which it operates. Also, some industry studies will be used. Either Math Analysis, Calculus I, or a lower level of economics course will be a prerequisite. Federal Economic Policy will be similar to Income and Employment, but not quite as theoretical. Instead there will be some more emphasis on policy analysis.

Small Business Management, taught by Professors Cherry and Wise, will be a course designed to show how diverse the responsibili of a course designed to show how diverse the responsibilities of a small business manager are. There will be an emphasis on the unique kinds of problems that come up for him. This course will involve visits to local businesses; local businessmen will come and talk about their problems with the class. Depending on the size of the class, there may be work study openings downtown. Junior or senior standing will be a prerequisite.

Business Ethics, taught by Professors Cherry and Lewis, will explore the moral problems and social obligations of the businessman. For example, who is he responsible to — society, the stockholders or the employees? The question of who really owns the giant corporations will be studied. Throughout the course there will be an emphasis on philosophical analysis.

The Indians will host the Penn State club this weekend and then travel to Meadville for a rematch with Allegheny on Saturday.

The club is showing substantial improvement and looks forward to continuing that trend through the remainder of the season. Interest in the sport is increasing at both a local and regional level, so the future for Juniata Lacrosse is looking bright.

Icemen Finish With Win

The Juniata Ice Hockey Club finished with a record of 2-3 this year by turning back Dickinson College 5-3. Facing the same team that handed the Indians an 8-5 loss just one week earlier, Juniata came out shooting and grabbed the lead early. Ken Roger opened the scoring with his first goal of the evening, followed by John Wait, throughout the game, a particularly stubborn defense held the lead. Dickinson's two goals in the second frame were answered by Mike Raquet, with one of the goals coming unassisted. Twelve minutes into the final period Ken Roger assisted by Vince Sarni put the game out of reach with his second goal.

The game was more than a victory to the team. It capped a season plagued by scheduling and injury problems. With ice time scarce and practices few and far between, the Indians had trouble coordinating offensive and defensive strategy. In the last game it all came together beautifully.

Next year a league of schools throughout the state has been proposed, and the future looks bright. Running an ice hockey club is costly, however, and your support is needed. The club would like to thank all individuals that participated in the recent faculty dinner auction, and also members of the faculty and administration who helped this season to be successful.

The final team statistics are as follows:

Player	Goals	Assists	Points
Mike Raquet	10	5	15
Vince Sarni	8	1	9
Ken Roger	3	4	7
John Wait	3	2	5
Rodger Quay	1	4	5
Kurt Fischer	2	1	3
Jeff Bloss	0	1	1
Ken Forand	0	1	1

Lacrosse Team Opens Season

The Juniata Community Lacrosse Club is off to a slow start, yet gaining some valuable experience, after its first two games of the 1977 season.

The Indians lost their home opener to Allegheny College by a score of 8-2, in a rather physical game characterized by some hard hitting and numerous injuries. With the score tied at the half 1-1, the Indians were "outhustled" by a combination of hard shots and good ball control on the part of the Allegheny team. Injuries have resulted in the loss of player-coach Bargerstock and goalie, Byron Rodger, for the season. Scoring for Juniata were coach B and Jamie Foster.

This past Saturday, the Indians travelled to Carlisle for a match with the Dickinson College Varsity team. Clearly outclassed, the Indians suffered an 18-1 loss in a game played

D.J. Of The Month At WJC

By Kathy Jacobs

In order to give recognition to their D.J.'s, WJC has decided to pick individuals every month who show that they are exceptionally competent in their positions. They are chosen according to several different criteria. These include technical ability, which measures how they mix music and mix voice and music. Their verbal ability, selection of music and general effect of the show is also considered.

For the month of April, their honor goes to three individuals They are Byron Rodger, Ron Fugate and Nora Muncey. Byron's show is from 9-12 on Wednesdays. He plays "universal classics". He likes to play older songs which everyone likes. He likes rock and particularly Queen, but tries not to let his personal taste interfere with his show. Byron is planning a career in broadcasting and feels that he has gained valuable experience at WJC.

Ron Fugate and Nora Muncey do their show on Mondays from 12-3. Their favorites include Kansas and Gary Wright, but they try to play many top albums along with older music, too. They usually play three or four songs uninterrupted and often give information about local concerts.

Byron, Ron and Nora are all very enthusiastic about WJC going FM. It will make it more worthwhile for everyone, because the listening audience will increase. More people will be able to enjoy our college radio station.

Congratulations Byron, Ron and Nora! We hope that D.J. of the Month will encourage all the D.J.'s to keep on doing a good job.

Val Dove will spend her Junior year in Russia.

Juniata Student Going to Moscow

By Gary Lee Baker

The Soviet Union is one of the biggest cultural, ideological and political mysteries today. This is no wonder with its political system so contradictory to the ideology from which it grew, and the many different nationalities situated within its borders.

One Juniata student has accepted the "challenge" of trying to understand this paradox. Her name is Valerie Dove, and she'll study for one year at the University of Moscow.

Valerie never dreamed of going to Moscow to study the Russian language. She came to Juniata to take a program geared towards pre-law. She took Russian during the winter term of her freshman year. But she found Russian to be addicting and began pursuing it seriously. Now she is in an advanced Russian course in anticipation of next year.

Depending on your values, you might think Valerie is crazy for wanting to go to a Communist country a whole year. It's true, she will be limited in the things she can see and do. She won't be able to roam the country on her own or without special clearance. However, she will see a lot and she believes very strongly that, to learn another culture means understanding ones' own culture better. And this is what Valerie wants to do. She will see our culture from a different perspective. The Russian way of living is the other extreme from the American way. The Russians are ten years behind the Americans in clothing styles and they find such things as bubble gum, frisbees, metal pins with slogans on, jeans (especially those that say Levis or Lee) and ball point pens to be real treats.

Over there she will be representing the American people. Many Russians will judge Americans solely on the way she presents herself. She won't try spreading any American ideology or put down the Soviet system. She has been instructed by her Russian professor, Dr. Dolnikowski, to ask questions all the time. She's to find out all she can about the land she will be staying in. She has been instructed to switch all speaking and thoughts into Russian. This will help on her way to fluency in the language.

Valerie finds Russian to be "fun" and it's a good thing because her first semester at Moscow will be six hours each day of intensive study of the Russian language with mandatory attendance. Her second semester will be spent studying culture, literature and history.

She believes next year will be the toughest year. Her frustrations will run high, she'll be constantly tapped for information about the United States, and the Soviet academic system is not an easy one." "The opportunity is there, so I'm going to take it.' I say, "Good Luck to you Val."

Alex Haley, author of Roots, is facing a lawsuit for copyright infringements. It is claimed that Haley's book is "largely copied" from Margaret Walker's 1966 novel "Jubilee" and paraphrased from "The African" a 1967 novel by Harold Courlander.

Senate Democrats rallied behind President Carter to crush a Republican plan for a permanent tax cut.

Governor Milton J. Shapp has been accused of delaying action on allegations of wrongdoing in the Pennsylvania National Guard. Guard Captain Ray S. Henery claimed that Shapp was informed by letter in 1974 about "dates, times and places" for misuse of state and federal employees and funds. Shapp first claimed to have misplaced the letter and then stated that an investigation turned up no evidence on the allegations.

State Republicans plan to create a new crime commission free of political influence. In the past, Governor Shapp fired a special prosecutor investigating powerful political leaders, some having been the government's allies. The Future of Juniata: The Administration's Expectations

By Mark Wiener with Bess Simmons, Donna Caton, Joann Sandone and Maria Ballantyne

There is always plenty of rumor and speculation on the immediate fate and near future of our college. If you are a senior now, you may have a passing curiosity about what's going to happen to this place once you're gone; an underclassman might be more interested; and a freshman tends to be paranoid. To answer questions and maybe shed some new light, the students of the Journalism division of Professional Writing interviewed different administrators on campus, with questions pertaining to the future size, academics, financial status, etc. of Juniata College. President Binder was interviewed, along with Terry Hartman, Dean of Students; the Provost Wilfred Norris; Tom Snyder, Director of Admissions; and Clay Phaesant of the Development office. These are the results.

Most of the administrators agreed that the greatest determinant of a college's fate is its enrollment, which has been projected down, nation-wide, for at least the next couple of decades. Part of the reason is because the college student of today represents the last faint echo of the post-war baby boom; people aren't mass-producing kids anymore. Add to that the changing attitudes toward the necessity of a college education, the growing availability of non-college diploma jobs, and the inflationary expense of any sort of college education. This "shrinking pool of students," as President Binder calls it, should not have the devastating effect on Juniata as it may on other institutions. To begin with, even if there were an unlikely increase in student population over the next few years, Juniata's enrollment limit is set at 1200. That's the most its facilities can accommodate, and that's the maximum the administration would want, both financially and academically. The "shrinking pool" may also cause some colleges to lower their academic standards. Mr. Snyder said that the Admissions office will "change and intensify" to meet the tooth and claw competition without having to lower standards. At the present Juniata does not have to worry about "growth quotas," it has no new empty dorms to fill, thus Mr. Snyder sees in the near future at Juniata a "comfortable student body around 950 to 1000." However, in order to meet a projection of 1200 by 1980, future recruitment will include canvassing areas such as Maryland, Washington, D.C., and Connecticut, along with the regulars of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware. Terry Hartman also sees an increase of local students due to rising gas prices.

Enrollment at Juniata seems secure, unless there is, as Dean Norris gloomily suggested, a crash in the economy, precipitating a turn to state- and federally; funded schools.

Don't think that a stagnation in enrollment means a stagnation of growth in other areas. Although they will not come as fast and furious as in the 60's, there are several construction projects on the boards, and one of the first is the 17th Street "Humanities Cluster." Clay Phaesant feels this will give the Division I people a setting of their own, with better classroom facilities and offices. Founders will be renovated and the Admissions office will be moved upstairs. Its contemporary, the old Women's Gym, is not worth refurbishing, and will be torn down, or fall down on its own accord. There is also a new sports center planned, which will be connected to the Memorial Gym, and will house a swimming pool, a martial arts room, handball courts, and inter-mural facilities. Dr. Binder thinks a swimming pool would be good for Juniata, but Dean Norris said that it would be a long-range plan. Also up for renovation ate the bleachers in the athletic field.

Juniata should improve academically as well, and the emphasis on the sciences, especially Pre-Med., and the Business department will continue. "Business will continue high," said Dean Norris, "until people discover that that's not the only way to get into business." He feels, however, that Juniata will remain strong-

"We're Going to Make it Work"

By Nancy J. Rowe

"Mainly, what I want to try to do next year is to get more students involved in what's going on, and get more activities for the people." said Lynn Thomas, newly elected Centerboard Chairman.

Thomas hopes to have all the committees and activities organized by the end of this year. This, she claimed, would pick up the interest right in the beginning of the year rather than letting it "die out."

The committee structure of Centerboard will basically stay the same as this year. Lynn claimed that there may possibly be two new committees added: a lecture committee to bring speakers to campus, and division of the present concert committee; one committee to handle big concerts, and one for smaller ones.

"We'd like to see along with the lines of recreation ... things going all year long ... especially in the winter." Lynn hopes to find someone to take over the Recreation Committee before the end of this year.

Lynn sees no drastic Constitutional changes in the future. She pointed out that an alumni holds a vote in Centerboard, yet the vote is not represented at meetings. She feels that this policy should thus be eliminated.

Election procedures also need to be clarified. According to the Constitution, said Lynn, "anyone running for the top three executive offices (Chairman, Vice-Chairman, and Secretary-Treasurer) has to be approved by a two-thirds vote of the Board" before their name goes on the ballot. She stated that anyone who got into one of these offices without the two-thirds vote was "totally going against the Constitution." The new Vice-Chairman won by write-in votes.

Lynn stated that either the two-thirds vote or the write-in vote should not be permitted for these offices. She is not as yet sure which.

Lynn realized this year that the Centerboard-Student Government relations broke down. "I am going to try to keep the relations open and good."

Chairman Thomas said that she saw diversity within this year's Centerboard which hampered its operations. She hopes to have the 1977-78 Board work more as a group.

"Next year we're going to do it. We're going to make it work."

From the Editor

With two more weeks of classes left, the Juniatian has one more issue left. When I look back, what do I think of my year as editor? Well, that is a hard question to answer. Feelings of different kinds appear. It's been a very frustrating year that has required a great deal of patience. I can say that I have learned more about public relations than anything else. People can not imagine the hours required in the beginning of the year to get this paper organized. I used to wonder whether I came to school to study or to act as editor. But it was rewarding to see the final product come out every Thursday, even though there were still frustrations then because of the errors that had occurred.

I could not have gotten through this year without the help of news editor, Dave Corman. Both of us have spent endless hours down in the office which had almost become our second home. Without some very dedicated reporters we would have been in the hole many times. I would like to recognize them now. Because of their dedication and writing skills sophomore Gary Baker, freshman Jerry Keenan and freshman Nancy Rowe have been selected to join the Juniata Chapter of the Society of Collegiate Journalists along with news editor Dave Corman. Another very dedicated reporter is freshman Judy Young and Mindy Anderson, and Greg Ransom.

How do I look up the quality of the paper this year? Well, I can say that I am not happy at all with the results. Overall I would grade it as average, but then again I would say considering all the numerous and continuous shortcomings we have had to deal with throughout the year, I believe we have done a rather good job. The quality has been quite lacking this latter part of the year, but there is only so much we, as editors, can do.

I would like to introduce next year's editor. I have chosen a person who I think will do a very excellent job next year. He is quite qualified for the job since he was editor-in-chief for three years of his high school paper. He was awarded the Most Valuable Staff Member by the American Newspaper Association and has attended a journalism workshop at Glassboro State College, N.J. This year he has been one of my very dedicated staff members. He was Photo Manager for both the Juniatian and the Alfarata. This person is freshman Jerry Keenan.

I know Jerry will do an excellent job next year. I have high expectations for him. I know he can make the Juniatian go a long way. At least he'll have some advantages I didn't have back in September. He knows about journalism and he has some kind of a staff to start with. It won't be like me who had no journalistic knowledge and absolutely no staff to start with. It was a beginning completely from scratch. It was like throwing a baby in the water and watching it trying to swim. That's how this year has felt to me.

Next week's paper will be produced completely by Jerry and his new staff.

Congratulations Jerry! I wish you and your staff all the luck in the world! I thank my staff for their work and the Juniata Community for reading and responding to the paper. Have a nice summer everyone and good luck seniors!

Respectfully,
Evagelia "Teddy" Lyras

ly liberal arts oriented, and Mr. Snyder cautioned students, especially in the Humanities, not to think Juniata will become a science or business school. He thinks that strength of some departments over others is cyclic, according to interests and job opportunities, and he would not be surprised to see growth in some other departments, such as education.

Financially, the college is holding its own, and is operating in the black. But with the rise in fuel costs, (Hartman reported that our fuel bill had increased 250%), and other resources, there are certainly no promises of no future tuition hikes. The college will also be forced to "tighten the belt," a squeeze that may be felt in the amount of financial aid made available to students. This does not mean, however, that Juniata will become an institution only for those who can afford a $5000 plus a year education, the administration wants to keep, according to Tom Snyder, a "heterogeneous grouping of people on campus, in terms of their socio-economic background and geography as well." In all, aid should remain constant with the college's resources. Dean Norris feels there is a need to continue with an aggressive funding program, but we are still academically and fiscally sound, and the colleges that show strength now will be the ones which remain strong in the future.

38 Started . . .

By Tom Menello

April 30th marked the day for Juniata's annual Raft Regatta under the direction of Recreation Chairman Mitchell Wells. Over 38 rafts and 200 people left the starting point for the seven mile "race" down the Juniata River. Out of the 38 rafts, one broke up and one is still unaccounted for.

Thirty-seven rafts were in competition. Bruce Davis, Terry Hartman, and Bob Reilly judged the rafts on theme, construction, originality and speed. The speed proved to be the most important factor, as raft captain Dave Ward led his Indian raft to victory with an outstanding time of one hour and twenty minutes. Dave and his crew were awarded the top prize of $100.00.

In second place was the "Argo Merchant" captained by Tom Draude. Third place went to "River Queen," an ingeniously-constructed raft complete with paddle wheel, captained by Sandra Taylor. Mick Stone led the "Sherwood Buccaneers" into the fourth position. The "Pink Panther," piloted by Georgette Gildea, and unnamed raft number 9 captained by Eric Hauenstein, finished out the money winners.

Money was not the only motive for the river riders to challenge the treacherously calm river; who could resist the chance to forget the books and drift along in the quiet breeze and basking sunlight?

Ms. Chris Mackinlen of Edinburgh, Scotland will be working in the Beeghly Library through June 30.

Scottish Librarian Arrives at Juniata

By Judy Lee Young

As a result of a wonderful idea that she had, Ms. Chris Mackinlen, of Scotland, is here for a short stay. Ms. Mackinlen, herself English, has lived in Edinburgh (pronounced "Edinborough"), Scotland, for some time, where she works as a librarian-cataloguer at Queen Margaret College. Recently, Ms. Mackinlen had found herself with more and more freedom as her family grew up and became independent, and she decided to try to change places on a temporary basis with another librarian of the United States. When talking about the exchange, she commented, "I wanted to use the freedom I have now ... I decided I would like to do this."

To set her plan in motion, she put an advertisement in an American college librarian's journal, stating that she was a librarian-cataloguer interested in an exchange of jobs and localities. Ms. Mackinlen expected to receive several replies from curious people and perhaps two or three from people serious about the exchange. She did not expect to receive nothing in reply, but that is what she got (which possibly reflects on how closely the majority of American college librarians read their journals). However, four months later, after she had lost much of her hope for the idea, she received an answer from Robert Sabin, who, as is probably known, is the head librarian of Juniata. They decided to switch duties from April 13 'til June 30.

So, at this time, Mr. Sabin is working at Queen Margaret College, in Edinburgh, Scotland, and living in Ms. Mackinlen's apartment, while Ms. Mackinlen is staying in Mr. Sabin's house. She seems very happy about the exchange — "just to be here and to experience what it's like to work in a small college" — and we are very happy to have her here. Although travelling and sightseeing were not what she had in mind when she arranged for the exchange, Ms. Mackinlen will remain in the U.S. awhile after her duties here are completed in order to visit friends in California.

We congratulate Chris Mackinlen on the success of her idea, and hope she has an enjoyable stay.

British Rock Specials at WJC

On May sixth and seventh from 6 to 9 p.m., WJC presents "The British Beat: Parts 1 and 2," hosted by Mike Hars. Part One on Friday night will be a chronology of the British rock scene from 1964-69. Groups like The Beatles, The Stones, The Who, and some obscure groups like The Nice and King Crimson will be featured. Part Two on Saturday night will be a collection of music from 1970-73. This part will feature Argent, Free, Frampton's Camel, and McCartney with the original version of "Maybe I'm Amazed."

Mike first got the idea of putting together a show like this from a friend who loaned him some albums. He had some free time and decided to produce a show that would enlighten us as to the effect of British sound on the American buying public. Throughout the show Mike will be talking about some history of the groups, as well as some interesting facts about the artists. For example, did you know that Wings guitarist Jimmy McCulloch found his start in a group produced by Pete Townsend (The Who) called Thunderclap Newman?

Next year we can look forward to Part Three in this series. What a good opportunity this is for Mike to express his knowledge and creativity in terms of enjoyment and interest for us.

Class President Optimistic

By Nancy J. Rowe

The Juniata student body recently elected their class officers for the 1977-78 school year.

All four classes are responsible for a Homecoming float, decorating the cafeteria and a building at Christmas, and All Class Night.

The Class of 1978 will be under the leadership of President Wendy Jacobus. Wendy hopes to "bring the four classes together ... like a community" to get the whole campus involved in various activities.

Wendy proposed having a Halloween party complete with costumes, games, and dancing in the fall. For spring, she would like to see the return of a party after All Class Night.

Wendy claimed that she did not have "any magic formulas" for getting students involved, but pointed out that the variety of lifestyles and attitudes of the class officers could "pull everyone together."

President Jacobus will be helped by Vice-President Charlie Koren, Secretary Claire Swavely and Treasurer Marianne Porsch.

Mike McGaughey was elected President of the Class of 1979. He would like to see "better cohesion among the class." He placed importance on the monthly meetings of the class officers, so as to open the floor to suggestions.

Mike sees the sponsoring of more dances and parties a "good way to make money (and) enhance the social life."

President McGaughey said that he hopes to hear members of the class "telling me their complaints." He would like to expand his duties to "look into policy problems" such as cars on campus, and off-campus living restrictions.

The Class of 1979 also elected Vice-President Louie Gibbons, Secretary Wendy Wunsch and Treasurer Dot Trozialeck.

The Class of 1980 elected Calvin Rhodes as their President. Calvin felt that the freshman class was slightly disorganized, but that this was typical for the first year. He saw the class, however, as "very successful" in their endeavors. Calvin hopes to "try to do as good" in 1977-78 and hopes to "have the support that we did this year." The other class officers are Vice-President Marj Porter, Secretary Sharon Scott and Treasurer Debi Woodling.

The Class of 1981 will elect their class officers next year.

Outlook on Class of '87

Recently there has been a good deal of confusion concerning this coming year's admission policies: how many students will enroll at Juniata? How many freshmen? As for transfers: will an increased number of students be leaving?

Thomas D. Snyder, Director of Admissions at Juniata, has helped answer these questions. He describes a goal of receiving 390 new students (including freshmen) this coming year — last year 398 students arrived. These figures of incoming students represent the college's capacity to which it can room them. Additional space will be needed if the turnout is much more than the estimated goal. Another bit of information revealed by Mr. Snyder concerns students leaving Juniata. He said that there probably would not be a significant increase in the number of transferring students.

Mr. Snyder recently returned to Juniata after having been away for four years. Even though he had been making more money then, he decided to come back. Why? "'Cause I felt strongly about this place," he said, "many people feel the same way." He has been here since at least 1968; nonetheless he contends that he has seen very little change — in quality and background. "To an extent, I think that's good ... it's what makes Juniata attractive."

In sum, Mr. Snyder looks at the future of education with "cautious optimism." He admits that "we're going to have to work harder than we ever have," in order to keep up the academic standards. He sees hope, however, for if he did not, he would never have returned.

Jenner Visits Juniata

By Carol Tolbert

Bruce Jenner, 1976 Olympic Gold Medal Winner, arrived at Juniata at about 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, May 5. His lecture began around 8:30 that evening in the Memorial Gymnasium. Following the lecture he attended a press conference and afterwards, a dinner. Mr. Jenner left campus at 7:15 a.m. the next morning, with a flight to catch at 8:20 to his home in California, near Hollywood.

Mr. Jenner was never a great athlete in high school or college. He did, however, play football and basketball; he also waterskied. Because he became so involved in athletics, he then started training for the Olympics in 1971.

When questioned whether or not he thought women would ever perform as well as men in the Olympics, Bruce Jenner replied negatively. Unless women's hormone intake increases (artificially administered), he doubted that their performance would surpass that one of the men.

His opinion was also asked of the Olympic Committee: was it fair to the athletes — in funds, coaches, travel? He said no, that it could use a reconstruction. He also mentioned that a lot of pressure is being put on the committee to change. As a result, the issue becomes whether or not the U.S. really wants to win; it must make the decision.

Mr. Jenner was also inquired whether or not he thought professional athletes should be allowed to compete in the Olympics. In return he stated, "Yeah, they are now," adding that those who compete in the Olympics actually already are professionals to some extent.

According to senior David Laird, who helped in escorting Bruce Jenner, the track star presented himself as "very personable" and somewhat informal as well. He also added that Mr. Jenner made the students feel at ease, that Mr. Jenner was trying to keep an open image, avoiding stereotypes.

David Laird further commented that Bruce Jenner does not always enjoy competition. Mr. Jenner, for example, had expressed a concern that "everyone's trying to compete with me."

As of now, Bruce Jenner is involved in a large number of activities. To begin with, he plays a good deal of tennis; he is also in the process of setting up some tennis tournaments. Next, he is working with the Olympics Committee, as well as trying to make a Wheaties contract last ten years. This is so that his popularity will be extended for those years. Other present activities include having a good time and working with a special Olympics for handicapped people.

The Week

Richard M. Nixon, interviewed on national television by David Frost, confessed that he lied about Watergate, made wrong decisions, and let the "American people down." Nixon claimed that he did not intentionally try to cover up the scandal, but only to "politically contain" it in order to protect innocent people. Mr. Nixon also refused to admit committing any impeachable offense.

Governor Milton J. Shapp, whose administration has been called the most currupt in Pennsylvania's history, reacted by saying "there is far less corruption in my administration than in previous administrations." He believes that the accusations stem from a post-Watergate era in which the public is more aware of rooting out corruption. More than a dozen Shapp appointees have been charged with crimes.

Over 75 college students demonstrated on the steps of the Pennsylvania state capital demanding more money for higher education. The students, representing 14 state colleges, fear that Gov. Shapp's proposed budget for fiscal year 1977-78 will lead to higher tuition at the colleges and IUP. The students burned blank admissions applications and spent the night on the capitol steps.

Along Muddy Run

Ed. Note: This week's "Along Muddy Run" was written by Barb Frezza.

One of the more bizarre rites of spring at Juniata College is the ritual involved in senior graduation. I regret that this article has come too late to adequately warn this year's graduating class of the traumatic experiences in store for them. I hope that this article will keep the class of '78 — as well as following classes — from being shocked out of their hard-earned case of "senioritis."

Graduation exercises are a remnant of medieval torture that every senior must endure to receive a diploma from Juniata College. It begins with the five-page memo that unceremoniously appears in all seniors' mailboxes. Since students are conditioned as freshmen to throw out college junk mail — with the exception of book bills, tuition, and lab fees — into the nearest trash can without bothering to read them, they panic when they find out that the administration has something "relevant" to say. After rooting through the closest trash can to see if one of the five-page didactic memorandums can be found, one finds a detailed outline of the graduation ceremonies — replete with times, places, prices and people who are admitted to each event.

The first item of importance on the agenda tells seniors that the rental fees for their caps and gowns are $35. as well as the cost of the diplomas (For $4600 a year you'd think they would be included free of charge!) Caps and gowns are necessary if they wish to participate in the, uh, "festivities."

When they first pull their gowns out of their boxes they are invariably wrinkled beyond any resemblance to wearable apparel. This will necessitate an ironing; which is a rather difficult feat if, like most of the guys on campus, they are used to "wash-n-wear" or "perma-wrinkle" fabrics. If they do not own irons and can not get anyone to iron their gowns for them, the next best solution is to press the gowns on the basement steam pipes or drench the garments and let them drip-dry in the boiler room. This process will probably have to be repeated three times.

Unlike many larger institutions dedicated to higher education, Juniata gives its seniors — not one, or two, but three opportunities to self baste in basic black: Senior Convocation, Baccalaureate and Commencement.

Senior Convocation is primarily an awards presentation ceremony. Although some persons find it boring, it is the most bearable of the three. All interested persons may attend; seniors are expected to do so.

The Baccalaureate is a religious ceremony — replete with sermon. For many seniors, it will be the first time they will have attended anything even remotely connected with a religious ceremony in their four years at Juniata. Attendance by seniors is mandatory.

Commencement is the grand finale, great expectations and the last hurrah all rolled into one. It's the ceremony where seniors are told that they should not think of their college educations as ends, but as beginnings. It is also a monumental exercise on the part of graduating seniors to sit and suppress yawns through God only knows how many speeches. Attendance by seniors is mandatory if they expect to receive their diplomas. (I was informed that this ceremony was open to anyone wishing to attend, but please doublecheck me on this.)

The idea of graduation may seem depressing — and even frightening to some seniors. It means leaving four years of good times with good friends, as well as leaving favorite professors and memorable academic experiences. Where do they go from here? Even if they know what their plans for the future are, the path they will travel can still be uncertain. The rest of this little speech (or some facsimile thereof) will probably be delivered by one of the seniors' Commencement speakers. But it will all have been worth it once they march down that aisle to the tune of "Pomp and Circumstance" their hard-earned diplomas in their hands at last.

Editorial

By Gary Lee Baker

There are many things wrong with Juniata College. It's no wonder since Juniata is so small in population and operates on a very tight budget. However, a lot of Juniata's problems go unsolved for the sole reason that those people who could solve them do not know they exist. This is where we (the students) come in. It is up to us to point these problems out. If a student has a complaint about some aspect of the college there are many people who can help. There is an R.A. on every dorm floor. Next year there will be a senator in every dorm. Student Government officers will be President Todd Kulp, Vice-President Jami Godshall, and Centerboard Chairman Lynn Thomas. The administration is centralized on the First Floor of Founders Hall. The professors offices are situated in Founders, Good, the science center, and Swigart. The office of the Director of Housing is in the Tussey lounge area. All of these people can help with almost any problem that arises.

I'm proud to tell people that I go to Juniata. I know that it is no easy place to work through. People who are familiar with Juniata know that the academics are hard and of a good quality. If I graduate, I will feel that I have completed a very difficult task. When I describe our college to people they think Juniata must be a great place. I tell them about "storming the arch," the Raft Regatta, All Class Night, coffee houses where beer is served, making your room the way you like it, having a Program of Emphasis instead of majors, and many other things.

Juniata is a great place. This is our college. However, she still has some poor aspects. We, the students, make Juniata what it is. Therefore, it is up to us to point these problems out to the people who can correct them. It's too late to try and do it this year, so let's start fresh in the Fall.

Letters to the Editor

After hearing the comments of students, administrators, and trustees, it seems that most people have misinterpreted last week's article on what I called Juniata's "Liberalism." It appears that most people identify Liberalism with Radicalism, and that the word "Liberal" was the wrong word choice to begin with. What I meant was that the Administration and Trustees have shown that they respect student rights more as compared with other private schools. This, as interpreted by some, does not make Juniata Sin City. Far from it. What it does make Juniata, is a college with an extra dimension. It gives students responsibility to themselves and to others.

Respectfully,
Christopher Todd Kulp

Dear Jerry,

Despite the overwhelming pressure of "senioritis" and spring fever, I have managed to write this hopefully short but pertinent piece of nostalgia! I know you said to keep it low on sentimental gush; I will try, but, after all, this is an "exit article ..."

I will not get into "remember when's" or the academic and social merits (or disadvantages) of the four-year Juniata experience. I am sure the latter has provided endless hours of conversation and argument for any student here, and my opinion applies to my experiences exclusively. So I don't intend to bore. (I enjoyed and learned from it, in case you are wondering.) The "remember when's" can be saved for another two or three years.

What I would mention is how important I have discovered this place to be in terms of my relationship to other persons — and I would say that is true for most of us who have reached this point in our college experience, whether we realize it or not. Juniata has the distinction of being a small, liberal arts college in a somewhat isolating geographic environment. The implications are important: the individual has the unavoidable opportunity to at least recognize most of the college community, and to acquaint and even intimately involve himself with some of them.

The chance for involvement runs high — so does the risk of being hurt and hurting in return. But, as I see it, the ability to understand oneself and others which can be gained from involvement is undeniably worth it — if one takes the chance and tries to understand what happens.

Many of us will not comprehend the importance of our friendships and disappointments until after we have left this place; but I am convinced that how we have helped and hurt one another will determine how we handle our relationships yet to come. Perhaps it's true that we never really understand the meaning of hello until we say goodbye.

I think one of my few regrets is to have only had a short time to meet friends like you, Jerry, and then to say goodbye so soon. Take care, and good luck with the newspaper!

Sincerely,
Dave Corman

Andy Murray presented several great selections to open the Pure Prarie League Concert.

Pure Prarie League members received a foot-stomping reception at their May 3 concert.

Juniata Concerts — A Trial Run

The Pure Prarie League concert was more than an entertaining experience. It was supervised by the trustees. If things went well the concert program at the college would continue, if the students misbehaved the program would be stopped. The trustees were not interested in the performances of Pure Prarie League and Andy and Terry Murray, they were interested in how the students acted. This supervision was one of the reasons for the increased security for this concert. Not wanting to jeopardize our concerts everytime a match was lit, a stream of light hit the suspect. As a result the concert was run trouble free and no problems resulted. If the trustees weren't happy with the way the students acted there is no pleasing them.

Activities got underway when Andy and Terry Murray took the stage. I listened curiously to their music, I have never heard them except for their album put out last year. I was surprised with the wealth of talent this husband and wife team emits. With Andy on the guitar and Terry on the piano I enjoyed the sampling of their music. Since they only played for a half-hour they had to be somewhat selective in their repertoire. Terry was disappointed that she didn't get to play a new piano piece that she was working on. Andy's songs were written about people he had known, people who were a part of his life. This fact alone made it worthwhile to listen closely to their lyrics.

A clever part of Andy and Terry's act was the introduction of their odd percussion instrument, the dancing doll, it made me feel like I was a kid again. Audience participation was required for the watermelon song. How about it Andy, do we like watermelon? Good luck on your new album and your careers.

Pure Prarie League set the scene for an evening of foot-stomping delight. Their traveling style of music had a moving effect on the audience. I found it hard to remain seated, I had to get up and move to their music. The band felt that the audience was receptive to their older songs but, "A lot of people weren't familiar with our new songs."

I was curious why Pure Prarie wanted to play at Juniata. They said that the band really had nothing to do with their engagements. "Our booking agent is the largest around." Speaking of their performance they said, "We had a nice groove going between the band members, and we had a good time."

Unknown to many people the concert we heard on Tuesday was being recorded by the band. The songs that we heard, not that particular recording, are going to be on their next album. This upcoming live album will have the best cuts from all of their concerts. If the songs are as good as the ones we heard, it will be one fine album.

Many thanks to this year's concert committee headed by Paul Endress and Ken Rogers. They proved to us that with a lot of work and student concern the concert program at Juniata can be a success. I hope that Music Imports uses this year's committee as an example of how well the program can be run.

Class of '80 to Rule?

By Tom Menello

The end of the year is not only the time to look at past accomplishments, but also to look toward the future. Indications show that the 1977-78 school year will be dominated by the new sophomore class.

Student Government and Centerboard will be led by Todd Kulp and Lynn Thomas respectively — both from the Class of 1980. Kulp has already initiated positive changes which indicate well organized and responsive leadership in the Senate. Thomas will hopefully bring fresh ideas and reforms to the Board.

The 1977-78 "Juniatian" will be published under the editorship of sophomore Jerry Keenan. Jerry has an excellent background with student publications, having been voted the Most Valuable Staff Member by the American Newspaper Association. This year, Jerry, as a freshman, was also elected to join the national Society of Collegiate Journalists.

Dan Caton will be Program Director of WJC Radio next year. Dan, a member of the Class of 1980, has become very dedicated to the campus's only broadcast media.

Have I missed any areas? Probably so. The Class of '80 has shown involvement and dedication in all aspects of Juniata life from academics to sports. It will probably be said that freshmen are always optimistic and involved their first year. But their enthusiasm should still be applauded. Hopefully it will move the whole student body to a new surge of involvement and ideas in the future.

The honored court of the Annual May Day Breakfast was presented May 2.

May Day Breakfast

By Judy Lee Young

On Monday, May 2, the annual May Day Breakfast was held. About forty ladies of the faculty, staff, and alumni joined 216 Juniata students for breakfast to honor some of the outstanding people of the past year. This year's honored guest was Mrs. Barbara M. Rowe, director of personnel services and director of conferences at Juniata.

After the welcome, given by Bev Martin, and Grace, given by Carolyn Setzer, a breakfast of scrambled eggs, bacon strips, blueberry muffins, and orange juice was served. Following the breakfast, Mrs. Marsha Frye Hartman, the guest speaker, entertained the breakfasters with tales of her long association with Juniata. Katie Middleton introduced Mrs. Barbara Rowe as the guest of honor, and then the May Day court was presented. This year's court was:

Mindy Anderson, escorted by Eric Jensen

Marj Porter, escorted by Carl Glaeser

Annalisa Mulhollen, escorted by Steve Svarczkopf

Marianne Porsch, escorted by Dave Corman

Priscilla Grove, escorted by Greg Ransom

Elaine Joyce, escorted by Ed Flynn

Laurie Wausat, escorted by Bob Dintruff, and, for the Man and Woman of the Year, Mardi Frye and Rob McGregor.

We would like to congratulate all the members of the court, and all of the people on the Planning Committee. As for the twenty servers, we would like to join Katie Middleton in giving "a special thank-you to these gentlemen for getting up so early just to serve for breakfast."

THE GOOD OLE DAYS

This article was first printed in a Juniatian, Wed., October 23, 1940 A FOOTBALL GAME, OR, WHAT YOU DON'T KNOW WON'T HURT

Wal, the other day my cuzzin Hennery cum over to see me an he sez, "Cuzzin, I'm a hankerin' to go over to Pottsville." An I wonders why an he sez its ta see a new-fangled game called football. Now I aint intrested in nothin like ut, but one of my city relashuns sent me a book (a diary) to show to posteriky er sumpin an I mite get sumpin new to put in on account of Hedekiah teachin me ta rite, so I sez OK, so we went.

When we cum there we went to a big wiid fence which young-uns were standin at an lookin thru the holes of. But Hennery an me went to a place in the fence where a man sez, "2 for one fifty," so Hennery gave him one fifty cent piece, after which there was a slight argument which my dere Cuzzin won by a punch in the noze.

When we got inside people was yellin an throwin stuff an sum fellers were out in frunt of everybody in a big field with white lines runnin every which over it. Nothin much went or cum off either fer sum time. One big feller kinda hawged the ball of which there was only one fer about umpteen fellers. Iffen I could count I wud give eggzact figgers but I cant so the big feller takes the ball and lays it on the ground an makes the other fellers line up on two sides. The he blows a wistle an one feller takes hold of the ball an throws it to the fellers on his side an the feller runs to the other side an they ketch him an all pile up on him. Then sum one sez, "one down an six to go," but there is several down an I do not ketch on. Then the big feller makes them all get up an give him the ball an line up again.

This goes on for sumtime wile the fellers hug each other an trip each other an ack very nice sumtimes an very nasty at others. The contine suchly to one end of the field at which time everyone again yells and throws stuff an acks generally crazy so I gets a new hat which fits kinda low over my eyes but in a purty culler like our new hawgs. Purty soon one feller gets the ball an runs away out at one end an people are ver histerical but for me an Hennery who do not see any sense in them being so happy on account of one feller tries to run away with the ball. Then everyone goes to the middle of the field an after a while things go on as before but we dont see nuthin excitin until we see the feller who sez, "two for one-fifty" when we cum in. He is cumin toward us an he is very mad an he has 2 men in blue suits an shiny buttons an they also look very mad. We start off very fast an they sez, "Halt, in the name of the law" but Hennery an me we seen that them was genuwine city slickers — an we dont want nuthin but to get away — so we did.

Concert A Success

By Twig

The recent concert held in Memorial Gym may well prove to be the forerunner of many to come. As far as financially there is no question that the concerts are profitable. However, the issue at hand last Tuesday night was student conduct during the affair. A well regulated troop of security guards kept the few rule breakers in check. On a student to student level all that security often had to do for results was ask people not to do whatever they were doing wrong. This clearly shows that the student concert viewers can be patroled by their own members so that all may enjoy the privilege of watching a concert.

To many, the meaning of a concert is quite different. The writer of this article would guess that this was a very unusual type of concert from that a trustee would visualize. True, the meaning of a concert today is only music. It could be anything from Mozart to The Rolling Stones (if either were still playing).

The revolution of the 60's is dead. No longer do sparks ignite an entire student body to protest. Today the fire has to get hot first. The concerts are not going to cause trouble. Having to choose to see the same concert in a stadium full of unknown rowdies or a gym full of fellow students the writer picks the latter hands down. The type of people at a large public concert automatically excludes many people from seeing some of their favorite musicians. However the atmosphere at a Juniata concert is favorable and friendly so that all may participate. Those that would attempt to change this are dealt with by the security patrol.

Let us talk realistically for a moment. Consider all of you; students, trustees, and administrators the word education and what is meant by the phrase "an educated person." Juniata prides itself on the educational experience it presents, i.e. the total effect. As one excellent professor of chemistry said, "Seeing a concert is as much a part of your education as is what you do in the classroom." He is excellent because he knows his subject well and has found an appreciation for the quest of other knowledge. Concerts can only help the student to see the world more clearly. This must be preserved if we still stand on the words written in Latin of the college seal.

SBO-A Pace Setter

By Kathy Jacobs

The Student Business Organization proved to be a very effective club this year. The students completed quite a few projects and at the same time, had the opportunity to pursue some of their own interests.

SBO, under the guidance of Andy Bargerstock, had about 55 members. The club split into small groups, each with a task to accomplish. One group worked on advertising for the yearbook. They sold more ads this year than last. Another group planned and promoted the Career Fair, which was very successful. One group organized a recent Alumni Seminar at Camp Blue Diamond. For a fund raising project another group organized the film festival, which was very well attended. Some students were on the scholarship committee, in charge of seeking sources for business-related scholarships. (In order to obtain one, see Mr. Bargerstock for an application.) Other students were in charge of promoting these projects through the various media on campus.

Next year's officers: Mike Boozer, Mark Woyner and Mamie Dixon are encouraged by the student's efforts, and have new ideas in store. All students in Business are urged to join, and anyone else with an interest in it, too. It's really a great chance to get involved with out-of-class experiences, which benefit the individual, as well as the group.

ERA: Will Big Business Be At The Finish Line?

By Helaine Lasky

(CPS) — While many people are aware of the anti-ERA movement spearheaded by the Catholic Church and Phyllis Schafly of the national organization Stop ERA, few are alert to the interest business, particularly insurance companies, have shown through their funding the opposition.

Wiped out in Nevada and North Carolina only recently and dragged down by such continued resistance, the Equal Rights Amendment just may not get to go the distance. Time is running out on the March 22, 1979 deadline when 38 states will have had to approve the 27th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. But to date, only 35 states have said yes.

Elinor Langer, in a well-documented article in Ms. Magazine, points out that the corporate powers-that-be are worried that strict enforcement of the ERA could raise payroll costs. Langer obtained figures which are not available from any government or industry source:

"If in 1970 women who worked had earned the same amount per hour as men who worked, it would have cost employers an additional $96 billion in payroll alone. That figure assumes that women and men are working at comparable jobs and receiving equal pay, but it does not include equalizing their hours.

"If women had earned the same as men and worked the same number of hours, the addition to the payroll would have been $303 billion."

Clearly, says Langer, "the Equal Rights Amendment and the traditional role of women in the capitalistic economy are incompatible."

The ERA had been doing fairly well in the early 70's. By January, 1973, the amendment had been dramatically ratified by 22 states in one year alone and had the endorsement of such unions as the United Auto Workers and AFL-CIO. But suddenly on November 4, 1975, voters of New York and New Jersey turned down the ERA and winning was no longer something taken for granted.

What did the amendment's opponents fear? Former Senator Sam Ervin worried that the passage of the ERA would result in a larger transfer of powers

Study Abroad in Oxford, England — Lynne Church

I was reading my weekly essay on some one of the Canterbury Tales, "One can easily envision ..." when suddenly my tutor interrupted with, "Noll You cannot say that! There is no such word as "envision," the correct word is "envisage." I, trembling, apologized, said I had never known that, but that I was quite sure that I had heard "envision" used at home. Nevertheless, I was quite emphatically wrong. I have since looked the word up and found it in the Random House Dictionary of the English Language, but it is not listed in The Oxford English Dictionary, which is where it would have to be for my tutor to have accepted it.

This scene took place last year in Oxford, England, where I was attending Warnborough House College, a school set up primarily to make profit, but also to give students exposure to the Oxbridge tutorial system. Oxford and Cambridge do not accept students on a part-time basis; one either attends for the entire degree course of three years, or one does not attend at all. None of this "junior-year-abroad" business is acceptable. Various schools have taken advantage of the fact that Oxford will not accept students for only one year by offering one year courses themselves. These courses are more or less similar to those of the actual institution, depending on the school that offers them. I had been thinking for a while that I would like to "get away from" Juniata, go abroad while I could still afford to (generally speaking, it is as cheap or cheaper to go abroad to school as it is to attend Juniata; lower tuition compensates for most traveling expenses.) When I saw Warnborough House advertized, I jumped at the chance to experience Oxford's tutorial system. I am glad I did.

Warnborough House is not the most exciting place to live (in the middle of the first term, another student made a sign referring to it as "Worn and Borrowed House"); indeed, some students were quite disappointed with it. The only electric sockets in the house were in the hallways, one per floor, to be shared by four students each. There were other minor inconveniences, such as those which might be expected to arise when twelve students do their own cooking, using one small refrigerator and one small stove. But no matter how many complaints there were I never heard any of the students say he was sorry he had come. Oxford itself is too exciting for a building or a school system to get a person "down."

The school work itself at Warnborough House was exciting too (I happen to be one of those people who enjoy learning). The scene described at the beginning was a typical one with that tutor. I was quite intimidated by him. I used to read my essays as quickly as possible, hoping he would miss any mistakes I had made; he seldom did. At the same time, I loved learning from him, he seemed to know so much! I felt sometimes like a child, wanting only to please him with some brilliant insight. He was an old-fashioned, highly intellectual, well-read man, much more formal than any teacher I have ever had, despite the essentially informal situation of the tutorial. I had other tutors too of whom I was not frightened. Some were Oxford tutors like him; some were not. I took two or three courses each term. For each course I met with my tutor one hour a week and did research and essays the rest of the time, one essay being due for each tutorial. It could be very difficult, it could be less so, depending on the tutor and on the student. At the actual university, the normal load for an eight week term is one course.

But one can hardly go to England and spend all one's time working in a library. And I did not, though sometimes I felt as if I were. Not only is the university a new experience, the town is also. I thoroughly enjoy the theater (or theatre) and I attended plays produced by professionals for as little as $1.50. Oxford is about sixty-five miles from London, a two hour bus ride, so we had all the advantages of the city within reach. I paid $7.00 for an excellent seat at Harold Pinter's No Man's Land, I also went to a performance of Handel's Messiah, free, in St. Paul's Cathedral. Oxford has some really great stores with some bargains by American standards. At the same time, she has her own Woolworth's, offering bargains of a different sort. And then there are the pubs. These are quite unlike American bars, much more respectable. Some are neighborhood gathering places. One near where I lived, for instance, had an organ which all the old folks in the neighborhood played and sang to each night. Some are much more elegant, with such extras as live music, where one might go out for the night. There was also what might be called the ordinary pub, where many people would go for lunch. It sometimes seems that most of the intellectual activity that goes on in Britain, goes on in the pubs.

Finally there are the people, most of whom seemed to be very curious about America, associating it with the Boston school integration incidents of last year (or with the old west), to which we could only say "What about the IRA?" It was fun trying to set them straight. Of course the students were much like all students. Though Oxford claims to be the only town with its grafiti written in Latin, I saw plenty of grafiti and none of it seemed any more intellectual than that which can be found right here. There were several English students living in the house next to ours. They had a stereo, something which we were forced to live without, and they had wonderful parties where the sherry flowed almost as freely as beer at a JC party. The parties had a special English flavor, something which needs to be experienced to be understood. Even the tea parties were much more fun than any of the Americans had expected them to be. Something different: an American over there is considered just as exotic as an Englishman is here; that makes the people even more eager to get to know Americans, which makes finding friends easier than it might normally be expected to be.

Perhaps the best thing about going to England was the opportunities it gave me to travel. Warnborough House offered various day and half-day excursions, to such places as London, Cambridge, Bath, Cardif (Wales), Canterbury, and the ancestral homes of Winston Churchill and George Washington, among others. Vacation time was also great for traveling. The Christmas vacation also included a January term which nobody who had gone the first term attended. Everyone used at least part of this time to travel. Of course with so many people set loose on England Europe it was never difficult to find at least one person with whom to travel. There is plenty to keep a person occupied and there are quite a few ways to keep the costs down, such as hitchhiking, taking advantage of the youth hostels (both the official ones of the IYH and the private ones scattered through the major cities), searching out the cheaper hotels, buying train passes, and others. I took advantage of them all at various times.

I could continue writing indefinitely. I loved England and plan to go back. I wanted to write this article to let JC students know how easy to manage and how exciting such a trip can be. Juniata is a great place. I would be the last person to deny that. Many students here, however, will never have the chance to go abroad again; and for a student, as I said before, it can be as cheap as staying here. More than that, it involves a different kind of learning experience, one that can never be had here. A trip abroad, no matter what country or how long, adds incomparably to a liberal arts education, irrespective of one's field of study. There were at least as many economics and history majors at Warnborough House as there were English majors; and several other fields were represented besides. No science was offered there, but other schools do offer courses. Warnborough House was a private institution, but there were schools which I could have chosen which were associated with, or belonged to, colleges in the U.S. At any rate, I am glad I went, and while I was there I was generally enjoying myself too much to feel homesick. I heartily recommend it.

After an enjoyable year in England, Lynne Church recommends a study-travel abroad program for others.

This 'Tique at Juniata

Well folks, this is our last article for the year, and we thought we'd clear out the showcase and explain the remaining artifacts to you. This article will not follow any logical progression (yea MODES!), not that any of them did, but so what. We didn't want to leave anyone hanging. The array of articles we anticipate covering includes eyeglasses, fireman's hat, banks, and an infamous insulator.

In case you're wondering, the head that's been staring at you for the past two terms is a real life, bonafide, clay Pheasant, oh excuse us, clay representation of a Juniata Alumnus. This is what you'll end up looking like, when those letters start rolling in from the Development Office asking for your unrelenting support — check, cash, or money order accepted. He's modeling the latest in Norwegian Gucci attire, and the oldest in optical equipment. These glasses are from various eras, from the 30's on up. They range from wire frames to rimless to leather bound, with round, oval and hexagonal shapes. Probably the wierdest pair are the pince-nez, the frameless jobs popular during Roosevelt's reign. These little wonders have no temples, but clamp onto the victim's nose via springs. Ouch!!!

Not so popular during the Roosevelt administration were letters from Europe, censored by the Hitler cult. These prestigious postal items all originated in Norway, during the Nazi occupation. The Krauts slit them open, read the contents and adroitly deleted the adversive news. Nothing went unscrutinized — "Big Brother is Watching!" Many envelopes arrived in the U.S. with the renowned swastika and eagle seal stuck over the slit. The letters themselves had black magic marker etchings strategically positioned over the anti-Nazi phrases. Wouldn't 3-d X-ray pince-nezs have been great!

About all we can say concerning the fireman's hat is just that.

Moving right along, we figure we'll mention the banks next, since we listed them that way in the first paragraph. Right in vogue to save those pennies during the depression, these banks helped to send that "well-deserving youngster" to college after the Big Crash. These cast iron "beauties" include an Italian Stallion, a City Bank, and one of Alex Haley's sharecropper relatives. Such contraptions were much safer than hiding the stash in grandma's mattress, or Molly Brown's oven.

Many of our antiqueing friends have informed us of the newest hunting grounds of the South. Carter's inauguration not only bolstered peanut butter sales, but also helped out his cousin Hugh's fledgling antique business. Hugh has literally resulted to selling anything, and we have been fortunate enough (?) to procure a somewhat rare, broken insulator. Its only claim to fame is its price tag (although it may have carried a Jimmy Carter phone call — we'll never know!). Better hurry folks, Plains is quickly running out of stuff, especially insulators.

That about wraps it up for the year. If you have any questions about anything we've shown, don't ask us. We told you everything we know — which isn't much.

With deepest regrets,
Pam and Eric.

'Oklahoma!' To Open May 20

By Mindy Anderson
& Marj Porter

The Music Department of Juniata College is currently involved in producing this year's spring musical, "Oklahoma!"

This year's production is under the direction of Dr. Bruce A. and Marjorie Hirsch. The performances are slated for May 20 and 21, at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall.

The cast and technicians are comprised of students from Juniata College who have been rehearsing nightly in preparation for this Mid-May performance.

"Oklahoma!" provides a diversified outlet of Juniata talent through its many roles.

Casted in the following roles are: Elvira Magnalia and Pam Nowlin as Laurey, Bill Kepner as Curly, and Bill Messersmith and Mark Hyssong will play the role of Judd. Performing as Aunt Eller will be Elaine Joyce with Dyane Hummel casted in the role of Ado Annie. Eric Schwab will fill the part of Allie Hackem, Paul Parsekian as Will and Vicky Isenberg as Gertie. The parts of Andrew Carnes will be portrayed by Dave Corman along with Dave Brown as Ike Skidmore.

Along with the people participating in the lead roles, the show could not go on without the dedication and ability of technicians, costumes, props, make-up and lighting crews.

Come to see "Oklahoma!" which promises to be a memorable occasion, on May 20 and May 21 in Oller Hall at 8:15 p.m.

Interested In Drama For '77-'78?

There will be a meeting for all those interested in learning of the theatre production plans for the next academic year. WHERE? Oller auditorium. WHEN? Thursday, May 12, 1977. TIME? 3:30 P.M.

Profs. Davis, Goehring, and Crouch will describe the projected program, for each of the three terms next year and will ask for suggestions from you who are in attendance. If we can open the lines of communications and construct a pattern of cooperation theatre can take a big step forward. The latter is true, considering the number of interested and talented thespians we have on campus. PLAN TO ATTEND.

'Summer of 77'

Juniata College and the Corp of Army Engineers are please to announce that an agreement has been reached encouraging the college to assume responsibility for and development of a performing arts series to be offered during the summer months of July and August at Seven Points Recreational area.

The series, under the coordination of Howard Crouch, will feature Central Pennsylvania talent in all forms of the performing arts. Projected plans include children's theatre, dance, country music, drama, instrumental groups, vocal groups, and other programs as they become vailable.

The series will be presented on various evenings during the week. It will extend over a nine week period beginning the first week in July with a Children's Theatre production. Plans are to present two performances per week over the nine week period. The Director of the Seven Points facilities, Mr. Robert Bell, has as a goal the development of performing facilities and a program that will attract not only campers but patrons of the arts from the surrounding geographical area. Such facilities and program will be developed over the next two or three years. Growth will depend upon the success of each preceeding year's program . . . more success . . . better facilities and program.

Students on campus, or nearby, during the summer are encouraged to participate in various aspects of the series either as members of performing groups they have already developed or in some aspect of the arts sponsored by the college. For those who are interested or seek more information please contact Howard Crouch . . . 643-4310.

Souderton Student Receives Truman Scholarship Nomination

HUNTINGDON — Brad R. Godshall of Souderton, a sophomore pre-law student at Juniata College, was recently honored as Juniata's nominee for the highly prestigious Harry S. Truman Scholarship for 1977.

Although Godshall did not finally receive a scholarship, his candidacy is an indication that he is Juniata's best student with a potential for leadership in government service.

The Harry S. Truman S Scholarship Foundation, established by Congress as the official federal memorial to honor the thirty-third President of the United States, is a permanent education scholarship program designed to provide opportunities for outstanding students to prepare for careers in public service.

The awards are made on the basis of merit to students who will be college juniors in September 1977 and who have an outstanding potential for public service. Each scholarship covers tuition, fees, books, and room and board up to a maxium of $5,000 per year.

Only one scholarship is awarded to a resident applicant in each of the 50 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and, considered as a single entity, Guam, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, and the Trust territory of the Pacific Islands.

Godshall, a 1975 Souderton Area High School graduate is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Godshall of 316 Godshall Road, Souderton, He is a member of the Barristers Club, and the varsity tennis team of Juniata.

Art Exhibit on Vorticism

University Park, Pa. — An exhibit of the early English abstract movement known as Vorticism is making one of only two American appearances at the Museum of Art at The Pennsylvania State University.

The exhibit, "Vorticism and Abstract Art in the First Machine Age," includes approximately 70 rare works by eight artists from the years immediately preceding World War I. It opened on Thursday, May 5.

On loan from the Davis and Long commercial gallery in New York, where it has been hanging throughout April, the collection will return to Europe when it leaves Penn State May 29. It is the first American Exhibit of Vorticism since 1917.

The Museum of Art was able to borrow the exhibit through the efforts of William D. Davis, assistant director of exhibitions. Mr. Davis visited the Davis and Long gallery when the exhibit opened in April and was able to arrange for Penn State to borrow the collection from May 5 to 29.

An avant-grade movement led by adventurous young artisits and writers like Wyndham Lewis and Ezra Pound, Vorticism was an attempt to lead the English artistic community out of Victorianism and into the machine age of the early 20th century.

The exhibit includes works by Lewis and by Lawrence Atkinson, David Bomberg, Alvin Langdon Coburn, Jacob Epstein, Henri Gaudier-Brzeska, William Roberts, and Edward Wadsworth.

Also on display will be two unusual magazines from the period which were edited by Lewis. On loan from the Rare Books Room of Pattee Library, "Blast No. 1" and "Blast No. 2" represent the literary side of Vorticism. In a style of typography reminiscent of a vaudeville poster, they printed the manifestos of Vorticism written by Lewis and Pound, men remembered more for their literary than artistic accomplishments.

Mr. Davis says he is especially pleased to have borrowed the exhibit because it is of great interest for both artistic and literary reasons.

Reviewing the exhibit in its New York appearance, art critic Hilton Kramer wrote in the April 17 New York Times that most of the works "will be utterly unfamiliar even to people who feel they know this crucial period in the history of modern art very well. For that reason alone the exhibition is not to be missed."

Filmmaking Course

The fifth annual summer workshop in 16mm filmmaking is being offered by the Berkeley Film Institute, Berkeley, California. This intensive full-time workshop will meet eight hours each day, six days each week for five weeks from June 20 through July 23, 1977.

Practical instruction will be given in all aspects of the filmmaker's craft, including production, cinematography, sound, lighting, editing, and phototechnology.

The course is highly structured, with students completing a progressive series of film projects, including a sync-sound dramatic short and a public service television advertisement for a non-profit organization. No prior knowledge of film or photography is needed, and there are no age or background requirements. All equipment and materials are provided.

The 'King' of Jousting

LONDON (UPI) — When he wasn't wining or wenching, and history records he spent a lot of time doing one or the other or both, King Henry VIII liked to take on the champions of his realm in the sport of jousting.

His massive armor, strategically reinforced to protect the succession to the throne, is preserved in The Tower of London. It is silent proof of the formidable figure he made bearing down on his opponent on his charger ready to prod the upstart out of the saddle with his lance.

Millions over the decades have stood before that gigantic steel cage which by its very size lends credence to the tales that he was unbeatable in the Tilt Yard, as the field of combat was known, despite a fondness for the ladies that was to take him through six wives and several times that number of mistresses.

Alas for the romantic legends of the days when knighthood was in flower. King Henry retired from the lists undefeated, it is true, and by all accounts he was a strong and fearless competitor. But students in this skeptical age have been perusing the handful of jousting "cheques" or score cards of the 16th Century which are all that have survived.

And taking these, together with the known reputations and abilities of some of the king's competitors, it begins to appear that it was recognized very early on by his comrades-inarms that in clashing with Henry it was better to receive than to give.

Any reputable bookmaker who happened to be around on May 20, 1516, would have had to make Sir William Kingston, famous for his strength, favorite to win. But, according to the ringside reporter of the event, Henry "overthrew" him. That, presumably, was also the fate, when they met, of Sir Nick Carew, the "Blue Knight" who wielded so huge a lance it was known to fans as "The Great Spear of London."

Since he won all the time, the king put his victories down to his own skill and the possibility some of his opponents weren't in his class. So, as one Thomas Allen wrote to the Earl of Shrewsbury at the time (rendered into modern English):

"As I hear say, the King has promised never to joust again except it be (with) as good a man as himself."

What Thomas Allen did not know is that the king coppered his bets against losing with a cunning ploy worthy of the man who introduced the chopping block as a quicker, cheaper method of divorce. Henry apparently arranged with his first wife, Katharine of Aragon (who had been his sister-in-law) to stop any joust in which he seemed to be getting the worst of it.

According to records made available by the Society of Antiquaries, the Venetian Ambassador to France, Sebastiano Guistiniano, writing to the Doge of Venice in 1531, said he had it on the authority of King Francis I that:

"In England when the King jousts it is customary for Madame the Queen to preside and judge of how many strokes the King may make so when it seems to her fit she sends word that the King joust no more..."

To which the learned Society's expert on jousting commented:

"It is a notable fact that Henry was always the winner at these entertainments and although his strength and skill as a jouster are admitted, his invariable success may possibly have been due in some measure to this prerogative of the Queen by which the contest could be stopped if there seemed to be a chance of failure."

There are only nine original jousting score cards extant, the most splendid of which is that of the sport on the Field of the Cloth of Gold near Calais where Henry VIII and Francis I met to discuss a Franco-English alliance in 1520. It is in the possession of the Society of Antiquaries.

Probing that far back into the days of the knights produces the surprising conclusion that this is one era Hollywood did not exaggerate in its epics. Contemporary descriptions of the jousts show them to be pageants of quite startling magnificence. The requisition slips for material for costuming the king's own party alone for one entertainment in 1518 called for 876 yards of cloth of gold and silver and 1,280 yards of velvet.

A few months after his marriage to Katharine, Henry competed as "Coeur Loyal" (True Heart) in the jousts of Feb. 12-13, 1510 — and, of course, won all his bouts. A contemporary reporter wrote:

"The trumpets blew up and in came many a noble man and gentleman richly appareled taking up their horses. After whom followed certain Lords, they and their horses in cloth of gold and russet tinsel, knights in cloth of gold and russet velvet and a great number of gentlemen on foot in russet satin and yellow.

"Then came the King under a pavilion of cloth of gold and purple velvet, embroidered and powdered (decorated) with "H" and "K" of fine gold, the compass of the pavilion above embroidered richly and valenced with fine gold, beaten in wire with an imperial crown on top of fine gold.

"The Marquess of Dorset and his retainers were in black velvet, gold embroidered, the Duke of Buckingham in cloth of silver bringing (as a gift) a tree with gold pomegranates..."

No wonder the crowd, dazzled by a display of riches which Henry's descendant, Queen Elizabeth II, would never dare mount, exhuberantly overran the pavilion, in the process snatching 225 ounces of gold decorations from the persons of King Henry and Sir Thomas Knivet, his Master of the Horse.

That's $33,000 worth at today's prices.

An Ad-lib Age

WARWICK, R.I. (UPI) — Steve Mills remembers burlesque in the days before stripping and swear words.

"It was so pure you couldn't say hell or damn," says Mills, who at 81 is one of the world's older working comedians.

"You couldn't even show a bare shoulder. You couldn't desecrate your art."

Art it was in the days when Mills, a motherless kid in smalltown Massachusetts, mixed spices in the Underwood Deviled Ham plant with his father, brother and sisters and dreamed of burlesque.

He became a candy seller in Boston's Gaiety Theater. He ad libbed his way on stage. It was 1910. He was 15. "Burlesque was burlesque.

"The idea people have of burlesque today is topsy-turvy. The people who really went to the shows more than 50 years ago won't tell you about any strippers. Most of the chorus girls were fat. People went to see the comics," Mills says.

Mills' living room is a museum of the era. He is the centerpiece. With a mane of white hair, darkrimmed glasses and hearing aid turned up all the way, he is full of vivid recollections. Twinkling, baggy eyes match the shiny, baggy pants he wears in all the pictures.

The pants, which he fashioned himself from 50-cent Salvation Army castoffs and ragged remnants, hang neatly in a special cold storage basement, along with the first pink net gown and floppy hat burlesque queen Ann Corio wore on stage.

He has willed his collection to the Boston Public Library.

It was the early 1930s, when Ann Corio was a young chorus girl, and he was the "top banana" of burlesque comics playing the Minsky theaters in New York City.

When Miss Corio decided to revive the old routines in "This Was Burlesque," she didn't just settle for one of the bunch. She signed Mills to the act. The nostalgia revue has been playing to packed theaters for 16 years.

"You can't kill burlesque, it was the groundwork, the basis for your television skits and musical comedy," he says. "It will always live on in another dress."

Mills says he wrote some of the skits that made Abbott and Costello famous. He clowned alongside greats like Billy Gilbert and Bert Lahr, worked with the fathers of Alan Alda and Jerry Lewis, gave a kid named Phil Silvers his first comedy bit.

"Burlesque was the greatest school for comics because they let you ad lib."

'Sweet Pie' Sez He's Not Obscene

MONTPELIER, Vt. (UPI) — Paul "Sweet Pie" Winer, a boogie woogie pianist, says his act is a celebration of his lifestyle. He performs topless and sometimess bottomless.

The 33-year-old entertainer, who's street attire is a leather tunic, knee socks, overcoat and beret, is engaged in a longstanding battle with the Vermont Liquor Control Board for the right to perform in the state.

Last November, the board found Sweet Pie's act "lewd and indecent," and revoked the liquor license of the Wilmington White House in Wilmington, Vt., where he was performing.

Because of his reputation, Sweet Pie claims he lost $10,000 he would have earned during the winter in Vermont ski resorts. Now he lives "on the road," playing in other clubs in New England, while he fights a legal battle to "perform in the state I have used as my identity."

The Vermont American Civil Liberties Union has filed suit in U.S. District Court in Burlington on behalf of Sweet Pie, asking the board's obscenity regulations be declared unconstituional and for a revocation of the order that closed the Wilmington White House.

Sweet Pie contends his act is not obscene; that he does not deal in smut or sexual gesturing, and asserts that in nine years no court has found his act obscene despite 22 legal challenges.

"My show is always bizarre and outrageous, but never obscene. There is no sexual intent to my performance. I'm a clown, a jumping, screaming clown."

In Vermont, Sweet Pie wears a loin cloth. He say it is more modest than jungle movies shown on prime time television. Elsewhere, he performs nude, kicks his feet up in the air and hops off his piano stool, plays on all sides of his fingers, stands on tip toes, flings his arms and returns to a specific note.

Sweet Pie also tells jokes, draws cartoons, and "raps" with the audience. He said he uses people's sexual references to talk about everything from politics to social relationships and tries to provoke strangers to laugh at themselves.

"You want to cry but you laugh because that's what boogie does to blues."

The long haired, bearded nonconformist said people upset themselves over his appearance. Because he is barelegged, he said he is stopped by policemen more than if he were "smoking dope on the streets."

"I've shown my underwear to hundreds of cops," he said.

Win Streak: Pitch, Hit, Run

By C.O.G.S.

The Juniata Indians under Coach Bill Berrier had a busy schedule last week, playing three doubleheaders in four days. They managed to bring their season record to 10-7-1.

On Wednesday, May 4, they dropped two non-MAC games to I.U.P. In the first game, the tribe lost in ten innings. Steve Harper pitched the entire game, and all of the runs were unearned. In the second game, starting pitcher Dick Smith was handed a 7-4 loss by Indiana.

Thursday found Juniata facing MAC competition from Elizabethtown. With the score knotted 3-3 and Doug Wood on third base, Tom Gibboney singled home the winning run. Winning pitcher Elmer Levengood raised his season mark to 4-2, giving up nine hits and two earned runs in six innings. Levengood's earned run average stands at 3.00, while the team's ERA is 4.54.

In the second game of the doubleheader, the Indians went on the warpath grabbing a 4-0 decision. All four runs came in the first inning when Tom Gibboney cleared the bases with his third triple of the year. This was followed by a double from Doug Wood to send Gibboney home. Behind the two hit pitching of Chris Lyons, J.C. captured its first complete game shut-out of this season. The game brought Wood's season batting average to .326.

Mike Morgan has led the season's hitting attack with a .457 average. Freshman pitcher/outfielder Pat Daly follows with .360. Leading in the RBI column is Dick Smith with 19; his average standa at .313. Hard hitting Steve Harper has 15 with a .328 average. The total team average is .274, while the opponent's is .265.

After a day of rest, Saturday found J.C. back on Langdon Field to face Lock Haven State. Despite missing several bases-loaded scoring opportunities, Juniata won 4-2. Todd Wise pitched the winning game with assistance by Jim Kudel, who took over in the top of the sixth. The second game was pitched by Pat Daly and the Indians scalped the Bald Eagles 2-1. This lowered Lock Haven to a 6-20 record for the season.

With the season coming to a close, and MAC's looming in the near future, we wish our Juniata Indians continued success with their winning streak and in the championships this weekend.

Women's MAC.: Winning At Las

The weekend of May 6-7 has provided Juniata's Women's Tennis Team with an outstanding victory. Carolyn Setzer and Alice Herrit paired together to take the number one doubles place at the Middle Atlantic Conference at Franklin and Marshall College in Lancaster, Pa.

The four-member MAC team of Mardi Frye, Carolyn Setzer, Alice Herritt, and Barb Rea left May 6 to start their winning weekend. Mardi and Barb playe singles early in the tournament while Alice and Carolyn bega playing doubles later in the day Mardi won her first match bu lost her second to a tough opponent from Gettysburg College Barb dropped her first match and was entered into the Consolation Tournament for all the first-round losers. In that tournament Barb won two rounds and lost in the third.

The winning doubles team started their first of three matches of the day by defeating Wilkes, then Gettysburg in three sets, and finally top-seeded Ursinus. By winning all three of these matches they qualified to play in the finals at 11:00 a.m. Saturday against the second-seeded team from Franklin and Marshall. Alice and Carolyn took their final match with ease; 6-4, 6-1.

Amid cheers and congratulations from the crowd, several people remarked that they hadn't heard of our school and thought possibly it was an all-girls school in West Virginia. To that, remarked Carolyn, "Maybe they'll remember us next year!"

Lacrosse Team Finishes Season

The Juniata Community Lacrosse Club wrapped up a winless season last Saturday with a game against Allegheny College. The 12-3 defeat marked the second meeting this season for the two teams.

Though disappointing at first glance, the season was successful in terms of stimulating interest in the sport and providing enjoyment for the players.

Scoring for the Indians went as follows:

Foster 3
Bargerstock 1
Dintruff 1
Hayes 1

Beyond the scoring leaders, midfield standouts included Jeff Hartman, Bear Thompson, Steve Shultis, Rich Brandt, and Steve Svarczkopf. At attack, Jami Foster and Stu Graham paced the team. Outstanding defensive performances came from Seniors Scott McRobert and Linwood Briggs as well as Sophomores Bill Reilly and Randy Bittner.

Plagued by injuries and the usual problems associated with a first year team, the Indians look forward to a strong showing next year. The foundation for Juniata Lacrosse has been set, and the potential for future success seems high.

from state legislatures to Congress while others insisted that many other laws already adequately protect women and cited the Civil Rights Act, the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment, and the 5th Amendment's due process clause. These arguments were not strong enough, however, to deter the U.S. Supreme Court's recent decision in the General Electric vs. Gilbert case. The Court ruled that a business does not have to provide pregnancy benefits for female employees in existing disability plans, nor does it have to provide benefits for non-pregnancy related disabilities incurred while a woman is on unpaid pregnancy leave.

As for business contributions to the anti-ERA movement, well, they began as early as the suffragette movement. Swift and Company, the large meat packing corporation, were shown to have made secret contributions to the 'antis,' according to Eleanor Flexner's history of the suffrage movement, Century of Struggle (Harvard University Press, 1975). Joining the meat packers were banks, municipal transit authorities, the Gulf Refining Company, the Santa Fe and other railroads, American Express, the Southeastern States Portland Cement Company and something called the National Farmers Union.

Insurance companies are also in the front lines of the opposition to the ERA. In life insurance, women traditionally pay less than men since data indicate they are less of a risk. In both medical and disability insurance, pregnancy and gynecological problems may be excluded while specifically male disorders, such as vasectomies, are provided for. And because of the assumption that women are only supplementing the family income and less likely to linger at home when possible, disability policies are sometimes difficult to obtain and may be inferior to those offered men in similar occupations. Furthermore, the insurance industry can better afford to hold the line against a constitutional amendment because it is one of the few major industries that is still regulated by state governments and not by Washington.

With business as a major ERA enemy, the amendment's passage is hindered even beyond those who have taken to the streets in the name of such organizations as HOT DOG (Humanitarians Opposed to Degrading Our Girls), HOME (Happiness for Women Eternal), FOE (Females Opposed to Equality), and HA! (Home Administrators). There are others, but you get the point.

The National Organization of Women (NOW) is encouraging the boycott of Nevada and its products, since Nevada is one of the most recent states to defeat the ERA. "If we're not equal before the law in Nevada, we'd just as soon not be there," says Linda Rasmussen, a NOW representative in Sacramanto, CA. The National Education Association also has a policy of not holding conventions in states that haven't ratified the ERA.

What will happen after March, 1979? Langer says that part of the answer lies in practical political organization. Coordination of the pro-ERA materials is essential for its passage.

"Before it became a fight, passage of the Equal Rights Amendment would have been merely a gift. If it is achieved now ... it will be a mature victory," says Langer.

Big business willing, though, ERA may never make it past the preliminaries.

Artist Series Opens With Mime

Keith Berger, perhaps the most polished and emotionally effective mime in America today, will open the 1977-78 Juniata College Artist Series Tuesday evening, Sept. 27.

Berger, 24, first gained popularity as the "New York Street Mime," earning a living entertaining the Manhattan crowds. He captivated sidewalk audiences by standing motionless atop one of the New York Public Library's famous lions; by removing his head outside St. Patrick's Cathedral and entering it to explore the contents of his mind; or by pretending to be a gorilla escaping from its cage on the steps of the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

An actor, director and writer, Berger has directed his own mime play, "Interruptions," and starred in several films. He has also written a full-length mime screenplay and appeared on both Canadian and American network television.

Of Berger's Lincoln Center performance, reviewers said: "The perfection of every little move ... ingeniously packs the empty stage." "He is handsome, brilliant ... a polished virtuoso and an insightful commentator on the human condition."

Don't miss a chance to see one of America's most exciting performers of the ancient art of mime.

New Administration Reinterprets Policies

By Wendy Chamberlain

"I don't think I'll be a difficult person to approach," says Dr. Arnold Tilden, new Dean of Student Services.

"There's going to be a systematic attempt for members of the staff to get out and meet students," he says. One way they plan to do so is through regular "coffee and question-answer sessions" in which Dr. Tilden plans to participate on a weekly basis. The first session was held last Wednesday; the second will meet tomorrow.

Another innovation, one which is still in the works, is a student information service. Students will have an opportunity to submit questions to the Student Services Staff. Questions and answers will be posted for the student body's benefit.

The staff has undergone structural changes since last year: Dr. Tilden is filling the place of Dr. Terry Hartman, who is now Academic Dean. Mr. Jack Linetty is new in the position of Director of Housing. And Mr. Bill Berrier has become the Athletic Director.

One of the staff's primary concerns this fall is to improve the system of coordinating the Student Services Staff with the resident assistants. Telephones are presently being installed for every R.A. to provide instant communication with the on-duty staff person. In addition, duty schedules for both the R.A.'s and the staff have been established. "I think things are better coordinated with the resident assistants now," says Dr. Tilden.

The alcohol policy also underwent scrutiny. Included among the new guidelines is the requirement that all private parties be confined to one room. "We're very interested in controlling disruptive behavior."

Dr. Frederick Binder, Ms. Liz O'Connell and Dr. Tilden discussed the alcohol policy with an attorney, who warned them that it is especially necessary to guard against alcohol actually being sold. This does not prohibit admission charges for entertainment where alcohol is available, but the alcohol itself cannot be paid for by charging admission.

Dr. Tilden stresses, however, that these rules are not a change in the policy itself, but a change in its interpretation and the emphasis the staff will give it. "I'm very concerned about the rights of the minority. We think we have a policy that is practical, reasonable and fair."

Dr. Tilden is concerned mainly with the part of the students' learning that takes place beyond the classroom. Basic to this concern is his attitude that personal relationships outside a structured student-to-administrator situation are "very important and very critical." His reception during orientation was an attempt to carry out this attitude.

He encourages an open channel between students and his staff. Two office changes are intended to facilitate student access to the Student Services Staff. Mr. Linetty has moved to Founders Hall from Tussey. Mrs. Marsha Hartman is now situated in the basement of Ellis Hall.

In a further effort to keep communication between staff and students open, Dr. Tilden and Todd Kulp, president of the student government, have set up a weekly Monday conference in anticipation of the Wednesday student government meeting.

Dr. Tilden's major focuses are wrapped up in one word: involvement. "We think that at a college like this involvement is what we're all about." His hope is that as many Juniata students as possible will involve themselves in campus activities. The student activities fair at orientation is a new idea which he plans to expand next year. "The notion that students learn through participation is one that we believe in," says Dr. Tilden.

"At a place like Penn State you might be a spectator ... Here students have a greater chance to be involved as participants."

Mixed Feelings on New Alcohol Policy

By Neeta Moonka

Although the new alcohol policy this year is similar in some aspects to that of last year, there are some significant differences. Comparing the two policies, it seems that there is much more emphasis on keeping parties "self-contained" in rooms as well as on prohibiting the sale of alcohol. Dr. Tilden, Dean of Student Services, feels also that the new policy is aimed at protecting the rights of individuals who are not attending social functions.

Dr. Tilden commented that there are a limited number of differences between the policies, which deal mainly with emphasis. He is concerned that people who attend parties may infringe upon other students' rights. Although he said that he does not have a historical reference, he did state that people had indicated to him that last year this was a concern. For this reason, Dr. Tilden says that parties should be contained and that a room should not become a distribution point. The policy specifically states "Hallways and bathrooms are not to be used ... to accommodate the overflow from social gatherings in individual rooms."

Dr. Tilden also expressed concern about student conduct being consistent with the law and alcohol not being sold. He said that it was reported to him that there was concern about people having parties to make money for themselves. He felt that it was important that donations for functions be voluntary; if a person does not wish to pay, he should be allowed into the function anyway.

Tilden noted that, as the policy states, the college is not responsible for enforcing the law. The college will not, however, "impede enforcement efforts of governmental authorities."

One Resident Assistant stated that the guiding principal is to not infringe upon neighbors' rights. He/she commented that three basic ideas were expressed to him/her regarding the alcohol policy. One was that no alcohol should be in public areas (halls) where it might infringe upon someone's rights. Regarding quantity, only a one-quarter keg is allowed in a room and a one-half keg is allowed in the East House apartments. The last point mentioned was that it is necessary to preserve an atmosphere of study. The R.A. reflected upon one specific practical aspect of the policy which is to keep damages down.

Several students were questioned about how they felt regarding the new policy, and they gave definite answers. A few students feel that the policy "stinks" and that it was better last year. They believe that it is too restrictive. Other students feel the policy is fair and takes into account other people's rights. Some do not care and others did not bother to read the policy.

Opinion seemed divided on the policy. In the weeks to come it will be interesting to note how campus life will have changed because of the new rules. The Student Services Staff has made some definite changes in the policy stressing the need to preserve an atmosphere conducive to study and the need to protect individual student's rights. How the new policy will affect social functions has yet to be seen.

Editorial

The object you are holding in the first issue of the 1977-1978 "Juniatian."It is made of paper and ink — nothing more. Yet, "The Juniatian" is actually something entirely different from what it appears to be. The object in your hands is a mirror. "The Juniatian" is a mirror that is intended to gather the events of the Juniata community and reflect them back to you.

Most people, however, don't bother looking in mirrors unless they see themselves. This is true with "The Juniatian." The concept of a college newspaper is meaningless unless the paper can adequately represent the college community. To that end the staff of "The Juniatian" will attempt to produce a newspaper every week that portrays the events and interests of the Juniata community as accurately as possible.

If "The Juniatian" is to be of any value to the community, then the community must provide some input. You can provide that input by letting us know what is going on around campus. Our office is located in the basement of Ellis (office hours Monday-Thursday, 6:00-8:00), and our mailbox is 667. If you are aware of anything of interest, please give us the opportunity to report it to the community.

Should you have a gripe that you want to air, you can do so by writing a letter to the editor. We request that you sign your name, but we will withhold it upon request. If you make public a problem that has been bothering you, appropriate steps can be taken to correct it. This goes for all members of the Juniata community. We welcome input from professors, administrative personnel, and all other members of the college.

The point of this editorial is that "The Juniatian" needs your support. We need your ideas and suggestions. If you use us as a mirror, perhaps by helping us along you'll begin to like what you see.

As many of the incoming freshmen and transfer students may have discovered, the sport which boasts the greatest number of participants at Juniata College is not football — or even intramurals; but bitching about the food served in the dining hall. Complaints such as "What are they re-serving tonight?" or "What's that supposed to be?" have become hackneyed queries to the line workers, who manage to "grimace and bear it." The dubious edibility of many of the food service's "gourmet" fiascoes is reflected by the descriptive names such as: "el raunchos," "mystery meat," "polyvinyl pasta" and "turkey tetrachloride," given to many of the dishes by disgusted students.

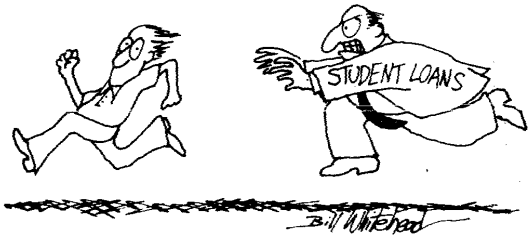
Juniata's food service realizes that the quality of their meals often falls short of mom's home cooking and have invited students to air their gripes at food service meetings. These are invariably scheduled on the night before a major exam or at the same time your hall has the gym for an intramural basketball or volleyball game.

In an effort to solicit more of the students' opinions and suggestions, a "bitch board" has been placed near the entrance to line one in the dining hall. A pad of yellow paper and thumbtacks have been provided for comments, criticisms and enlightening suggestions as to where one can shove various vegetables. Most of these yellow sheets receive responses in less than 24 hours. Unfortunately, many must go unanswered because a plethora of grammatical errors render them unintelligible. Horrors! To think that some of the students at JC can neither spell nor punctuate!

After recovering from the initial shock, the Writing Program instructors realized that something must be done to preserve Juniata College's reputation of academic excellence. With the cooperation of Jeff DeWalt, our food service director, they arrived at a plan that will, hopefully, improve students' literacy as well as the quality of the food served.

For every one hundred grammatically correct yellow complaint slips received by the food service, a reward will be offered: one meal during which no one will be able to find anything to bitch about. Since the probability of such an event occurring is almost non-existent, neatness and originality will also be taken into consideration.

So, as you pore over your mildewed copies of the "MLA Style Sheet," keep in mind that miracles have been known to occur. The food just might improve.



Federal Loan Program Moves Against Defaulters

The job of collecting defaulted federally insured student loans will soon be placed in the hands of a private collection organization, HEW's Office of Education announced today.

The Office of Education (OE) is soliciting proposals from organizations which have had nationwide experience in collecting consumer loans and in tracing the whereabouts of defaulters.

Noting that OE is exercising an authority provided by the Congress in the Education Amendments of 1976, Leo Kornfeld, Deputy Commissioner for Student Financial Assistance, said the decision to use a private organization to collect defaults is "rooted in our firm conviction that those who are able but unwilling to pay their debts do a grave injustice to the American public who provided them with an opportunity for education.

"They do a serious disservice to the vast majority of former students who honor their obligations and jeopardize the futures of millions of students whose education aspirations hinge on the availability of these loans," he continued.

Basically, the successful bidder for the contract will be required to locate defaulted borrowers, establish a payment schedule, and arrange for payments to be made to OE. Another part of the job will be to recommend measures OE should take — including legal action — on debts the organization is unable to collect.

The contractor will receive no appropriated Federal funds. Instead, OE will pay the organization a percentage of the payments collected.

The contract will apply only to the Federal Insured Student Loan Program (FISLP), under which the Federal Government has directly insured approximately one-half of all loans in the Guaranteed Student Loan Program. The rest have been guaranteed by one of 27 State or private nonprofit guarantee agencies. The Guaranteed Student Loan Program was authorized by the Higher Education Act of 1965.

Only the contract organization's salaried personnel may collect from student defaulters. Their efforts will supplement the activities of some 106 OE collectors and appropriate support personnel located mostly in HEW Regional Offices across the country. Until now, OE employees have had sole responsibility for FISLP collections. However, for a number of years, many guarantee agencies have used private firms to collect their defaulted loans.

Support Fund Hits New High

HUNTINGDON — The Annual Support Fund at Juniata College has surpassed its goal for the eighth time in eight years of existence and has received record total contributions for the 1976-77 year.

According to Dr. Frederick M. Binder, Juniata president, the final figure was $190,328, some $20,328 more than the announced goal. The figure, he added, exceeded Juniata's previous best, set in 1973-74, by almost $55,000.

More than $1,112,500 has been raised by Juniata's eight Annual Support Funds since 1969-70, the first year of the program. The monies are designated for current operating expenses, including financial aid to students, support of teaching, and purchase of essential items of instructional equipment.

The Rev. Donald L. Robinson of Reading, a 1951 Juniata graduate, served as chairman of the 1976-77 fund. He attributed the success to "the generosity of our several constituencies — alumni, friends, the Church of the Brethren, parents, foundations and business and industry — and the hard work of the more than 50 class fund agents." Rev. Robinson is pastor of the Reading First Church of the Brethren and a faculty member of Reading Area Community College.

Enrollment Drop Continues

Total enrollment in the Nation's schools and colleges will drop slightly this school year, while the total cost of education will increase by about $12 billion over last year, Marie D. Eldridge, Administrator of the National Center for Education Statistics, predicted today.

The annual "Back-to-School" forecast, prepared by the National Center for Education Statistics (NCES), indicates that 60.3 million students are expected when schools open this fall. This is a decrease of about one-half of one per cent from the fall 1976 enrollment of 60.6 million.

Total expenditures at all levels are expected to reach $144 billion for the 1977-78 school year, as compared with about $132 billion in 1976-77.

From the Editor

You will see some changes in "The Juniatian" this year. First of all, we have cut production time so that we can carry more "newsy" items. Secondly, our News Department and newly-formed Feature Department are extending contacts beyond the campus in an effort to bring that news from outside which affects us as individuals, and as a community. Finally, we will be doing our own layout so that we can control the format of our paper. Your suggestions on these points are welcome.

Radio City: Hall & Oates

By Jim Donahue

Prior to their recording "Rich Girl," the song you've heard zillions of times on the radio, Hall and Oates were a largely unknown band. Like lots of other performers the golden epoch of Motown in the middle to late sixties, H&O perform their material in an urban rhythm and blues style that rock criticism in the seventies calls "Blue-Eyed Soul." This kind of r&b probably had roots in Sam Cooke and carried on through Smokey Robinson, Sly Stone, Stevie Wonder, Marvin Gaye; it has flowed in the seventies and expanded to include such diversified talent as (note the change in color here, it matters) Average White Band, Van Morrison, Todd Rundgren, Dobbie Brothers, Boz Scaggs, even Bowie, Springsteen, and lots of others. The idea that everyone in the sixties listened to the Beatles and the Stones is largely unfounded — it is perhaps true if you lived on a college campus or in the suburbs, where the blackest thing about your music was the vinyl it came on. But if you lived in the city and your music came from a transistor radio, chances are very good that you were listening to (yep) "Soul."

Before I begin to babble about gospel-and reggae, I should tell you just where the "Blue-Eyed" part comes in — except I don't know; it may well go back to Elvis Presley. Whether the "flowering" I spoke of produced hybrid music or not is debatable and it finally comes down to whether the musicians involved understand the "once-removed" factor. Hall & Oates, for their part, understand this well and even deal with it in their lyrics:

Just tell me where you learned to rock'n roll
You got your licks but you forgot your soul

You play real hot, but son, you leave me cold
So why you wanna waste your time?

Partly because it is basically formulary and rhythm-directed, r&b and soul didn't have to go through the manic artsy-space-pop-folk - and - social - consciousness bullshit that rock did in the last ten years or so, and as such it is a stronger musical form. H&O's new album, Beauty On A Back Street, is an experimental one like most of their work or most of that Blue-Eyed Soul, for that matter. Their style on this one pushes the hard-edged, galvanized, futurist jazz feeling throughout. It's definitely more refined — more centered than any other album. I get the feeling that they have a firmer grasp on their music with this album, that the music finally has become bigger than both of them. As an outgrowth of soul or r&b, this general producing something worthwhile rather than producing something either unapproachable or inbred, canned. The vocals are fine, the rhythm is driving, and the production is clean. You CAN turn the beat around.

"Morning Song" to Perform at Juniata

"Morning Song," a country rock group, well known in the Central Pennsylvania area, will be in concert at Juniata College's Oller Hall, Saturday, September 24 at 8 p.m. "Morning Song," who has their first album out, has played at Penn State and other area colleges. They play not only their own music, but also music of other country rock bands including the "Eagles," "Dan Fogelberg," and "The New Riders of the Purple Sage" to name just a few.

Tickets for the concert are two dollars. Cheryl Blazer, a member of the Concert Committee, expressed not only her hope, but the hope of the other members on the committee when she pointed out that if a large crowd would attend the chances of having more and bigger concerts would be enhanced. Tickets are now on sale at the information desk, located on the second floor of Ellis College Center.

Freshmen overpowered At Annual Storming

By Jamie Pirrello

An estimated crowd of five hundred people attended Juniata College's annual "Storming of the Arch" last Wednesday night. The tradition which originated years ago took place on the steps of "The Cloister," an all-mens dorm built in 1928, located in the center of campus. "The Storming of the Arch" pits the incoming freshmen men against the men of the upper classes. The goal of the freshmen is to break through the upperclass defense and storm through the arch.

As in the past, this year the upperclassmen resisted all eleven charges made by the freshmen. The freshmen this year were better prepared than in past years because of an organizational meeting held early Wednesday evening. Jim Kiely and Coy Butler were the two freshmen who organized their class for the "Storming." When asked about his feelings on the "Storming of the Arch," Coy replied, "It's great, it's alot of fun." He also mentioned that "the freshmen class had no excuses" for their defeat.

One of the leading forces behind the upperclassmen victory, Mark Benfer, said about the freshmen, "They weren't very good this year," compared to other years. He felt their main weakness was that "There were too many individuals, if they had worked together they could have done better. They have guts though," he went on to note.

"The Storming of the Arch" has been severely criticized in the last year for the physical violence that prevails. At least one freshman was taken the J.C. Blair Hospital via an ambulance, with a severely wrenched back.

Geology Club Reform

By Bill Corbin

A new approach, with a serious emphasis on geology, was the main topic of the September 16th meeting of the Andy Lawson Geological Society. President Tom Powell expressed a desire to legitimize the club and gain college recognition. Said Powell, "We want to make the study of geology interesting and pleasurable at the same time. Those students in any of the earth sciences are encouraged to join."

Local field trips will be part of the group's activities. Juniata College, located in the Valley and Ridge Province of the Appalachian Mountains, is unexcelled for the study of geology. An abundance of folded and faulted rock structures can be found in addition to one of the most complete stratigraphic sections in the northeast. The near-by Broad Top coal fields are also available for those so concerned. Out-of-state trips are being planned for all members along with occasional jaunts to area universities for seminars in the geosciences.

FLICKS

By Judy Lee Young

This year's film committee has some excellent films lined up for this fall term, of which The Omen and Soylent Green have already been shown. This week the feature is Animal Crackers, a creation of total insanity starring the four Marx Brothers. As the story opens, Groucho, as the indomitable Captain Spaulding, has just returned from Africa, and is the guest of honor at a party held by Margaret Dumont (of course). Some paintings disappear, and, from then on, so does the ploy. But, with Groucho, Harpo, Chico, and Zeppo at the height of their careers, who needs it? This film is the cource of the immortal quote, "One morning I shot an elephant in my pajamas. How he got in my pajamas I'll never know", not to mention an entire scriptful of other zingers.

The continuing popularity of the Marx Brothers' films is shown by the current interest in Animal Crackers, a film of the early thirties. The film was removed from theater circulation in 1957, due to a dispute between two rival production companies that both claimed exclusive rights. It wasn't until fifteen years later, years of bootlegged copies, petitioning Marx fans, and legal battles, that the film was re-released, at which time it had an amazingly successful run.

So, if you want to start your weekend off with a really good time, come see Animal Crackers, tomorrow night (Fri.) at 7:30 in Oller Hall. And be sure not to miss the classic W. C. Fields, Three Stooges, and Charlie Chaplin short features also being shown!

Kvasir

KVASIR, Juniata's literary magazine, will be getting off the ground soon. Any examples of student's poetry, short stories essays, drawings, and photographs will gladly be accepted for the 1978 issue, to be published in the spring. The deadline for all student work will be February 1. Student contributions will be accepted by the editor-in-chief, Chip Lohmann (Box 1663).

A New Coach — A New Spirit

By Cheryl Kent & Marian Pagano

New to the Juniata campus this year is Nancy Harden, a very special and unique person. Unique in the way that she is the very first coordinator of Women's Athletics and the first full time coach the Juniata women have ever had. Special because she brings with her innovated coaching methods and a natural enthusiasm for collegiate athletics.

"Field Hockey Coach Nancy Harden."

Nancy, a Huntingdon native, is a 1976 graduate of West Chester State. As a physical education major she was active in four years of intercollegiate basketball and tennis, and a freshman member of the field hockey squad. Among her achievements at West Chester, Nancy was a state finalist in womens intercollegiate tennis competition and she earned three letters as a member of the basketball squad.

At Juniata Nancy's responsibilities are manyfold and yearround. As Women's Athletic Coordinator Nancy is busy with the seasonal head coaching chores of Women's field hockey, basketball and tennis. She is also occupied with the coordinating of intramural activities and advisor to the Juniata cheerleading squads.

Indicative of the positive effect Nancy is having on Juniata is the improvement and renewed spirit evident among the members of 1977 field hockey squad. To prepare for the upcoming campaign, team members attended a week long pre-season training session for the first time. Practixes have become less of a ritual due to the initiation of progressive drills aimed at improving individual skills, thereby having a positive effect on the entire team unit. With the improvement of skills at the individual level, improvement is evident in the overall team play.

With the enthusiasm and experience Nancy possesses, she brings with her the potential to raise the quality of intercollegiate and intramural athletics at Juniata. Student support plays a large role in the success of all of our teams. If you have never attended a field hockey game the opportunity is available this Saturday at 10:30 as the Juniata squad goes against the Penn State Center Club on the home turf.

Indians Drop Home Opener 30-0 to Tough Westminster

"Tom Trappuzanno (26) getting a few tough yards.

By Mark Cassel

Last Saturday afternoon the Juniata Indians played their home opener against the Westminster Titans. After a season's opening loss at Indiana by a score of 14-7, the Indians under first year head coach Dean Rossi were hoping to up their record to the .500 level. Westminster, defending national champions in the NAIA Division II, spoiled the home opener by thumping the Indians 30-0. The Titans were loaded with talented players, returning 31 lettermen from last year's championship squad. Quarterback Steve Kraus directed a potent offense while Juniata quarterback, sophomore Wayne Emerick found the afternoon a little more difficult. Westminster's excellent defense forced one interception, numerous quarterback sacks, and many incompleted passes.

The Titans got all the points they needed on their second possession of the game, a 66-yard drive capped by Regis Coyne's 12-yard run. Aided by Gary Devlin's interception of an Emerick pass, the visitors scored on another long drive.

Penalties and broken plays stopped a J.C. drive in the third quarter. Westminster controlled the ball through the end of the period, and kicked a field goal to start the fourth quarter.

Juniata was unable to move the ball on their next possession, and was forced to punt. Westminster put together another drive of 68 yards, with reserve Frank Rondinelli baffling the J.C. defense with several long runs. Rondinelli scored the Titan touchdown on a three-yard run. With a successful point after touchdown, the visitors held a decisive 24-0 lead. The Titans, with about two minutes left in the contest, added another touchdown pass from reserve quarterback Dave Hasson.

Smoke Signals:

Flashy running back, DeWayne Rideout, is lost to the Indians for the season with a knee injury ... Sophomore linebacker Larry Sheppard played another fine game ... Westminster racked up 433 yards total offense to 146 yards for the Indians ... Coach Rossi when asked about Westminster: "What can you say about a national champ?"

Cross Country on a New Course

By Mindy Anderson

The cross-country team of Juniata has seen some dramatic changes over the summer. Returning from England, Dr. Donald Mitchell has taen the position of coach. With this return came the revision of the cross-country course itself. Still the original 5.6 miles, it is now designed to produce a faster pace. Dr. Mitchell stated that, "the old course with so many hills tended to produce slow paces, and slow times."

The goal Dr. Mitchell would like to see is a better seeding in the Middle Atlantic Conference, and he'd like to see all runners improve over the season. This year J.C. cross-country is composed of two Juniors, four sophomores, and a majority of freshmen, making for a young team.

The season this year will prove to be difficult. Slated teams such as Lebanon Valley, Shippensburg, and MAC champ Gettysburg, will surely be worthy opponents.

With time trials beginning tomorrow, Dr. Mitchell made some pre-season expectations. Junior Joe Guth should prove valuable, with Mike Bodley coming on strong in late season. Freshmen that will aid J.C. this year can be found in Bill Schuler, Tim Moore and Dan Gipe. Returning upper classmen including Jamie Foster and Casey Koller to help round out the team.

Unfortunately, the girls' squad did receive the support this year that it has enjoyed in the past. Although the girls have had setbacks they still find representation through Barb Frezza, and Mary Crosby, a transfer student from Cornell.

Cross country is a rigorous sport, demanding time and energy from its members. The first home meet is with Dickinson on September 27th. Come out and show them that you care, they would appreciate it. Practices are held at 4:15 P.M. in the gym, for anyone interested.

The Week

By Nancy Rowe

Bert Lance resigned as President Carter's budget director last week, stating "My conscience is clear." Lance was accused of having massive overdrafts with no penalty, when a Georgia banker, using the same collateral for two different loans at different banks, using campaign loans to pay his wife's debts, and using the bank-owned aircraft for personal and political travel.

Commonwealth Secretary C. Delores Tucker was fired by Governor Shapp after refusing to resign. Tucker was charged with using her office staff to perform personal work for her, such as writing speeches for which she was paid $65,000.

Alcohol Policy Enforced: Students Speak Out

By Jamie Pirrello and Judy Young

As was noted in last week's issue, there have been some major changes in the interpretation of the alcohol policy of the college. This interview/article is with two Juniata students who have been brought before Student Services for violating the college's alcohol policy. The incident with which they were charged — hosting a party at which alcohol was taken into the halls — occurred on the evening of Thursday, September 15th.

Juniatian: How many people were there in the hallway; were there a lot of people?

Kathy: No, like, four people. Patty and I were equally charged as responsible for hosting the party.

Juniatian: Were these people guests of yours?

Kathy: Yes.

Juniatian: Did you have any warning about possible charges?

Kathy: Well, our RA did come by and everyone came back into the room. Later, the downstairs RA told us to turn the music down and keep everyone in the room. That was about 10:45. They (the RA's) asked Patty and me to go to our RA's room. We were told that if we didn't keep the party in our room, we'd be reported to Dr. Tilden. Right after they talked to us, I asked our RA if anyone on the hallway had complained, and she said no.

Juniatian: Did anyone complain to you?

Kathy: No, they didn't. If anyone had come to the door and complained, I think everyone in the room would have cooperated more. It's just the fact that the RA's were sticking to the rules that there can't be alcohol in the halls.

Patty: After everyone went back into the room and it became quiet, we thought that there weren't any problems anymore. We didn't know we'd actually been reported until we got a call (from Student Services) the next morning.

Juniatian: So you thought you did everything they asked?

Patty and Kathy: Yes.

(Kathy went to a meeting with Jack Linnetty, Director of Housing/Assistant Dean of students. She was told the possible consequences of the report (these could be as serious as expulsion). Patty and Kathy were offered a hearing before either the Judiciary Board (composed of students, faculty and administration) or the Administrative Board (composed of Dr. Tilden and Mr. Linetty.) They chose the Administrative Board.)

Patty: One of the things that Jack Linetty said was that they're trying to protect the rights of the person who is shy and won't approach anyone with a complaint.

Kathy: But we think that's why the RA's are there.

Juniatian: So if the people don't approach you, they can approach the RA's?

Kathy: Right.

Patty: And so that person's right is protected by the fact that they can go to the RA's.

Juniatian: So what Linetty said about rights, you're saying can be taken care of?

Kathy: You can still have your door open at a party and if there's too much noise, and someone is being bothered, then something can be done about it, just if someone goes to the RA.

Juniatian: What exactly were you charged with?

Kathy: We were charged with hosting a party at which there were alcoholic beverages in the hallway.

Juniatian: Were the people in the hallway charged with anything?

Kathy: No, they weren't. (One other person at the party was later charged with flooding the ladies' room and encouraging freshmen to drink, but neither of these incidents was directly related to the charges levelled on Patty and Kathy.)

Juniatian: Did you have trouble with your parties last year?

Kathy: No. Well, people would sometimes ask for us to keep it down, but never anything serious

Juniatian: And you were expecting the same thing this year?

Kathy: Right. Well, I had heard about how the rules were to be enforced, but I still thought that only held in extreme cases.

Juniatian: Do you know if anyone else has been charged with anything similar?

Kathy: No, but I have known of other parties where the RA's

"C" Lifestyle Obsolete?

"C lifestyle" — will it soon become an obsolete term as far as Juniata's male population is concerned?

Presently Tussey Hall's second floor, even side, is designated as having a "C" visitation policy. This means that visitation of the opposite sex is allowed only between Friday noon and midnight the following Sunday: no girl is permitted in the area on a weekday. The men residing in Tussey, however, seem to have interpreted their lifestyle differently.

Recently, second floor Resident Assistant Kevin Steckline polled his hall's occupants and received a unanimous vote in favor of CHANGE. Surprising? Apparently very few of the men chose "C" as their original preference. When he was asked how faithfully the regulations are currently being obeyed, Kevin replied that it is a little difficult to follow the rules, since the location is surrounded by "A" lifestyle on all sides . . .

To put a few minds to rest, it seems improbable that Tussey will retain its existing visiting hours. Mr. Jack Linetty, Director of Housing, has already been informed of the hall's vote; his decision on the matter is expected very soon. He stated that a "C" area was created as an option for males as well as females, and if only one person wanted it, the lifestyle was worth having. Because Tussey's decision was unanimous there is a fair chance that the policy will be modified.

The only question remaining in the men's minds; "Can we make it "A?"

Joint Program

Juniata president, Dr. Frederick M. Binder recently announced a new cooperative engineering program with Penn State. Students entering Juniata will spend three years in the Liberal arts along with pre-engineering courses in the natural sciences and then complete their studies in two years at University Park where specified engineering courses will be offered. While at Penn State, students would be enrolled in either the College of Engineering or the College of Earth and Mineral Sciences. Those with a "B" or higher average would be eligible for the engineering science major.

Additional information can be obtained by seeing your advisor.

The Love Bug? Ibrook Tower, Juniata's Band Director, had quite a surprise when he left band practice last Thursday night. It seems that his car was decorated and lifted onto the sidewalk. Nobody seems to know who perpetrated this unusual deed.

Tuition Rises Detailed

By Ann Wald and Linda Szczerba

A major concern for both college students and potential college students is the soaring rise in general fees. The increases are basically affected by the increases in the cost of living but an understanding of college costs and the distribution of general fees may account more satisfactorily for the increases.

Juniata has essentially two funds: the current operating fund and the capital expenses fund. The capital expenses fund is for expenses which are not annual occurrences. The current operating fund covers those costs concerned with the daily operations of the college; for example salaries and utilities.

Student revenues account for over eighty per cent of the current operating fund. This eighty per cent includes tuition fees, room and board, book-store expenditures, summer school fees and miscellaneous monies such as money paid in lab fees.

According to William R. Alexander, Business Manager, a major expense reflecting the cost of living increase in the amount the college must pay for fuel oil, natural gas and electricity. In citing statistics, Mr. Alexander showed that the cost of these necessities was $198,000 in the period 1972-1973. It jumped to $397,000 for 1976-1977. This is a one-hundred ten per cent increase. The general fee has increased over the entire period only twenty-seven per cent.

Mr. Alexander pointed out that the college community's concern for energy conservation has lessened. Therefore, the bills are correspondingly higher. Mr. Alexander also noted that Penelec has filed for a charge increase of eighteen per cent in the near future.

The total college operating budget is approximately six and one half million dollars of which two and one half million pay salaries and wages. The college must try to offer salaries and wages that keep pace with the cost of living.

The remaining fifteen per cent of the operating fund is provided by alumni, friends, the Church of the Brethren, the Juniata Parents Association, foundations, corporations and industries, matching gifts, government aid, temporary investments, endowments and other miscellaneous sources.

In the President's Report of 1975-1976, Dr. Binder stated the importance of maintaining a high student enrollment. Enrollment has an immense impact on the college budget. Atrrition rates fluctuate and may cause a loss of tuition monies. For this reason, long-range plans are important to the college program. The addition of new facilities such as the humanities complex and a swimming pool or improvements to old facilities such as the renovation of the old gym, will hopefully attract new students and retain present students.

J.C. Gets French Connections

Have you ever thought of dear old Juniata as an international school? If you haven't, maybe it's time you started looking around and saw all the first-hand cultural knowledge we have walking around the campus. This year there are many international students attending our college. The Juniatian would like to help you get to know them.

Guy Barbier, from Abbeyville, France, and Didiet Butel, from Boulogne-Sur-Mer, France, are both juniors involved in our exchange program with the University of Lille, France. Both students are studying chemistry. The program was developed through the efforts of Dr. Schettler and Professor Lepoutre. Dr. Schettler had studied at Lille for a time. The exchange is financed by Juniata students studying abroad. Each student pays his fee to the home college for the other student.

When they were asked why they wanted to come on this program their goals were pretty much the same. Didiet replied, "I didn't want to be only French and only understanding things with one outlook. I wanted to learn to speak English better, learn other ways, and the American school system." Guy also replied, "I wished to learn to speak English better and this is the best way."

I then asked them if they could compare the two systems for me; but they said that they were too different. "The work is more personal here." Guy stated that "it is very interesting to learn here. There are no levels between the teachers and students as in France. We have more facilities here to try to work on our own." They contributed this last factor to the size of Juniata. Didiet added, "Here we are excited by new surroundings that we are excited to do more."

When I questioned them about the activities available on campus, they responded favorably. It was their impression that there are many good groups on campus, that plan the activities. They mentioned that in France, if you want to play a sport on a field it is necessary to go into town. Both students have seen their first football game. Guy commented, "It was very rough, but when you know what is happening, it is very interesting." Didiet then added, "It is funny to see the players get so excited; but it seems as if they are not playing the sport to play — but only to win."

My next question was if they had seen the traditional "storming of the arch." They had, and both seemed to share the feeling that it was stupid. They felt it was "too rough and violent." Didiet commented that "in France there are also initiations, but they are usually funny — a sport. Nobody can get hurt."

As far as the food is concerned, they both felt that it is good. Guy mentioned that the hamburgers are much better here and they enjoyed eating corn on the cob. "We don't eat corn in France." They were most struck, however, by the huge breakfasts and the short amount of time that is spent eating a meal. Didiet then added that "what astonished us is that there is less difference between Americans and French people than between the English and the French who are closer."

Differences which were noted concern the Americans' attitudes toward news. "Americans seem to prefer to know more about small stories than great events. In France there is much more news about America."

Along Muddy Run

By Barb Frezza

Arnold Tilden, Juniata's new director of Student Services, may not consider himself a difficult person to approach; but he is next to impossible to find. Although his office is located on the second floor of Founders Hall, Dr. Tilden has, apparently, been in a continuous sequence of meetings since the first day of the term; as just about everyone with a legitimate complaint has discovered if they've tried to reach him.

I have made several embarrassing attempts to approach Dr. Tilden as he was crossing the JC campus; during which I managed to confuse him with Dr. Washburn, a salesman, and a puzzled parent of a prospective freshman. I don't know what the man looks like; and, as is the case with most of the students at Juniata, my parents aren't forking over $4600 a year for me to skip classes in order to attend over-glorified koffee klatches with various members of the JC administration. Besides, being seen with a member of Juniata's administration — unless absolutely necessary — would be as much of a faux-pas as decorating the lawn in front of Founders Hall with pink plastic flamingoes.

If only a handful of JC students believe that they've seen Dr. Tilden, (and we know how quickly rumors can spread around Juniata's campus), how can we be sure that Arnold Tilden really exists? Anyone can type letters, send memos or carry on a conversation behind closed doors. How do we know that one of the members of the Green Army isn't being paid time-and-a-half to wear a coat and tie to R.A. meetings, trustee dinners and other special events? Do you believe everything you read?

Assuming that Dr. Tilden doesn't exist, where is the money allotted for his salary being spent? Does the administration have a "slush fund" used to "buy" prospective freshmen for various athletic teams or to finance elaborate steak and lobster dinners for trustees? Egads! To think that corruption might exist at all levels of Juniata's administration!

This is not to say that Arnold Tilden does not exist; but to ask him, if he does exist, to please come out and face the "real" world here at Juniata College. Oh, and while you're at it, Arnie, how about looking into the possibilities of a telephone for N.J. House, getting someone to fix the hole in our bathroom ceiling ...

Flicks

By Judy Young

This week's Centerboard movie presentation is A Touch of Class, a very effective blend of comedy and reality. It is the story of an affair between two consenting, and, what's more, intelligent adults, and the stress of the film is on the fact that the protagonists are just that — intelligent, mature, and human, unwilling to face the fact that their relationship is necessarily temporary. Refreshingly free from the current deluge of so-called "adult" humor of innuendo and snickers, A Touch of Class is a genuinely funny and moving adult comedy.

The film stars Glenda Jackson as a self-professed "thief" of high fashion designs, and George Segal as a happily married businessman. They meet and decide that an affair is in order, and all of the arrangements are made in a strangely businesslike, "I'll get mine" manner. However, after coping with flight reservation tangles, unexpected acquaintances running into them, foreign car transmission problems and other "real world" hassles, trouble sets in. They're so aggravated by events and each other that they have a knock-down-drag-out fight which ends in a near-rape (the rape is foiled by a stuck zipper). This rather breaks the ice, and, by the time they're to return to England, they don't want to give each other up. Neither do they want to give up any of their own lives or independence, and it is in the resolution of this that the real story unfolds.

One of the strongest, most enjoyable films being offered this term, A Touch of Class will be shown this Friday evening, with cartoons preceding the movie. For this show admission is only 50¢, so, remember to be at Oller Hall at 7:30 tomorrow.

Doyle to Speak

A lecture-recital given by Dr. Esther M. Doyle, professor of English emerita, is scheduled this Thursday, Sept. 29, in the Shoemaker Galleries. The presentation will revolve about "The World of E. B. White."

The program, which begins at 8:15 p.m., will feature excerpts from, "Once More to the Lake," and, "Charlotte's Web." Also included will be readings of letters and verse written by White.

Dr. Doyle, a native of Boston, retired in 1975 after 30 years of teaching at Juniata. In that time she has been active in community affairs and now serves as a director of the Huntingdon County Arts Council.

All students are cordially invited to attend Dr. Doyle's presentation.

were able to control the situation.

Juniatian: Then you feel you were a type of guinea pig?

Kathy: I know we were — well, I can't say I know we were, but it seems to have had that effect.

Juniatian: Do you think that possible damage was a big factor in the decision to enforce the alcohol policy more firmly this year?

Kathy: I was told that, but my experience at parties on my hall is that there was never any damage — nothing to account for the thousands of dollars in damages I've heard about.

Juniatian: Do you feel that it's only at big parties or parties like yours that damage is (usually) done?

Kathy: I think that's what they (the Administration) think, but I think that's an incorrect assumption. But someone must have given them that idea. I think if you're the type of person that's going to cause damage, then you're that type of person, and it doesn't matter if you drink in your room by yourself (and then go out and tear up things) the type of party situation doesn't have much to do with it.

Juniatian: So they're saying that damage goes with large parties —

Kathy: — And I say that damage goes with the people who are going to do it.

Patty: I think to get rid of the damage, they should get rid of the people who do it, not the parties.

Kathy: If they (the RA's) could do what they did (at our party) and stay so aware of the party, they would obviously have been aware (if some damage had occurred or if there had been a good possibility of any occurring.) That would have been the time to take any strong action.

Juniatian: What type of alcohol policy do you then advocate?

Kathy: I think last year's policy was pretty fair. Mainly (this year) they are (more strongly) enforcing rules from last year. Just the fact that you are in an adult community being at college, just the fact that they (the RA's and administration) have the power to do something, if something gets out of hand or needs to be controlled, that, then, is good enough.

(Patty and Kathy are now on social probation, with a restriction preventing them from having any more parties. Both the probation and restriction are in effect until the end of the fall term.

If anyone would like to comment on this article, please contact the News Department of the Juniatian.)

But we can't do much without you. So call, write, or come on in to the Juniatian office and tell us your gripes. Remember, you have the Right to Gripe!

WKVR; What's Up?

By Nancy Rowe

WKVR, Juniata's college radio station, was granted a license by the F.C.C. last spring. A series of policy problems has deterred its airing.

According to Dave "Tree" Darkoch, station manager, the biggest deterrent is the lack of a second class license which must be obtained by the station engineer, Terry Stoner. Darkoch is considering asking an engineer from WHUN to temporarily fill the position.

Third class licenses must also be acquired by all disc jockies.

Dave Darkoch hopes to have these problems solved and WKVR fully operational sometime in October.

Cable Co. Crackdown

By Mark Wiener

The Huntingdon Television Cable Company has assumed a new, hard-line policy in dealing with violations of their contract by consumers, including students at Juniata. Any person(s) discovered to have tampered in any way with cable installations can and will be prosecuted, with the consent of the Student Government and the College Administration.

In the past, the relatively common practice of sharing cable installations in the dorms was based on such misconceptions as: "They'll have to come in the room and see it to prove anything;" and, "Even if they do catch us, we'll get a warning first." This may have been true in the past but no longer. To begin with, the company does have (as has been rumored) a mechanism that can detect the number of extensions connected to a given installation from outside at an inconspicuous distance. "Warnings will no longer be given," said a company official; every encroachment of the law will be prosecuted. A state law against "theft of services" carries a fine of $2500 and possibly one year of imprisonment. In addition there are also Federal laws which could be violated. The violator will be charged with any and all expenses involved in his apprehension and possible damage to cable installations.

The Cable Company officials noted that there is no method of signal theft that is not a crime, including directly hooking up to a television instead of splicing the cable or placing a wire near or around the cable itself. This also applies to placing an extension on a radio receiver without the company's permission. The officials also stated that they are aware that signal sharing is prevalent on campus and that they are able to make spot checks of any installation.

(A personal note from the reporter: If you are now involved in any of the above-mentioned "crimes," don't just write this off as a scare tactic by the company, and think that they really won't do something. From my off-the-record discussion with them, I sensed a certain sincerity and determination in their tone. They are tired of being "ripped-off," plus they have been pressured by the F.C.C. to stop the amateur extensions with inferior wire that can cause disruption of aviation communications and the like. If you continue using extensions of your own invention, you're taking a big chance, and there's a big difference between an initial $15 installation and $5.50 per month, and a $2500 fine.)

Juniata Nipped At Albright

By Bob Wallace

The Juniata Indians almost pulled off the upset of the year in the Middle Atlantic Conference last Saturday in Albright Stadium. But almost doesn't count, as Albright was able to rally from a 17 point deficit to beat the Indians 20-17. The loss dropped the J.C. record to 0-3 while Albright's slate jumped to 2-1.

Once again the J.C. offense failed to sustain a scoring drive. The defense was responsible for all of Juniata's 17 points. The scoring opened in the first period as Mike Stone intercepted a pitchout and raced 41 yards for the T.D. Stan Nosal booted the P.A.T. and also added a 23 yard field goal after a Lion fumble giving J.C. a 10-0 lead in the 2nd period. Once again the defense put points on the board as Scott Magley scooted 92 yards down the sidelines with an interception for six points. Nosal again converted the P.A.T. closing out the first half scoring at 17-0.

The Lions surged back with 14 points in the third period as Dan Daly scored twice. Daly plunged over from the one yard line and later caught a 26 yard scoring pass from Bill DeNicholas. Albright went ahead for the first time with 6:01 left in the game as Jeff Welch ripped off a 57 yard T.D. dash making the score 20-17. Juniata was unable to get within scoring range as time ran out on the Indians.

Coach Dean Rossi praised the play of his defense who played three quarters of excellent football on a wet, muddy field. But as Rossi said, the J.C. defense was forced back on the field too many times because of the lack of any offensive threat by the Indians. Rossi also had fine words for punter Tim Read, who averaged 35.7 on ten punts. Many of Reed's kicks backed Albright inside their 15 yard line.

The Indians will try to put one in the win column this Saturday as they travel to Gettysburg.

Juniata's Field Hockey team beat Frostburg last week.

Varsity Field Hockey Clinches Opener

By Marian Pagano

In the most exciting and action-packed field hockey game ever played by a J.C. team, the Indians won their season opener over Frostburg State of Maryland 1-0. The victory was especially sweet for team members as they handed Coach Nancy Harden her first Juniata victory.

The contest was fast moving from the opening bully which was handled with skilled ease by center forward Alison Reeves. The superb play and ball control demonstrated by the Juniata forward line kept the Frostburg defense against a wall for most of the first half as Juniata accumulated eight minutes of penetration time while holding Frostburg to two minutes.

Juniata had many shots on Frostburg's goalie, but there was no tally in the first half. Despite beautiful centering passes by wings Lisa Masood and Janet Bectal the Frostburg defense held on by a string and kept the Juniata score out of their nets. But then, just four minutes into the second half, Inner Marjie Porter took a shot from the top of the circle. Porter and Reeves then rushed in on the shot, enabling Reeves to push the ball past the Frostburg goalie and record the score.

The lone goal ended up being all the Indians would need as the Juniata defense led by excellent performances by fullbacks Nancy Osborne and Diane Derafelo held back the Frostburg attack. Juniata goalie Claire Swavely successfully handled the three shots Frostburg was able to get off throughout the game.

SCOOPS: The Juniata stick women defeated the Penn State Club in a scrimmage on Saturday 3-1. Goals by halfback Marian Pagano, inner Bonnie Cieslar and captain Alison Reeves, with assists from Capt. Janet Bectal, Reeves, and Bonnie Books respectively. Next game is Saturday October 1 at tough Dickinson.

Bock Builds Powerhouse

By Kathy Splane & Cheryl Ondechek

Just as every year brings new experiences and prospects, the girls' volleyball team is bursting with fresh characteristics: first year as a varsity sport, talent-laden freshmen, and a new coach. This year's team is under the leadership of 28 year old Larry Bock, a loan officer for Huntingdon's Union National Bank.

After lettering in both basketball and baseball in high school in Hooversville, Somerset County, Bock went on to graduate from Penn State in 1971 where he played club volleyball. His major volleyball experience, however, was acquired while playing the sport at YMCAs in Lock Haven and Somerset County, and at the Huntingdon Community Center.

As head mentor, Larry has great expectations for the upcoming season. Prior to practice, he hoped for nothing more than a good showing and enough improvement to make a challenge next year. But now, Coach Bock believes the team will do well throughout the season and at MAC's. He attributes this to the seven returning players from last year's club team and several outstanding freshmen athletes. His strategy is to begin with basic concepts and move on to more advanced offensive and defensive plays as the team improves.

Bock is a sensitive and understanding person. He wishes to gauge his expectations with their abilities so as not to overburden the girls, which could result in their losing hope. In addition, Larry didn't want to point out any specific areas of weakness. He felt this could have a demoralizing affect on the team.

Upon talking with Coach Bock and several team members, it becomes evident that mutual respect is present. They feel that his experience and knowledge of drills, tactics, and plays will do much to mold the team. His confidence of the girls is based on their immense talent.

Timid yet forceful, Larry will do much to construct a dynamic powerhouse. For a demonstration of this, come to the next game on Monday, October 3 at 7:00 against Dickinson in Memorial Gym.

New Skeet Club

By Sherry Heldibridle

Intercollegiate Skeet has just been added to the ever-growing list of club sports at Juniata.

The skeet club will be under the direction of Jack Linetty, Juniata's new Director of Housing. Though he's never advised a club before, Jack has been shooting skeet for about eight years, and feels confident as an instructor. His purpose for starting the club is not only to familiarize students with skeet shooting, but also to better acquaint them with firearms. He feels that if people understood guns better, fear of them would be disspelled.

Explaining skeet shooting as "a game of shot guns," Mr. Linetty also describes it as "a game of concentrated consistency. It's necessary to make one's body perform the same feat over and over which is difficult. Though not a spectator sport, there is real challenge in participating."

A roster of ten shooters will be sent to the American College Union International, who record scores of all competing teams. Juniata's team will then be matched up with other teams for nine matches, from October to April. Each team shoots a match at its facility, sending the scores to the ACUI. The scores are then compared and a winner determined. At the end of the season, a tournament will be held to determine the International champion.

The club's first match will be held October 6 at Shenecoy facilities, in McConnellstown. Interested students should contact Mr. Linetty, or attend a club meeting. No experience or equipment is needed, only the desire to try something new.

Juniata Schedules Homecoming Events

HUNTINGDON — A concert by jazz artist Lionel Hampton, alumni-student tennis and golf matches, a homecoming parade and football versus Susquehanna University are just a few of the special events planned for Homecoming Weekend, Friday and Saturday, Oct. 7 and 8, at Juniata College.

Registration for returning alumni will begin at 8:30 Friday morning in the college's alumni office in Founders Hall and continue through 5 p.m. that afternoon. On Saturday, registration will be held in the main lobby of Ellis College Center from 8 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Saturday's athletic contests will be previewed during an "Indian Club" luncheon, which is scheduled for noon Friday in the Faculty Lounge of Ellis College Center. Featured speakers at the gathering will be Coaches Dean Rossi, football; Nancy Harden, field hockey; and Don Mitchell, cross country.

Juniata's Raffensperger Courts will be the scene of an alumni-student tennis tournament. Doubles action is planned for 9 p.m. Friday evening; singles matches for 9:30 Saturday morning.

Opening Saturday's activities at 8 a.m. will be an alumni-student golf match at the Huntingdon Country Club, located on Route 26 south of Huntingdon.

At 10:30 a.m., the Juniata field hockey team will host Lycoming College on Sherwood Field.

The Homecoming parade will move out at 10:30 a.m., featuring a variety of mini-floats created by Juniata classes, clubs and other interest groups. Centering on the theme "Co.ors," the prize-winning parade floats will be chosen through balloting of registered alumni.

"Old Energy Forms: New Sources," a mini-class, will be offered at 11 a.m. in Alumni Hall of Brumbaugh Science Center by members of the science faculty who are involved in shale oil and coal gasification research.

Juniata's football game will begin at 1:30 p.m., while the cross country meet with Susquehanna University will begin at 2 p.m. Following the football game, Dr. Frederick M. Binder, Juniata President, and his family will greet alumni and guests at a reception on the patio area of Ellis College Center.

Concluding the day's activities will be a concert by the world-famous vibes artist and jazz master, Lionel Hampton, and his orchestra. The performance is set for 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall. Student tickets are $3.75 and can be purchased at the Ellis College Center information desk. Non-student tickets are $5.00.

Other offerings during the weekend will include a bookstore open house, admissions counseling and campus tours, and a display of Pablo Picasso prints, "Imaginary Portraits," in the Shoemaker Galleries.

Keith Berger offers insight into the art of Mime.

New Proposals for

New proposals affecting both institutions of higher education and students participating in the College Work-Study program were announced last Wednesday by HEW's Office of Education.

The College Work-Study program, authorized by the amended Higher Education Act of 1965, awards grants to schools and colleges which, in turn, find jobs for needy students. Employment may be on campus or in off-campus locations with a nonprofit organization such as a day care center or hospital.

Eighty per cent of the student's wages are paid with Federal funds and employers make up the rest.

The College Work-Study program is one of three campus-based student financial aid programs funded by the Federal government. The other two are the National Direct Student Loan program which provides low-interest loans to needy students and the Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant program which gives outright grants to students in extreme financial need.

The regulations for the College Work-Study program, which appear in The Federal Register, propose several major changes in the operation of the program. For one thing, they would simplify and shorten the application procedure for participating colleges and schools, with funding requests based on actual figures from the past year rather than on estimations.

Another change in the regulations would affect a student who works a second job along with the work-study assignment. If the income from the second job in combination with a student's other resources

Keith Berger: I Make You Believe

By Neeta Moonka

Keith Berger, an artist who performs an amazing type of entertainment called mime, is also a fascinating individual. Although most people can discover easily that Berger studied in France and then continued at the American Mime Theater, how much do they know about the other side of Keith Berger, his views on mime, on life, on himself?

When he was young, Berger would do mime just for fun. Later, he went abroad to study in France and then he continued his studies in the United States. He put the two styles together and formed his own style. Six or seven hours of his day are spent in rehearsal, yet he claims he still has time for other things. He added though, that he just doesn't sleep.

Berger described his own personality as "kind of shy, but with overt outbursts every so often. I'm not as shy as I used to be and I think I'm a bit crazy." Berger also has the ability to make people laugh and feel at ease. He is very honest about his life and his performing.

Berger explained why he chose mime as the area of the arts to perform in. "I think we can communicate more intimately with mime and that's the way I like to see things. I see our everyday life, our social life, as being very impersonal, but I think you can be a lot more personal if you're silent. If you kiss someone, you don't need to talk. It's a much more personal communication, so I like that feeling."

He claimed that he no longer felt nervous before a performance but that "I get excited. I start going a little berserk. People can't quite handle me or talk to me. I go a little mad, but I do that instead of getting nervous."

Keith Berger has a unique way of psyching himself for a performance. He described his method. "I find something that will get me turned on physically and any activity or thing, rub against the wall, scratch my hair a lot, shake my head, anything, take a towel and hug it or whatever, anything to get myself like sort of turned on and then you know how if you've run or done some physical activity you really like, you get kind of a glow or a feeling, a nice feeling, you do that and then you try to turn it

EDITORIAL:

CROSS COUNTRY CROSS?

Last week "The Juniatian" carried no article on Cross Country. This fact was made very clear to the editorial staff of the newspaper by two visits from team members, and by signs hung on the dining hall bulletin boards.

The reason that we had no article is that the printer had to cut the X country to be able to lay out the sports page. "The Juniatian" does not have a vendetta against Cross Country, we are merely the victims of limited space.

If last week's article had been of any length, the chances are that it would not have been cut. Unfortunately, we had no free reporters to do a major article on Cross Country. Bearing this in mind, I put a challenge to the members of the team: have one of the runners write something for the paper every week. This can range from merely making sure that we get the statistics from a meet to writing the actual article. Whatever form is chosen, it must be consistent, so that we can be sure of filling space. In doing this, not only does the team get coverage, but the newspaper is assured of an article.

"The Juniatian" has office hours from 6-8 p.m. on Monday through Thursday. Or, our mailbox is 667. If someone from the Cross Country team does not come forward within a week, we will know that last week's complaining was merely that; complaining.

ALONG MUDDY RUN

By Barb Frezza

No one was sure where the Grunge that ate Cloister came from. Some people believe that it may have been germinating in a bed of plaster chips since The Cloister was built, in 1928. Others have surmised that the Grunge was a conglomeration of hair and toilet paper that just got damn tired of being kicked away from the drains of the showers by purists — who don't believe that one should shower and swim at the same time. Regardless of its origins, no one realized the horrors that the Grunge could perpetrate — until it was too late.

As the Grunge oozed its way through The Cloister, objects began to disappear. Of course, nobody was going to get too excited over a few missing urinal partitions, window shades or screens. The Grunge grew.

With this increase in size came a directly proportional increase of the Grunge's appetite. The Grunge's usual fare of inanimate objects began to grow boring, so it switched to eating people. The first to disappear were the members of the Green Army responsible for keeping Cloister clean and in good repair. No one realized that they were missing until a student found the tattered remains of a uniform, while wading through a waist-deep pile of plaster chips and paper cups, on his way to class. The Grunge continued to grow.

Not satisfied with this repast, the Grunge began feasting on students. It seeped through the torn screens and doors which would not lock or close properly. The R.A.'s noticed that the halls had become considerably quieter during weekends, but they were grateful for this respite. It wasn't until they discovered that it was possible to use the washing machines before midnight that they realized something was awry. The Grunge grew even larger.

In its insatiable search for food, the Grunge started to eat away at the building itself. It started with the basement and fourth floor firetraps of the Arch, and progressed to the rest of The Cloister. Frantic R.A.'s tried to get in touch with Jack Linetty, Juniata's Director of Housing, but their phones had not yet been installed. The telephones in the hallways had long since disappeared.

As the Grunge finished digesting Juniata College's finest example of Pennsylvania German architecture, it started creeping slowly southward, in the direction of Maude Lesher Hall. The girls looked on in horror. What would become of them — and dear old Lesher? Suddenly, a resourceful junior coed dashed out of Lesher brandishing a can of Lysol disinfectant spray. She aimed it at the Grunge, (which had assumed humongous proportions), and sprayed until the Grunge's slimy countenance assumed the consistency of a giant crushed saltine. Lesher was saved!

Our director of housing will be pleased to know that the new concrete court and steps behind The Cloister, which were replaced this past summer, are still in excellent condition.

CLUB TAKES TRIP

By Bill Corbin

The first local field-trip of the Andy Lawson Geological Club was made this past weekend. A short trip was taken to the west limb of Jack's Mountain near Mapleton, where members searched for signs of mineralization in the Tuscarora sandstone formation. Aerial photography has shown signs of fracturing and faulting in this area and a survey of local streams by a Penn State geology team indicated high levels of lead, zinc, and iron.

Club members found vein crystalization of quartz, galena (a lead ore), and sphalerite (a zinc ore) in fractures lying perpendicular to the bedding. A future trip may include searching for these minerals farther along the strike of the mountain.

THE RIGHT TO GRIPE!

By Adam Banning

On Mountain Day the nine o'clock bus came, and so did the ten and eleven o'clock busses. There was only one problem; where was the 12 O'CLOCK BUS that was mentioned on every piece of literature given and shown to the Juniata public? This was the gripe given to me by a freshman by the name of Ron Geering.

The hunt was on to find out what happened to the twelve o'clock bus. The first stop was the office of student services. I was then told by a secretary there that the man I wanted to get in touch with was Wayne Justham. I got in touch with Mr. Justham and he gave me the name of the bus company that took care of the transportation for Mountain Day. So D called the "Blue and White Bus Company" of Altoona. Soon I was talking to the driver of the Juniata bus run (a man by the name of Charles Hammers). Mr. Hammers told me that a Center Board official (by the name of Stephen Volle) had gotten reservations for a 9, 10, and 11 o'clock bus. When I told Mr. Hammers about a 12 o'clock bus, it was news to him. The next day I got in touch with Stephen Volle and I asked him why there was no 12 o'clock bus. He replied that there was a confusion in pre-Mountain Day preparations and the reservation for a 12 o'clock bus was never made.

Due to the absence of a 12:00 bus, in the area of 50-100 students missed out on lunch and also missed out on a rather pleasurable event.

In conclusion: Center Board in the past has been known for very fun events. But for the future remember this, "When you forget one small detail you can produce one big screw up!"

And to my readers, remember, "You have the right to gripe!"

Senate Line

By Dave Powell

My name is Dave Powell, and I'm one of your senators this year, and have started a monthly column with the intention of providing an additional communications channel from Student Government to you, something more than the minutes of our meetings.

Several days before stereos began penetrating the campus air, about thirty members of Centerboard and Student Government, (S.G.) quietly arrived on campus. We were all then whisked off to a remote and peaceful spot called Camp Blue Diamond. There, we had canoe races, and played volleyball. But there were also many long hours of conferences, goal-setting, getting accustomed to others values, and deciding which organization should be responsible for what; all perhaps sounding quite simple, but taking some time to iron out. We now believe that we have a clearer perception of each of our roles, and are stronger as a result. Prof. Wise, Dr. Ron Cherry, and Marsha Hartman acted as very fine catalysts to the whole process, for which we are grateful.

One of the major improvements in S.G. this year has to do with communication. This is the first year that each dorm has its own representative to communicate its views and needs. The senate's attitude towards serving you has improved significantly as a result of this change.

The first two S.G. meetings this year were both approx. 2½ hours long and already some major "legislation" has passed, such as the budgets for the Alfarata, Kvasir, WKVR, and this paper. This information is available in the minutes or from your senator. Incidently, the minutes aren't just at the lunch lines, there should be a copy at the end of every hall on campus.

You should be interested to know that this year's refrigerators rented out by S.G. cost less to rent than last year, and use energy more efficiently. We received 100 initially, and just recently rented the one hundredth.

We are in the process of printing student directories, and it shouldn't be too long before they will be available. We have learned, that the yearbooks should be here in another week or so, in case you didn't know.

For the first time, S.G. has invested a short term surplus of funds with a local bank, rather than allow it to stagnate in the college account.

Did you know that the Blue and White bus that operates every Friday from here to Altoona and Pittsburgh will come up to Ellis Hall if you give Gateway Travel a day's notice? Now Gateway would like to know if there is a market for a Friday afternoon Harrisburg bus (train leaves at 8:18). If 25 people pay in advance, $6.45), a day ahead, the bus can operate. If you are at all interested, please drop a note to S.G. at box 995.

We hope to have some sort of explanatory bulletin available after the Freshmen vacancies are filled, illustrating and explaining the positions of the many S.G. and Centerboard committees and administration — student body liaision people.

Finally, Student Government is actively concerned about all aspects of campus life. It is our hope that you will now give us your serious input so that you will now give us your serious input so that our actions will reflect your desires and not our own.

Write us a letter, talk with your senators! We have already responded to complaints that came from students through their senators.

Picnic

The cast and crew of the Juniata Players are working hard on the play Picnic, to be presented October 28 and 29 at 8:15 in Oller Hall. The production is under the directorship of Dr. Howard Crouch, and includes the following cast members: Jeff Boulton, Rick Kraus, Michele Keric, Connie Andrus, Deb (T.C.) Datres, Penny Cameron, Denise Balmer, Ted Williams, Sue Kane, Annalisa Mulhollen, and Barry Oren.

James A. Quinlan, B.S. degree in business administration and M.Ed in student personnel, has been appointed director of the physical plant at the college. Quinlan will be responsible for maintenance, plant operations, utilities management and residential endowment property maintenance at Juniata.

into as much madness as possible, because then you can bypass your inhibitions that way and you're much more free to go out there and do what you want to do."

Berger felt that he has to change his routines every once in a while. Especially, when friends or someone asks when he is going to stop doing a particular routine. The way he tells his students to think up new acts is to pick the most important event in their life at the moment and do a piece about that. He said because you get behind it, it's very scary to do that. That was how he thought of looking into his head. He believes that everyone goes through that stage in their life.

Berger explained how he develops the character of a flame. "You don't think of it as a flame. Oh sure, when you practice it you do. You think of the character within it and if that's positive, right, then the character within the flame just does what it has to do within a structure and you don't even, psychologically, you just do it. You just feel yourself as a fire, as a character, the fire, you don't try, you just feel it. That's simply it, you could do it actually."

Berger loves to get the audience involved the best. He has performed in both Europe and the U.S. and he believes that the audiences have the same range of emotions, only in "different colors." He used to prefer a young audience. but now any audience is fine because he doesn't mind any type of feedback.

Keith Berger feels that he doesn't feel as confident as he once was. "Right now I don't, in a couple of years I think I will, but I'm going through some changes now. I was a lot more cocky then ... but now I have to get everything straight." He is looking for a pleasant medium.

According to Berger, mime is growing very much right now. It is very chic right now to do mime. He said, though, that that will die out in a few years, but it will have become more popular. He feels that Americans don't seem to identify with mime, for some reason.

Berger is broadening his experience through expanding and moving off stage. Although he likes stage best, he has done some film. He is planning to do some T.V. shots next year and he is going to make a movie he's written and will hopefully produce. Also he will have a show on Broadway this spring. Anyone who has ever seen Keith Berger perform or has spoken to him is mystified. Perhaps he describes it best. "I am a mime: an impossible doer of things, a weaver of spells, a magician you can't look away from. I make you believe."

to als more than $200 over his needs for college, the institution may either reduce his assistance or count the extra earnings as part of next year's resources. Once the $200 limit is reached, the institution may continue to employ the student in his work-study job, but the school must pay the total cost of his employment without the Federal share.

The new regulations also state that a student studying abroad in a program connected with his "home" institution may not pay travel costs or higher tuition fees, for example, with funds received from any of the campus-based programs or from the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant program.

In addition to the College Work-Study program, the regulations deal with the new Job Location and Development program. This program, authorized by the Education Amendments of 1976, will help colleges establish or expand programs to locate or develop jobs for students. Institutions will be able to use 10 per cent of their College Work-Study funds, up to a limit of $15,000 for this purpose.

Hampton to Perform

By Bill Corbin

A concert highlight, as part of Juniata's Homecoming Weekend activities, will present Lionel Hampton and his orchestra. Hampton, who introduced the use of the "vibes" as a jazz instrument, has been a musical entertainer for almost 50 years. His first recording experience came as a back-up player for the late Louis Armstrong.

In 1936, Hampton joined the well known Benny Goodman quartet, which featured Teddy Wilson on Piano, Gene Crupa on drums, Goodman on clarinet, and Hampton playing vibes. The group's female singer was Peggy Lee. Goodman's Quartet marked the first time that blacks and whites played together in a major musical ensemble.

After four years, Hampton struck out on his own. Since that time he has made numerous recordings and performed with well-known jazz artists such as Ernie Royal and Dinah Washington. The jazz man has toured the world dozens of times for the State Department and played at the White House for Presidents Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy, Nixon and Ford.

A favorite among the young, especially at this time when jazz has found a resurgence in popularity, Hampton nas been busy presenting shows at theatres, high schools, colleges, and nightclubs around the country. A recent high point in his shows was the "Jazz Special — One Night Stand," which reunited him with his former playing cronies, including Buddy Rich, Mel Torme and Gene Krupa. Another hit was a Broadway revue with Bette Midler that broke all house records and was sold-out for the entire 10-week engagement.

Curtain time, this Saturday night, Oct. 8, in Oller Hall will be 8:15 p.m. Tickets, at $5.00 per person, will be available at the door.

Dr. Chad Walsh, J. Omar Good Visiting Distinguished Professor.

Juniata's "77" Visiting Professor

By Wendy Chamberlain

"I suppose my life has really been divided in three ways," says Dr. Chad Walsh. "It may look sort of schizophrenic from the outside, though it doesn't feel schizophrenic from the inside."

Dr. Walsh is this year's J. Omar Good Visiting Distinguished Professor of Evangelical Christianity. The three hats he wears are those of teacher, clergyman, and poet.

First, he has been a member of the English faculty at Beloit College, Wisconsin, since 1945 and was a founder of the Beloit Poetry Journal.

Then, "along the way I got interested in religion and got ordained as an Episcopal priest." He assisted weekends in the local church in Beloit.

Third, Dr. Walsh is a poet. His sixth book of poetry is due in the spring. He has written a total of 22 books, which encompass all three areas of his life — literary criticism, theology, and poetry. His work has appeared in such magazines as Poetry, Saturday Review, Christianity Today, and Atlantic Monthly.

"I never work on poetry exclusively," he says. "It would be like eating nothing but candy."

"I can usually write prose most any time I have occasion to write it. But poetry's a different thing. I don't think my mood has much to do with the kind of poetry I write. I can sit down feeling extremely cheerful and write one of the gloomiest poems you've ever seen. And I can be feeling pretty depressed and write a cheerful poem. And I find it doesn't seem to matter whether I feel inspired or not. It has nothing to do with the quality of the poem I write."

The J. Omar Good professorship was established through the estate of Mr. Good who instructed that it be used for "the perpetuation of the Historical Triune Faith of Protestant Christianity." Dr. Walsh has been a visiting professor to Wellesley College and has held two Fulbright professorships, one to Turku, Finland, and one to the University of Rome.

The J. Omar Good chair provides a salary, a house, utilities, and a part-time secretary. The professor is to teach one course and use the other half of his time for research. Dr. Walsh is currently writing a critical biography of C. S. Lewis, his second book on the eminent British scholar, writer, and Christian apologist.

He knew Lewis personally. Their friendship grew out of a fan letter that Dr. Walsh sent after reading Lewis' Perelandra in 1948. Dr. Walsh wrote an article, "C. S. Lewis: Apostle to the Skeptics," for Atlantic Monthly a and decided to expand it into a book by the same title.

"He tried to persuade me not to write it. He said, 'Walsh, always write about safely dead people.' "

Program Offered

By Anne Wald

Are you interested in a Program of Emphasis in Religious Education? The Departments of Religion and Education are pooling their resources to establish a program which will prepare students both scholarly and professionally for a career in religious education. A survey of clergymen, colleges presently offering religious education programs, and a review of national trends in religious education indicate an increasing need for church workers prepared in religious education.

The fundamental goal of such a program is to develop competency in the following areas: basic studies in Bible and Religion, psychology of learning and personality, teaching theory and methodology, and administration of religious education. Students will have practicum and intern experiences in area churches. The internship will be offered the Fall term of the senior year.

Dr. Thomas W. Woodrow has been designated by Dean Hartman as Director of the program and coordinator of the Committee on Religious Education. The members of this Committee are Dr. Woodrow, Dr. Neito, and Reverend Andrew Murray, Campus Minister.

Radio City: Jan Gararek/"Dis"

By Jim Donahue

Garbarek is a progressive jazz saxophonist who has recorded on a lot of ECM sessions, notably with Ralph Towner, Eberhard Weber, and Keith Jarret. Garbarek & Co. are something of a new wave in progressive jazz — it is unlike the synthesized jazz/rock offerings of late — Chick Corea's Return To Forever, Jean-LucPonty and McLaughlin's Mahavishnu Orchestra, for example. Mostly composed of European musicians, this group uses primarily acoustic instruments and shies away from superproduction technology in the studio, recording the music only as it happens. The idea, I suppose, is that banks and banks of circuitry are not necessary, nor is multi-track or re-dubbing, given that the musicians are competent. These musicians prove the point well — their music can be light, ethereal, pointillistic, or brooding, haunting and otherworldly: without electronics, and the absence makes a notable difference in overall sonic quality. I don't really know if Garbarek et al., see their departures from fashion as a movement or wave, but if so, the recording called "DIS" should be their manifesto.

I first learned about the Aeolian Harp from Bill Hofelt in a lit course about the romantic movement. Aeolus was a Greek God of the wind and the poets Wordsworth and Coleridge likened the soul of man to a harp, whose sound was made by the wind; metaphorically, winds of change, emotion and life. Their movement was a reaction to the stiff, affected, and mechanical conventions of the Neoclassicists, and their writing turned nineteenth century art, music, and lit, around on its heels. On "DIS," Gabarek plays saxes, Ralph Towner plays acoustic guitars, and the third instrument is (did you guess?) an Aeolian Harp. A craftsman named Sverre Larssen made a string instrument "reacting directly to the airstream and creating a sound image of the wind ... thereby creating tones and overtones, which, in turn, are enhanced in a resonate body." Larssen and Jon Erik Kongshoag decided to set this thing up on the southern seacoast of Norway to record the wind off the North Sea.

The sound is something like the "drone" instrument of Indian music (whose name escapes me) but has more of a textural quality; the closest analogy is Wagner's Rhine theme in E from the Ring. The harp conjures up murky, eerie sound images from the North Sea, together with a sense of expectancy, unfocused longing, the 'sehnsucht' of the German Romantics. Garbarek's saxes and flutes provide a lyrical counterpoint to the ominous backdrop of the windharp; sometimes heroic and airborne, sometimes moody and somber. Towner's guitars add delicate rhythms and dissonances, again countering the dark aural qualities of the windharp. The closest thing to this from the other school, the Synthesizer Kidz, would be either Tangerine Dream or Brian Eno, but I would challenge them to produce an album that even approaches Garbarek's in terms of organic cohesiveness. I really don't advise that you jump right up and buy this record at the first chance you get, but, then again, just HOW LONG can you listen to Gary Wright? Huh?

Masumi Mizusawa, exchange student from Tokyo.

East Meets West at Juniata

By Wendy Chamberlain

Masumi Mizusawa is beginning her second year in the United States. Last year she was an exchange student at the high school in State College. The exchange was between two Episcopal churches: Masumi lived with the minister of a church in State College while his son stayed with her parents in Tokyo.

After her year in State College, Masumi investigated Penn State as a possible university to attend, she decided that it was too big. She chose Juniata College because "I thought a small college was much nicer."

"High school is much harder in Japan," says Masumi. When she returns to Tokyo, the public schools will not recognize the credit she has earned in the United States. Unless she can be accepted at an international college by scoring more than 500 on her verbal SAT, she will have to enter school again as a high school senior.

Students in Japan must pass a difficult examination simply to enter public high school. Those who don't pass must attend private schools. The pressure becomes intense by the end of high school when they must pass another exam to enter a university.

How is education here different from that in Japan? Most Japanese high schools are not co-ed. Colleges rarely have dormitories. And Americans "are more independent." Japanese students must take their education very seriously because the entrance exam is so important. This seriousness is one reason why there is almost no socializing among boys and girls. The boys especially hope to do well because graduation from a good university almost guarantees a good job.

It's not so important for the girls, says Masumi, since most of them get married. But she added with a grin, "My mom said if I don't go to good college I can't get good boy!"

Picasso's Lithographs on Display

A Special art display will be featured in the Shoemaker Galleries throughout the month of October. The collection, a set of lithographs by Pablo Picasso entitled "Imaginary Portraits," is part of a special limited edition consisting of 250 copies which were reserved for distribution in France and 250 copies for world-wide release.

The lithographs were conceived one day in 1969 when art supplies were delivered to Picasso at his studio/home at Mougins, on the French Riviera. Large panels of cardboard and wrapping paper sheets were lined against the walls while unpacking the supplies. As might be expected, on seeing these blank panels, they became a great challenge for Picasso — blank areas, begging for some kind of image. So at age 87, Picasso turned the corrugated cardboard into "Imaginary Portraits," a gallery of pictorial creations that have the vigor and daring of a young artist just at the beginning of his career.

Each print, a gift from Mrs. J. F. Oller of Waynesboro, is hand numbered and carries, in the plate, the signature of Picasso as it appears on the original.

The display will be open to the public from 2-5 p.m. daily at the Shoemaker Galleries on the corner of 17th and Moore Streets.

PA Homecoming Queens to Compete For Orange Bowl Trip

MIAMI, September 28, 1977 — Seventeen Pennsylvania colleges have agreed to enter the first All-American Homecoming Queen Contest that will send one outstanding homecoming queen from each state and the District of Columnia to the Orange Bowl New Year's Parade in Miami, according to Thomas B. Martin, vice president, public affairs for Johnson Wax.

The 51 college queens will join in Orange Bowl activities spread over six days, including a ride on the largest float ever to appear in the traditional parade, a special introduction during festivities preceding the kickoff of the Orange Bowl football game and honored seats on the 50-yard line.

The competition, designed to bring national recognition to the tradition of college homecoming queens, is being sponsored by Agree, the new creme rinse and hair conditioner from Johnson Wax, Racine, Wis.

The Agree All-American Homecoming Queens will be chosen on the basis of personal achievements and character as well as appearance, Martin said. Judging will be conducted by the Associated Collegiate Press, a non-profit organization based in Minneapolis and devoted to improving the standards of college journalism.

A $500 scholarship in the name of each selected homecoming queen will be presented to the general scholarship funds of their respective schools.

The 50 homecoming queens will participate in the "Great Bands Show" in the Bowl, sail in the first Orange Bowl Marine Parade on Biscayne Bay and attend the post-game banquet at Indian Creek Country Club.

James S. Billings, president of the Orange Bowl Committee said that the theme of this year's parade is "Of The World's Treasures" and predicted that the Agree All-American Queens will "highlight that theme in a most appropriate manner."

"We think that their appearance in the Parade will be simply spectacular," he said. "Certainly, the float they will be riding on will be spectacular, as it will be 125 feet long and 22 feet wide — the largest float in the 41-year history of the Orange Bowl Parade."

Entries in the national homecoming queen competition may be made by an official of any recognized college or university by writing to the Associated Collegiate Press, 720 Washington Ave., SE, Suite 205, Minneapolis, Minn. 55414. Deadline for receipt of entries is Nov. 1. "However, if the campus selection of homecoming queens is made after that date, extensions may be obtained by writing the A.C.P.," Martin said.

Some 300 colleges and universities already have taken steps to enter the Agree AllAmerican Homecoming Queen competition.

Pennsylvania schools entered to date are: Grove City College, Grove City; Slippery Rock State College, Slippery Rock; Susquehanna University, Selinsgrove; Washington & Jefferson College, Washington; Juniata College, Huntingdon; Geneva College, Beaver Falls; University of Pittsburgh, Johnstown; Wilkes College, Wilkes-Barre; Indiana University of Pa.; Indiana Ursinus College, Collegeville; University of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh; Elizabethtown College, Elizabeth; Muhlenberg College, Allentown; Duquesne University, Pittsburgh; Mercyhurst College, Erie; Villanova University, Villanova; University of Scranton, Scranton.

PHEAA to Extend Deadlines For Flood Victims

Emergency steps have been taken by the Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency (PHEAA) to provide state grants for higher education to families that sustained substantial losses during the flood in Johnstown and eight surrounding counties.

The Agency announced today that it will waive the normal May 1 filing date in those flood cases so as to be able to extend special consideration. Normally, May 1 is the deadline date for filing for State Higher Education Grants. Applications received after that date are considered "late" and — depending on the Agency's funding situation for a particular year — they can either not be considered at all or be given late consideration, funds permitting.

In the case of the flood victims the Agency will consider them "on-time" if their applications are already on file or are received by November 1, 1977. About 700 students from the flood area had filed late and may now be eligible for reconsideration if they have suffered flood losses. Affected families should file a Flood Loss Form which the Agency has sent to them.

Besides this group of 700 who currently are on file as late applicants there are a number of others who did not submit applications but now have either enrolled in school or have decided to enroll. These potential applicants have until November 1, 1977 to apply. There is no firm estimate as to how many are in this group.

Explaining the action taken by the Agency, Kenneth R. Reeher, Executive Director of PHEAA, said that in the past the Agency has always tried to make exceptions in instances where a tragedy or other unforeseen circumstance arises. It did so in the floods of 1972 and 1975. Reeher said the Agency has been in contact with the financial aid community throughout the state to enlist their cooperation in working with and identifying flood victims so that their academic future would not be impaired by disruption due to the tragedy.

HEW Cleans House

More than 300 persons currently employed by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare have defaulted on Guaranteed Student Loans, HEW's Office of Education announced Tuesday.

According to Leo Kornfeld, Deputy Commissioner for Student Financial Assistance, the defaulters were identified by HEW's Office of the Inspector General in "Project Cross-Check," a computer operation that checks Guaranteed Student Loan default files against HEW payroll records.

"We are stepping up the collection effort all over the country," Kornfeld said, "and it's only fitting that we first put our own house in order.

"These employees are making at least $5,800 a year and, in some cases, more than $30,000. They're able to pay, and we intend to collect."

The expansion of Cross-Check to other Federal agencies is being considered.

Claims totaling more than $403,000 have been paid to lending institutions for loans defaulted on by 316 HEW employees located across the country. Twenty-nine of the employees work on an hourly wage, but the rest have Civil Service ratings that range from GS-1, with a beginning salary of $5,810, to GS-15, with a beginning salary of $33,789.

The Office of Education is sending letters to the employees, asking them to begin repayment immediately. Follow-up letters will be sent to the supervisors of those who do not respond. Should the defaulter refuse to make payments, his or her case will be referred to the Department of Justice.

Cross-Check is one of several efforts planned or already underway to recover defaulted Guaranteed Student Loan accounts. On September 8, for example, the Office of Education announced that defaulted federally insured student loan accounts would be placed in the hands of a private collection organization.

Kornfeld said the organization must have "nationwide experience in collecting consumer loans and in tracing the whereabouts of defaulters."

Tuition Tax Credit Plan

WASHINGTON — Warning that sky-rocketing tuition costs threatened the hopes and dreams of millions of American families, Senator John Heinz (R-Pa.) and 42 of his Senate colleagues today joined in offering legislation to give tax credits to almost every American who has to pay education tuition.

The legislation would allow taxpayers to subtract one-half of the tuition they pay, up to a $500 maximum credit per student, directly from the income taxes they owe. Senator Bob Packwood (R-Ore) and Senator Daniel Moynihan (D-NY) are the measure's principal sponsors.

"Middle income families are being crushed by education costs," Heinz said. "Upper income families can afford the tuition costs, while low income families can usually obtain financial aid.

"That leaves middle income families with a cruel dilemma — either denying their children the benefits of college, private or parochial high school and grade school education, or else cutting out real necessities in the effort to scrimp by for the five, ten or fifteen years of heavy tuition payments."

The legislation Heinz is cosponsoring blankets all levels of education and includes public, private and parochial schools. To be eligible for the credit, an individual can be a part-time or full-time student at an elementary or secondary school, a vocational school, or a college and university. Included are business and education schools which meet the basic accrediting standards of the Office of Education. The tax credit is also refundable if the credit is greater than the tax liability.

Enrollments for private elementary and secondary schools will drop by 50% by 1984 because of escalating costs. Similar conditions exist at the college level with average costs at a public college now averaging $2,790 per year and $4,568 at private colleges.

Course for Hyperactive Children

HUNTINGDON — The Juniata College Continuing Education Program will offer "Coping with the Hyperactive Child" on two Saturdays, Oct. 15 and 29.

According to Dr. Duane F. Stroman, continuing education director, the purpose of these two five-hour sessions is to provide parents, guardians, teachers and other individuals with an overview of the causative factors in the behavior of hyperactive children.

During the sessions, which run from 9 a.m. until noon and from 1-3 p.m., alternative treatment programs will be discussed and opportunities for question-answer periods will be provided.

The preregistration deadline for the class is Friday, Oct. 7.

For more information regarding preregistration and costs, contact Dr. Stroman at Juniata College, 643-4310, ext. 11.

"Not Exactly A Foreigner"

By Wendy Chamberlain

Cathy Oliver grew up in Quebec, Canada, but she isn't exactly a "foreigner." She was born in Memphis, Tennessee, and moved to Canada at age three. Now she has chosen to return to the U.S. to attend college.

"I didn't want to stay in Quebec because of the political situation. And our school system is different," she said. High school there ends with the eleventh grade, but two more years of a kind of junior college, or a college prep program are required to enter college.

One basic difference between school in Quebec and school in the United States is that there she had to be fluent in French to graduate from high school. Cathy lived in an English-speaking community, but business and government are conducted in French. "In order to get a job you almost have to be bilingual."

School is also more difficult in Canada. The eleven years are fairly equivalent to our twelve years in American schools. Grading is done by percentile. "I've never had the A-B grading system before in my life," she said.

But basically there are no differences between young people, said Cathy, except for slang expressions. "Canadians always say 'eh.' Americans say 'you know.'"

FURNACE SITE OF DIG

By Judy Lee Young

Last week's Mountain Day festivities took place at a park called Greenwood Furnace (right?). If any of you decided to find out what "Greenwood Furnace" is by walking to the archaeological site, you're probably still not too close to the truth.

Greenwood Furnace is (or was) the name of a town of about 300 people, or 75 families, whose lives were totally centered on the production of steel. A large area of the town is now in what's known as Greenwood Furnace State Park. The park is designated to be a recreational area. However, due to the efforts of Dr. Heberling and some Juniata students, the area is rapidly gaining strong historical significance.

Dr. Heberling and his crew began work on the area two years ago. They had a slight advantage in that they knew what buildings and structures were typical of the steel industry town, and, through extensive surveying, were able to pinpoint the locations of many of these.

Historically, Greenwood Furnace is an excellent example of a once-flourishing early American industry. Although only one of about 350 such villages in America in the 1800's (one of 30 in Huntingdon County alone), Greenwood Furnace is the only one with both a cold blast stack and a hot blast stack. Also, due to many convenient features of the geography — iron ore, wood to form charcoal as fuel for the furnace, limestone, water power, and cheap land — the Greenwood Furnace community was much more durable than most. It lasted for about 70 years (from 1833 to 1904) while most similar communities lasted for about 15 years only.

The industry at Greenwood Furnace finally collapsed, not for the lack of iron ore, but from lack of trees to provide charcoal for the furnaces. It took one acre of standing timber to run the furnace for one day, producing two tons of pig iron. An amply wooded area when the village was begun, by 1904, the entire area as far as Bear Meadows had been "coaled off." (All of that beautiful Mountain Day foliage has appeared since that year.) Within just a few weeks, the village of Greenwood Furnace was entirely and permanently evacuated.

Dr. Heberling and his crew have succeeded in finding the coal blast furnace (the exposed one is the hot blast furnace, built at a later date), the water wheel pit, bellows house, casting room, tramway, blacksmith shop, scales, and loading platform. Work has not yet begun on the residences, schoolhouse, grist mill, tavern, and toll house. Dr. Heberling's aim is to "locate and expose the masonry structures associated with the industry." He anticipates about five more years of work. No reconstruction is planned.

Dr. Heberling also hopes to shed new light on what he believes to have been a feudal, guild system of society operating in small industry towns. It is believed that the ironmaster and his wife were the "king and queen" of the village, and that the workers in each major job (miners, foundrymen, muleskinners, etc.) lived in segregated communities.

Of the many other villages of this type, two have been completely restored, to the point of being in operating condition. These are the Old Saugus Ironworks of Massachusetts, built in 1646 (making it the first such successful ironworks) and another in Hopewell Township, Berks County, Pa. The Curtin Furnace in nearby Bellefonte is being excavated under the sponsorship of the Pennsylvania Historical Museum Commission.

The efforts of Dr. Heberling and three Juniata students in particular — Jay Graybeal, John Van Horn, and Tom McConnell — have become publicly recognized. On Mountain Day, five programs were filmed for Nova, each four or five minutes long, to be run in January. These programs emphasize the social and historical aspects of the village, and the role that Juniata College has taken in the research.

TAKE THIS AD TO DINNER

More than fifty percent of the world is starving. Another twenty percent, just plain hungry. And yet, in the face of starvation, they have hope. Hope that the rains will return to the African Plain. Hope that the Asian rice crop will be bigger this year. Hope that someone, anyone, with anything to offer will come to help them fight the battle for life. Someone in the Peace Corps. They'd like to stand up for themselves, these prisoners of fate, but they're just too weak to stand up. But with the Peace Corps a flame begins to flicker. They've seen other like you before. Seen the changes you can bring. Two thousand wells on the parched earth of Sahel. Seen how their knowledge helped reduce the grain losses. Who are they? They're people pretty much like you. People with commitment and skills who've assessed their lives and decided there must be more than just having a job. They looked into themselves and knew it was time for the talk to end and the work to begin. They're very special people, these people. Totally prepared to give everything they've got. And getting back even more than they give. That's the beauty of the Peace Corps. The work is hard and the pay is lousy, and the progress comes a drop at a time. But the rewards are infinite.

Juniata Wins at Gettysburg

By Bob Wallace

The Juniata Indians put their first notch in the win column last Saturday as they handed the Gettysburg Bullets a 14-13 setback at a rainy Musselman Stadium. For the first time this season the Indians displayed a functional offense as they racked up 14 second quarter points and made them stand.

Gettysburg missed a chance to open the scoring as Mike Stone recovered a fumbled pitchout on the Indian three yard line. The Indians were unable to move the ball and punter Tim Reed uncorked a 70 yarder that put Gettysburg back on their own 17 yard line. The Indians took over then midfield after a punt and scored in eleven plays. Quarterback Wayne Emerick hit tight end Tom Gibboney on an eight yard scoring pass. Stan Nosal converted the P.A.T. and the Indians had a 7-0 lead.

Two minutes later the Indians added seven more points. On first down from the 49 yard line Tom Trappezzano took a straight dive handoff and raced 51 yards for the touchdown. Nosal converted again and the Indians took a 14-0 lead at halftime.

Gettysburg scored on their first possession of the second half as Dave Natale capped a 67 yard drive with a two-yard T.D. run. Ed Williams kicked the P.A.T to make the score 14-7. The Bullets scored again in the fourth quarter on a Mike Ryan to Bill Sims 14 yard pass. Williams failed to convert the point after and Juniata held a slim 14-13 lead.

Gettysburg mounted a drive to take the lead but the Juniata defensive unit held tough, the big play being a quarterback sack by middle guard Dom Deleasi at the Indian 21 yard line. The Bullets eventually missed a 20-yard field goal and with little time remaining the victory was sealed.

The Indians will try to make it two in a row on Saturday as they take on Homecoming foe Susquehanna.

Juniata	0	14	0	0-14
Gettysburg	0	0	7	6-13

JUN — Gibboney 8 yard pass from Emerick (Nosal kick)

JUN — Trappuzzano 51 yard run (Nosal kick)

Get. — Natale 2 yard run (Williams kick)

Get. — Sims 14 yard pass from Ryan (Kick failed)

Smoke Signals:

The Bullets racked up 23 first downs and 336 total yards to 10 first downs and 232 yards for the Indians ... Next week's opponent, Susquehanna, was shut out by Lycoming last week 7-0 ... After a two year absence, Juniata is again a member of the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference as a Division III participant ... Punter Tim Reed had another good game as he averaged 41 yards on nine kicks.

J.C. Ruggers Win 10-8

The Juniata Rugby Football Club, coming off defeats at the hands of Penn State and Susquehanna Universities, opened a four-game home stand with a double victory over the A&B sides of Frostburg State College last Saturday.

On a muddy field and in somewhat less than ideal weather, the Juniata club kicked off to begin the eighth meeting of what has become a rivalry. The early going was slow as each side probed the other for weaknesses. None were found, however, as both teams were playing solid defense.

The first break of the game went to Frostburg. Following a knock by a Juniata forward, fly-half Kevin Kraft of Frostburg (all 6'4", 250 pounds of him) took off on a sixty-yard jaunt down the sideline, shedding three Juniata tacklers for the score. The try was unsuccessful; Frostburg 4, Juniata 0.

The half proceeded from that point in a stalemate until, at 20 minutes into the first half, Frostburg's outside center David "Blitz" Blesser took the ball over. Again, the try was unsuccessful; Frostburg 8, Juniata 0.

The second half was Juniata's coming-out party. JC wing ¾' Bob Powderly was the first to score. Following a perfectly executed advancement of the Juniata backs, Powderly bowled his way over from the 15 yard line to score a flying try in the corner. Fly-half Terry Longenecker kicked the conversion from the sideline, splitting the uprights This made the score Frostburg 8, Juniata 6.

Two minutes later, Longenecker took the ball and broke upfield on a 70 yard run, scoring the second try of the game. The kick failed; Juniata 10, Frostburg 8.

Volleyball Wins Three

By Kathy Splane & Cheryl Ondechek

On last Tuesday and Thursday evenings "Larry's Ladies" proved to be the dynamic powerhouse that was predicted. The women's volleyball team opened the season splendidly, by defeating both UPJ and PSU-Altoona.

The season opener on Tuesday, September 27, showed the strength of the team. Playing a best of five series, the Indians beat their opponents in only three games. JC had a commanding lead of 14-0 before UPJ scored, and the girls went on to win the first game 15-5. Two strong scoring spurts enabled them to clinch the second game 15-4. However, JC was awarded the final point on a foul by UPJ.

The third game proved to be closer than the final score revealed. The pace was slower and the play wasn't as tough. Despite UPJ's poor sets, they were able to score some points due to the deteriorating play on the part of the Indians. After close scores and much trading of serves, JC won 15-8, to sweep the match.

The Indians have an immense amount of skill and talent and this is multiplied by the fact that they work extremely well together. The girls have quick reflexes and good judgment. Sophomore Lissy Sencindiver is a big asset to the team with her outstanding serves. In addition, in the relatively weak area of spikers, freshman Julie George stands out.

On Thursday September 29, the girls travelled to Altoona for the second game of the season. Despite the fact that PSU was only a fair opponent, the Indians were defeated in the first game, 15-12.

After winning a strong second game, 15-4, the girls struggled to squeeze out a 16-14 victory in the next game. Losing 7-1 before rallying, JC was aided by good calls on the part of the refs. PSU lost the serve after calling too many time outs, and later, the Indians were awarded the thirteenth point when Altoona made more than the allotted number of substitutions per game.

On Monday October 3, Juniata breezed past Dickinson before a large home crowd. Displaying what Captain Priscilla Grove called "The best team work to date," JC downed Dickenson three straight, 15-6, 15-5, 15-5. The game was a positive indication of championship material. "Everybody was excellent," Grove added, "Serves were very tough and consistent. There was especially good crowd support, and that really helps the team's spirit and morale." The team truly deserves the support of the entire college community. By the way, the next home game will be on Oct. 13 against Susquehanna at 6:30 p.m. in the Memorial Gym.

Cross Country Carries On

By Mindy Anderson

The Juniata harriers are now 21 on the season, as of Saturday. Starting off on the right foot, Juniata showed the Albright Lions a fine performance on September 24. Scott Malay, a J.C. sophomore took 1st, followed by Joe Guth who captured 3rd. Juniata then proceeded to fill in 3 spots with Foster, Schuler and Bodley in 5th, 6th and 7th respectively.

With one win under their belt, Juniata took Dickinson on the home course September 27. As Dr. Mitchell had stated previously the course produced faster times. Freshman Joe Guth proved this point by establishing a new course record of 32:11:5 and capturing first. The harriers seemed to come through in basically the same order. Scott Malay took 3rd, with Foster and Bodley coming through 5th and 6th.

Unfortunately, the Indians ran into trouble with the Gettysburg Bullets. The M.A.C. champs romped over J.C. 47-15. Gettysburg managed to fill in the first five places with a winning time of 27:11. J.C.'s first man in was Joe Guth only 24 seconds behind first with a time of 27:35. Other finishers on the J.C. squad included Foster, Schuler, Bodley and Moore, from 11th to 14th place. The next cross-country meet is this Saturday during half time of the Juniata-Susquehanna football game. Come out and help Juniata boost their record to 3-1.

J.C. Field Hockey Ties

By Marian Pagano

Juniata's Women's Field Hockey team traveled to Dickinson College last Saturday to play the tough Red Devil team. The Indians expected a tough game and got one as the game ended in a 2-2 tie. All of the scoring came in the first half, as a monsoon slowed down the play of both squads in the second half.

Dickinson started off the scoring about twelve minutes into the first half as they beat the JC defense for the score. But Juniata stayed on top of things and in a few minutes answered Dickinson's goal. Juniata's goal came a few minutes after a series of penalties corners which JC wasn't able to convert into goals. Finally Capt. Alison Reeves got a good shot off at the Dickinson goalie. Marj Porter was there to rush the ball into the nets and record her second goal of the season.

Juniata had the momentum of the game with them as they were threatening to score again and did when Porter got a shot off from the top of the circle. The ball took a flying bounce off the pads of the Dickinson goalie when Capt. Janet Becthal came flying in to punch the ball into the cage, and Juniata was on top 2-1. Dickinson controlled the bully after the JC goal and ran the ball down the field past a stunned Juniata defense and tied the game at two all.

That was all of the scoring there would be Saturday afternoon as the pouring rain restricted the play. The game was completed though and a team of drenched JC players walked off the field knowing that if the weather had been better the victory would have been theirs. Juniata, however can look forward to possibly playing Dickinson again when they go to the MAC tournament on Nov. 4 and 5.

SCOOPS: The J.V. squad also tied the Dickinson JV by a score of 2-2. The JC goals came from halfback Denah Appelt and inner Cindy Hastings, but the entire squad looked impressive and were just five minutes from a victory when Dickinson tied it up ... Juniata will host Lycoming's field hockey squad at 10:30 on homecoming weekend, here is a great opportunity to see a fast and exciting sport played by a highly skilled JC squad.

MOUNTAIN DAY '77

By Lynn Goodale

Anticipating the unpredictable local weather, students and faculty members alike took a break from classes on September 28 and headed towards Greenwood Furnace State Park with umbrellas and raincoats in hand to partake in the numerous events of the traditional Mountain Day festivities. Although this event was originally scheduled to be held at Whipple Dam Recreation Area, the location was changed because of a lack of land space which was necessary for some of the planned activities.

Upon arrival at the park, students enthusiastically ran from the buses to participate in such activities as volleyball, horseshoes, and hiking. Later in the afternoon, the Juniata college community was treated to a picnic lunch consisting of barbequed chicken and spare ribs. After lunch, everyone went off to relax and enjoy the park before the competitive events began.

The freshman girls displayed their athletic prowess in the tug of war event by successfully defeating the sophomore and senior girls, and finally, in a final display of strength, the senior men. Other competitive events included the egg toss competition and the senior-faculty touch football game. The seniors defeated the teaching staff by a score of 14-7.

Juniata Humanities
Center Supported by Grant

HUNTINGDON — The Kresge Foundation of Troy, Mich., has provided a $75,000 challenge grant to Juniata College which will support the construction of a $400,000 humanities center next spring.

The gift, announced today by Dr. Frederick M. Binder, Juniata president, will be remitted when the balance of the funds required — $325,000 — has been obtained in gifts and commitments. The balance must be raised, it is further stipulated, on or before April 15, 1978.

The humanities center is designed to be the focal point of the college's humanities cluster, which will be situated on 17th Street between Mifflin and Moore Steeets. Juniata has already raised the necessary $200,000 for the renovation, refurbishing and landscaping of the Shoemaker Art Gallery (the Carnegie Building) and the four large McKinley-vintage houses comprising the humanities cluster.

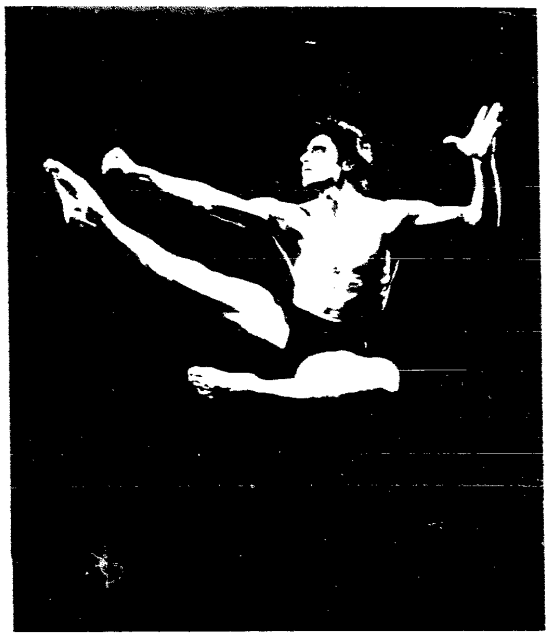
The cluster, including the humanities center, will house the departments of art, history, foreign languages, philosophy, English and religion, and will provide much-needed seminar rooms, small classrooms and faculty offices. This development plan is the most economical approach to the college's space requirements, Binder notes.

To be located on the site of the former Oller House, the humanities center will be a two-story structure with Georgian-style architecture. The center will include several seminar rooms, a dozen faculty offices and a lounge area. A courtyard area will be situated at the rear of the building.

According to Dr. Binder, "The humanities center is a needed and significant development for the continued excellence of Juniata as a liberal arts and sciences institution. With the help of The Kresge Foundation grant and similar gifts from our several constituencies, we shall have a greater capacity to meet the needs of the young men and women of Juniata."

During the past 54 years, The Kresge Foundation has made appropriations of more than $283 million to institutions in the fields of higher education, health services, the arts, social welfare, and the care of the young and the aging. Construction and major renovation of facilities is the Foundation's primary concern, and grants are usually made on a challenge basis to encourage further fund-raising efforts.

The Foundation, one of the largest in the United States in size of assets and appropriations, was created solely through the gifts of the late Sebastian S. Kresge, founder of the S. S. Kresge Company, now known as K mart Corporation. However, the Company and the Foundation are not related in any way.



Edward Villella will appear at Oller Hall, Oct. 24 at 8:15 in the second program in the continuing Artist Series.

Saturday Night Live

By Kathy Splane and Cheryl Ondechek

The Other Brothers, musical sensations from Pittsburgh, highlighted last weekend on the J.C. campus. The Sherwood basement was once again the scene of a Saturday Night Coffee House, on October 15.

Forty-seven people came and heard excellent renditions of musical compositions by such artists as: Led Zeppelin, Cat Stevens, Paul Simon, Flatt & Scruggs, and Dan Fogelberg.

High points of the evening's entertainment included the all-time favorite "Stairway to Heaven," foot-stompin' "Dueling Banjos," and humorous Archibald Bairasole.

Although the attendance was not at its maximum, "the turnout was fairly good, considering the number of students on campus" during this past weekend.

Psychic to Perform this Weekend

HUNTINGDON — Mentalist-hypnotist Gil Eagles will present a program of extra sensory perception (E.S.P.) and hypnosis as part of Parents Weekend activities at Juniata College.

The Gil Eagles Show, scheduled for 8:15 p.m., Saturday, Oct. 22, in Oller Hall, is sponsored by the Fine Arts Committee of Center Board, a student organization.

The public is cordially invited to attend. Admission is $2, and tickets will be available at the door.

Known as "the entertaining psychic" and "the world's fastest hypnotist," Eagles has appeared on more than 300 college and university campuses throughout the United States and Canada. He has also entertained audiences on four other continents.

According to reviewers, the Eagles Show is "incredibly staggering," "puzzling in nature, memorable in entertainment a masterful presentation" and "unquestionably entertaining."

Villella to Dance at Juniata College

HUNTINGDON — Edward Villella, hailed as the most exciting American male dancer of the past quarter-century, will appear Monday evening, Oct. 24, in the second program of the 1977-78 Juniata College Artist Series.

The dancer's program, which is scheduled for 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall on the Juniata campus, will feature not only dance demonstrations, but lecture and film as well.

Villella will also hold an hour-long session Monday afternoon at 3:30 p.m. in Juniata's Memorial Gymnasium Designed for members of athletic teams and other interested individuals, the program will stress the relationship between ballet and sports.

Best known as Principal Dancer with the New York City Ballet for more than 15 years, Villella has appeared with the Royal Danish Ballet, the Royal Winnipeg Ballet, at the Brussels World's Fair, London Festival Hall, Jacob's Pillow and the Boston Arts Festival. He also

Freshmen Find Officers

By Jenny DeBoy

Last Thursday, October 13, freshmen class elections were held in the lobby of Ellis Hall. Elected to this year's three senatorial positions were Lynn Goodale, Robin Propst, and Karen Snyder. As freshman senators, they will be working with the Juniata Student Government Association.

Freshmen also voted that day for their Steering Committee, consisting of Hattie Braun, Jenny DeBoy, Henry Gibbel, Nancy Law, and Justina Perrine. Its responsibilities include such projects as the annual slave auction and the freshman production for All Class Night. Also, officers for the Class of '81 will be working together with this year's upperclassmen officers on a raffle to raise needed funds for all four classes.

Senators and Steering Committee members are willing to accept suggestions from their freshman classmates regareding any aspect of their class government.

Invasion of Privacy?

The 1977-1978 Student Directory was finally published the week before last. Basically, the directory looks like last year's, except for the "Leaves of Absence" section. It seems that this year's "leaves" section lists some fairly personal reasons for absences; reasons that should not be public information.

I, for one, would not like to have the fact that I had "personal" or "financial" problems published for the rest of the student body. Regardless of whether or not I plan to return to Juniata College, the reason for my absence is not the business of the remainder of the Juniata community.

The Office of the Registrar, the agency responsible for the directory, did not intentionally print these personal reasons. Rather, it was a matter of someone typing the "leaves of Absence" section right from the forms submitted by the students, while someone else didn't catch the error before the directory went to press. This would seemingly be a simple oversight.

Simple oversights, however, can cause complicated problems. Any journalist can tell you that. Hopefully in this case, the people involved, and their friends and families, will understand the mistake and not take offense. The registrar says that the same thing will not occur next year as it's "not very good for public relations."

Proofreading of any publication is essential. As a newspaper, "The Juniatian" is well aware of this fact. Perhaps the Office of the Registrar, in addition to all other organizations and departments of Juniata College should keep that in mind when preparing something for public distribution. It's a very good way of improving "public relations."

Letters to the Editor

Editor's Note: The signature on the second letter in last week's paper was accidentally cut. The letter was written by Neeta Moonka, a Freshman.

To the Editor :

We are writing this letter to protest the shoddy and flimsy manner in which Kim Ford Studios has presented their photography offer concerning Senior Yearbook pictures.

A phone call was necessary to straighten out the jumble contained in their descriptive folders. As a result of the conversation we learned the following:

1. There was nothing explicit in their "information" about returning the pictures — they must be returned.

2. There is a $7.50 charge (plus tax) if you want to keep all five of the photos. There was no mention of this anywhere.

3. The arrangement of the pictures in the folder does not correspond with its numbered configuration.

4. They are arranged as follows:
1 (top left), 2 (top right), 3 (bottom left), 4 (bottom right), 5 (the extra one).

The pictures may have been of fine quality, but the same cannot be said of the studio's organization. The responsibility that we have taken in writing this letter should have belonged to Kim Ford Studios, and not his customers.

Dear Editor,

In response to Neeta Moonka's letter to the editor in the October 13th edition of the Juniatian, I personally feel that many of her criticisms and accusations directed towards the Student Government's conduction of this year's freshman elections were somewhat unreasonable and unjust.

Granted Todd Kulp had no right to describe the Freshman class as being apathetic, especially when as president of the Student Government, it was his responsibility to inform the incoming freshmen of how Juniata's student government operates. Yet Moonka's statement concerning Kulp's unaccessability was totally unfounded. When I decided to run for a position in Student Government, I first obtained a petition from — if you noticed Neeta probably not misinformed but rather busy information desk. Upon returning to my dormitory I asked the first upperclassman I saw who our dorm senator was. He introduced me to Tussey's senator Bill Blose who just happened to be talking with Todd Kulp at the time. Both Todd and Bill were willing to answer all of my questions concerning Student Government here at Juniata. Todd also offered to obtain for me a copy of the Student Government constitution which I now have. After I felt all of my questions had been sufficiently answered, I went about obtaining my required seventy five signatures for my petition for freshman senator.

Why is it Neeta that you felt that obtaining seventy five signatures was too much to expect of "any one person?" I had no trouble acquiring the required number of signatures for my petition, and while doing so, I had the opportunity to meet many of my classmates. Incidentally, I did not find any of these people to be "Obnoxious or Violent." They were all willing to sign my petition and seemed interested in what I was doing.

So the Student Government failed in some of their responsibilities, is it so difficult for an uninformed freshman to go out and find out the answers to the questions that are bothering him? Student Government cannot work for the students if the students are not willing to go out and force the government into action. The freshman class could have had Senators and a Steering Committee and, believe it or not, a homecoming float, before Homecoming if they had been willing to get out of their cell-like dorm rooms and tear themselves away from their stereos long enough to find out what student government is all about.

Signed,
Lynn Goodale

LETTER TO THE EDITOR:

Last week a student wrote a letter to the Juniatian, concerning the student government and its functions. The student government under the new constitution, is designed to be a liaison between the administration and the student body in what ever happens on this campus. There are students dispersed on selected Trustee, Administration and Faculty committees. Last year the Senate decided to disperse the Senators so that every dorm has a representative.

In the last couple of years this relay system did not exit. Most of the Senators this year have tried to keep everyone well informed on student government, (visiting, distributing newsletters and minutes).

The letters had very valid questions, and student government thanks you for your feedback. The Senators are working with the feeling the government has good intentions and the potential to be a workable voice for the students.

Signed,
Mike Suber

To the editor of the Juniatian:

As advisor to the Student Government, I have been invited to respond to recent letters to the editor relative to that organization. Thus far, I have attended three Student Government meetings and met on a regular basis with the Student Government President as well as other Senators. Having dealt with Student Governments and student Government representatives on other campuses over the past eight years, I have some basis for comparison. At the risk of appearing patronizing I need to comment that I have been struck by the sense of responsibility and commitment shown by the members of Student Government this year. The leadership program at Camp Blue Diamond was really quite rigorous and I can assure you that the representatives both from Student Government and Campus Center Board, as well as the conference advisors, worked very hard for those two days. They returned to the campus from that conference with a clarified sense of purpose and a spirit of cooperation between the two organizations as well as enthusiasm for the upcoming year.

The major business of Student Government to this point, and perhaps two of the most important responsibilities it undertakes, has been to make appointments to college committees and to allocate funds. Student Government has approached these tasks responsibly and with a level of competence which to me was impressive. I would like to commend them publicly for a job well done. Unfortunately, these tasks, although important, are not highly visible to students. However, the organization and spirit remain and I am confident that this particular Student Government group will be well received by the student community and will address the major concerns that you have.

Signed,
Arnold J. Tilden Jr.

Couple to Perform

"UNRHYMED COUPLETS" has been in performance since June, 1977, entertaining audiences in Massachusetts as well as several other states. The program combines the techniques of both acting and interpretation, drawing upon the strong backgrounds of both performers.

Vicki Harris is originally from West Caldwell, NJ. A 1973 graduate of Juniata College in Huntingdon, PA, she majored in English and secondary education.

Steven Nelson, from Pittsburgh, PA, did his undergraduate work at Clarion State College in Clarion, PA and graduated in 1976 with a major in Speech/Theatre Liberal Arts.

Steven and Vicki compiled the program to present the drama of men and women clashing in a collection of classic and contemporary scenes.

The story is a familiar one . . . In the ageless rivalry for power, men and women have created situations sometimes comic, sometimes tragic, but always colorful. "Unrhymed Couplets" focuses on these dynamic moments with a collection of scenes from the world's best-loved plays.

These two entertaining performers will appear at the Ellis College Center Ballroom at 8:15 p.m. on Sunday, October 23. The program includes selections from Medea, Taming of the Shrew, Elizabeth the Queen, and School for Scandal. It should prove to be an entertaining evening.

ALONG LAUNDRY-RUN

By Barbara Frezza

e sky was that desperate e of gray which resembled rwear that had been washed nany times without bleach. leaves on many of the trees shriveled to a tea-stain n, and were being agitated wind which howled as if it just failed the Biz-quiz. The ounding mountains, which been resplendent with bright es of red and gold the week re, now resembled per-ently wrinkled permanent-s cotton fabric. Against this ario, the Juniata College us stood out like lint on a of brown socks. Another -day has dawned at Juniata. e first load of wash goes into of Tussey-Terrace's eight ning machines at about 6:00 ; along with about twice as h detergent as is needed to uately wash one load of es. The machine greedily s down two dimes — which e of the reasons those little es of silver-plated copper such a valuable commodity in the campus barter system — and if you're lucky, will proceed to clean your clothes without shrinking or partially digesting them.

By eight o'clock, the first washloads from Cloister, which has only two washing machines — when they both work, have arrived. The pil-up has begun; and with it the stake-out at the Tussey-Terrace laundry rooms.

Watching your wash spin 'round in a washing machine is often a lonely, thankless vigil, but for many of the residents of Tussey-Terrace it has become a necessity. Between the hours of 9:00 a.m. and 11:00 p.m., the number of persons wanting to wash their clothes is usually greater than the number of available machines.

Students, who are not noted for possessing the virtue of patience, will often pull somebody else's clothes out of the machine — before the wash cycle has been completed — and insert their own washload, detergent and dimes. Of course they think nothing of this — until they find their own sodden garments beneath a three-foot pile of towels, jeans and fitted sheets belonging to about four other people with the same idea.

As for dryer time, it is virtually non-existent in the "free" dryer unless you dry your clothes between midnight and 6:00 a.m. Those persons lucky enough to find it occupied by someone's semi-dry sheets (which are considered fair game to pull out and place on a pile of someone else's dripping laundry) may find that a couple of other people have decided to risk tossing various articles of clothing — or even whole washloads — in with your wash. Should this happen to you, you are not obligated to sort their socks.

Those persons who would like to dry their clothes before they become a medium for the cultivation of various strains of molds are usually forced to use the dryers that eat one time every thirty minutes. These are almost as inaccessible as the free dryer at Tussey-Terrace, due to the influx from Cloister — and occasionally North and Sherwood. As many as half a dozen persons have been known to throw their laundry into one dryer — which was already in operation. If this happens to you, and it's your dime, place all excess clothing into the sink. All Juniata dryers are notorious for shrinking just about everything that is put into them.

To keep from dying of boredom while washer-watching, Tussey-Terrace residents have found that the sauna-like qualities of their laundry rooms is conducive to a variety of activities, such as: reading War and Peace or equally lengthy and/or boring texts, playing spades, weaving potholders and reviving near-dead maidenhair ferns. But regardless of how resourceful a student may be, the social possibilities in a washroom are severely limited when you must keep a constant vigil to be sure that some S.O.B. doesn't remove your wash so that he/she can do his/hers.

As the sun sinks slowly into the washwater haze behind the dryer fuzz mountains, the wind howls even louder. A dime-silver moon appears in a sky studded with detergent-sprinkle stars. A few bleary-eyed clothes-watchers cleave to the hard wooden chairs in the Tussey-Terrace laundry rooms as though held in place by static-cling. Another Juniata wash day has come to a close; and I am missing one brown sock.

danced at President Kennedy's Inaugural celebrations and has performed for Presidents Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon and Ford at the White House.

Villella has performed with the National Ballets of Washington and Canada, the Boston Ballet and in special appearances with symphony orchestras throughout the country. An active member of the President's National Council on the Arts, he finds time in his strenuous schedule to give occasional in-school lectures to the nation's youth, and is currently writing a book on dance.

When dancing with the New York City Ballet at Moscow's Bolshoi Theatre, Villella became the first and only American male dancer compelled to grant an encore and repeat one of his variations in response to tumultuous Russian applause.

Clive Barnes, well-known critic of the New York Times, has written of Villella: "A great dancer dances unmistakably. Edward Villella is that extraordinary thing, a great dancer."

Villella has also written, choreographed and danced in two specials for CBS — "Harlequin" and "Dance of the Athletes" — both of which he has produced. He received an Emmy award for the former.

Volleyball: Streak at Six

By Kathy Splane & Cheryl Ondechek

Larry's Ladies, Juniata's newest and only undefeated varsity team extended its winning streak to six games last week as they defeated Bucknell on Tuesday, Oct. 11, and Susquehanna on Thursday, Oct. 13.

The Bucknell Bisons hosted the Juniata Indians and found defeat at the hands of the Tribe, three games to two. Our girls set out to a poor start, trailing the whole way through the first game and losing 15-10. Having the advantage of serving first the second game, J.C. exploded to a 10-1 lead after only two servers. The team went on to win by a score of 15-5.

Winning the third game 15-9 on powerful serves and spikes, the Indians took control of the match. With anticipation and tension mounting, J.C. rallied from a 13-5 deficit to take the lead 14-13, before finally facing defeat 16-14 in a long and grueling fourth game. This put the Tribe in a tie breaker for the second time this season.

Under the pressure of possible defeat, the two teams commenced the fifth and final game. However, the response to such stress was immensely different for both groups. The Bison fell apart and were crushed by the Indians after only scoring six points.

Riding the tail of victory in an air of confidence, Larry's Ladies glided to an easy 3-0 victory over Susquehanna. The Indians displayed extensive talent before a large and exuberant crowd.

The J.C. women started out with minimal energy and enthusiasm and were trailing by a score of 6-0 before they began to get serious. They were behind more than half of the game and didn't take control until after the tie at 9-9. The final score was 15-10. The services by Chris Reiser were a definite factor in the victory.

The Tribe regained their poise and Amy Bowser hit top form in her spikes in the second game. After taking an early lead, the girls held on for a 15-10 win, putting J.C. two up on the Warriors.

With self-assurance and the knowledge that the Tribe has never taken more than three games to defeat an opponent on the home court, the Indians breezed to an 11-1 lead. At this point, Coach Larry Bock made substitutions enabling several jv players to gain varsity experience. The final score was 15-9 and the girls swept the match. An all around outstanding performance was turned in by Lissy Sencindiver in all three games.

Soccer Club Shows Promise

By Jim Angstadt

The most recent addition to Juniata Sports is this year's newly founded Soccer Club. The idea for the club came from German professor Klaus Jaeger. Prof. Jaeger has been an avid participant in intramural soccer here at Juniata for some time. This past summer he organized the club and is serving as coach this fall. Even though Juniata soccer has only club status this year it will probably become a full-fledged intercollegiate sport by 1979.

The club has approximately twenty-seven members including four seniors, three juniors, nine sophomores, and nine freshmen. Sociology professor Bob Reilly and Juniata alumnus Geoff Clarke, who serves as assistant coach, are also participating.

The team has already played five games against such schools as Lock Haven, Shippensburg, and Bloomsburg. The remaining schedule includes away matches at Bucknell and Elizabethtown. On Oct. 22nd at 4:00 P.M. the club has a home match against Penn State (Altoona Campus). This spring the team will resume activities with an even better schedule. Anyone interested in playing competitive soccer is invited to try out for the team this spring.

Soccer is a game of continuous play in which each team attempts to move a ball down the 110 yard field and put it in the opposing goal, all without the use of the arms or hands. The action is fast paced and exciting. All are welcome to come out on the 22nd to watch 90 minutes of the world's number one sport, Soccer!

Lycoming Blanks Indians

By Bob Wallace

Before a Homecoming crowd on a muddy field, the Lycoming Warriors shut out Juniata 10-0. The game was played on nearly unplayable field conditions with high winds. Coach Dean Rossi was visibly upset that the teams were forced to play under such sloppy conditions.

The first half was scoreless with Juniata fumbling on a golden scoring opportunity. Lycoming had difficulty getting off a punt, and the Indians took over the ball on the Warriors 17 yard line. Juniata pushed the ball down to the one yard line. Then on third down and goal, Tom Trappuzzano fumbled and Bob Fox recovered for Lycoming on the two yard line. It was one of three fumble recovers made by Fox during the afternoon.

The Warriors opened the scoring in the third period as Ty Bornman scored on a two yard dive after a Juniata fumble. Lycoming closed out the scoring with 1:42 remaining in the game when Robbie Bliestein kicked a 27 yard field goal.

The loss dropped the Indians record 2-4. The Indians can get back in the win column this Saturday as they face Upsala during Parents' Weekend.

Field Hockey Team Drops Two Games

By Marion Pagano

The past week proved not to be a profitable one for the Juniata Field Hockey Squad as they dropped two games, a 3-1 decision at the hands of IUP and a 3-2 loss at Lycoming.

The IUP game was played at Indiana on a blustery Wednesday afternoon. The condition of the field was poor and this affected the play of both teams. However, IUP was able to capitalize on JC defensive mistakes and jump out to a 2-1 lead in the first half, although Juniata was dominating the play. The JC goal came on a long corner when senior halfback Diane DeRafelo centered the ball into the circle and freshman inner Bonnie Cieslar gave the ball a decisive drive into the cage.

Juniata could not get a good offensive drive going in the second half, but this was not entirely due to the faults of our players. There were many bad calls and a lack of calls by the officials which seemed to stop any offensive attack Juniata had started. IUP was able to score again in order to achieve the final score of 3-1.

On Saturday, Juniata traveled to Lycoming for another one of the traditional homecoming games. It had been raining for a few days which caused a dangerously muddy field condition which also made it impossible to move the ball.

Lycoming opened the scoring in the first half by hustling on a Juniata misplay. JC kept a tremendous amount of pressure on the Lycoming defense and scored when Bonnie Cieslar found herself with an open net and pushed the ball towards the goal. However, the mud stopped the ball about five inches short of the score, but Capt. Alison Reeves rushed in to put the score even at 1-1. JC took the lead when Reeves converted on the second of two penalty strokes awarded Juniata, flicking the ball to a spot where the Lycoming goalie couldn't have stopped it even if she did see it. The scoring opportunities were tremendous for the Indians, but the ball just wouldn't move into the cage. Lycoming, on the other hand, was able to make full use of their scoring chances and created two goals in the last five minutes of the game, stunning the crowd and shocking Juniata to a 3-2 defeat.

SCOOPS: JC now stands at 2-3-1; home game on Saturday at 10:30 hosting Lock Haven; Reeves and Cieslar lead the team in goals with four each; the offense is averaging 1.6 goals per game while the defense is allowing 1.75.

Cross Country 3-3

After a victory at Elizabethtown on the 11th, the Juniata harriers ran into trouble on Saturday the 15th at Lebanon Valley. The meet was a triangular meet with Juniata, Lebanon Valley, and Swarthmore College (only running for exhibition). Lebanon Valley almost achieved a shutout against JC, capturing all but 34d place, which was held by the lone JC runner. Joe Guth. The 5.5 mile course produced a winning time of 29:58 and had a few surprises. JC runners Scott Malay and Mike Bodley fell ill on the course and for the first time two females, Mary Crosby and Sue Hoadley, competed. This loss now moves the Juniata record to 3-3. The next meet on the agenda is with St. Francis on Wednesday and a home meet with Shippensburg on October 21.

The Week

West German industrialist Hans-Martin Schleyer, kidnapped six weeks ago, was killed by members of a terrorist group related to those who kidnapped a Lufthansa airliner last week. The Schleyer murder was seen as revenge for the shooting of the three hijackers and the alleged suicide of three comrades in German prisons.

An American airliner was hijacked in Nebraska by Thomas Michael Hannan, an accused bank robber, who demanded $3 million and release of his accomplice from prison. After 14 hours, Hannon released his 13 prisoners and shot himself dead in the chest.

The lead singer and two other members of the Lynyrd Skynyrd group were killed in a plane crash in Mississippi.

Juniata Receives Research Grant

HUNTINGDON, PA. — Juniata College has received a grant of $51,000 from the National Science Foundation (NFS) for the continuation of a research project dealing with environmental effects on freshwater invertebrates.

The grant was announced by Dr. Frederick M. Binder, Juniata president.

Dr. James L. Gooch, associate professor of biology and department chairman, and his staff are broadening their studies to determine how the genetics of a species of freshwater animals, called amphipods, are controlled by environmental factors.

Dr. Gooch also wants to investigate how the run-off from barnyards, which contains sewage and fertilizer, in an agricultural area may affect the genetic system of these freshwater creatures.

The project began several years ago in the Appalachian mountains of central Pennsylvania and has been expanded into Maryland and concentrated in the eastern part of West Virginia near Spruce Knob.

The full title of the project is "Allozyme, behavioral and phenetic differentiation in a structured environment: populations of Gammarus minus (Amphipoda Gammaridae) in Appalachian valleys."

Dr. Gooch explains that populations of amphipods which exist in different areas of the Appalachian chain may be genetically different. "We've taken the animals which look identical. Then, by using a technique called zone electrophoresis, a process which lays out the genetic system of the organism in the field, we've found the populations are broken into many diverse genetic groupings," he said.

The NFS grant will fund the continuation of the research for the next two years. Most of the funds will be used to pay the salaries of student assistants.

Swigart Will Lead Council

HUNTINGDON — William E. Swigart, Jr., a Huntingdon insurance executive, has been named to serve a two-year term as chairman of the President's Development Council at Juniata College. His appointment was announced by Dr. Frederick M. Binder, Juniata president.

In making the announcement, Dr. Binder stated that Juniata is fortunate to have Swigart's leadership at this point in its history. "I feel confident," said Dr. Binder, "that William Swigart is the right man to see that the Council continues and, hopefully, accelerates its momentum as we move forward with Juniata's humanities center campaign."

Swigart succeeds W. Clay Burkholder of Milroy as chairman of the development council.

Representing a variety of college constituencies and geographic areas, the President's Development Council advises the college president and development staff of potential support. It also provides advice on long-range plans for campus development. The 55-member council was first organized in 1967 at the outset of Juniata's eight-year, $10.1-million Margin of Difference development campaign.

A 1937 Juniata graduate, Swigart is president of the Mutual Benefit Insurance Co. and of the Select Risk Mutual Fire Insurance Co. He is also vice president and secretary of Swigart Associates Inc. and Credit Club Consumer Discount Co., and vice president of Huntingdon Savings and Loan.

Swigart was honored by Juniata's National Alumni Association in 1973 with its annual Alumni Service Award. He has served the college as president of the National Alumni Association and the Huntingdon Alumni Club and as chairman of the Annual Support Fund, the National Endowment for the Humanities Matching Grant Committee, and the Juniata Valley Campaign of the Centennial Fund.

In addition to his service with the President's Development Council, Swigart is a fund agent for his class.

Active in the Huntingdon area community, he is currently president of the Huntingdon County Tourist Promotion Agency and the Huntingdon County Library and holds directorships with the Huntingdon County United Way, Huntingdon Business and Industry, Huntingdon Developmental Workshop and Penn Central National Bank. He is also chairman of the Huntingdon Water and Sewage Authority.

Swigart resides in Taylor Highlands with his wife, the former Helen Fetterhoof of Huntingdon.

Edward Villella:

Ballet Is 75% Mental

By Neeta Moonka

Edward Villella has been with the New York City Ballet Company for approximately 20 years now. He started ballet at the early age of nine when he accompanied his older sister to her lessons. For the first couple of years ballet lessons were not a matter of choice. He was forced to stop participating in athletics at the age of 15. He also stopped dancing for four years while he went to military school, but returned to ballet almost immediately afterwards and soon joined the New York City Ballet Company at the age of 21.

Villella described ballet as a very physical endeavor which involves the investigation of one's physical potential. A dancer has a classical technique, everything is placed, positioned; the whole presentation is in control. Line and form are used in relationship to space and time. Villella made the analogy of technique being "like a vocabulary." The use of the vocabulary is the investigation of new techniques. Instinctive conditioned response and maneuverability only occur after constant development.

Edward Villella also made comparisons of ballet and athletics. Having participated in varsity baseball as well as boxing, Villella has experienced both athletics and ballet and is able to make valid relationships between the areas. He said both are physical endeavors which involve a high degree of timing. He differentiated the two by describing athletics as a form of calisthenics, whereas ballet is a classical technique.

Both areas involve a great deal of discipline, but ballet is year round. One and a half to two hours are used just to warm up and then even more time is spent in rehearsal; roughly five hours are used in preparation for a performance. Villella usually does eight shows, six evenings a week, and this continues year round. As Villella said, "dancers dance all the time and athletes dance from time to time."

It is because of his knowledge of athletics that Villella is asked to perform athletic demonstrations. Coaches began to ask him to give lectures and athletics seemed to be a natural outgrowth. He doesn't prepare for the demonstrations, but rather goes in cold turkey and trys to interest the audience by combining humor with his knowledge.

With all the discipline and time involved, Edward Villella has to enjoy ballet. He called it a "sensational feeling" to investigate one's physical potential and at the same time participate in a significant art form. He feels that dancing is 75% mental.

The New York City Ballet has had an important effect on Villella's life. It is important for him to be able to do what he wants and enjoys. The New York City Ballet is a place of "quality, honesty, truth." Villella had to make the decision between making money and developing an art

To the Editor:

After a number of futile attempts concerning a very important community issue, I feel compelled to write this letter.

In early August approximately $3,000 was spent to furnish the lounge in Sherwood Hall. The furniture remained in the lounge area for about three weeks. It then began to disappear. On numerous occasions, I have requested that the Resident Assistants conduct a search or inspection, if you will, in order to locate the missing furniture. This inspection occurred not only in Sherwood, but in the other residence halls as well. In each instance, I was informed that the furniture could not be found. It is possible that the furniture could have been stolen by a person outside the Juniata community, but I do not believe this to be the case. It is my opinion that the furniture is somewhere in Sherwood Hall.

May I remind you that lounge furniture is provided for everyone's use, not for the use of a select few. If you do not have a chair or sofa on which to sit in a lounge area you are being deprived of one of your rights as a Juniata student. You should, as a responsible citizen, bring to my attention, any person who is violating your rights.

In addition, lounge furniture cannot be rented. The statement in the Pathfinder may be somewhat misleading. What it in fact states is that you will be charged $1.00/day if you take lounge furniture for your own use.

It is very important that we rectify this situation as soon as possible. Lounge areas without furniture are unsightly as well as completely useless. I sincerely hope that everyone will make a consorted effort to get the furniture which is missing in Sherwood and for that matter, any other residence hall where "the lounge is bare" back where it belongs so that everyone may use and enjoy it.

By Barbara Frezza

It had been a hectic day for me; and to top things off, I was caught in the midst of one of those unavoidable social functions that most of us are obliged to attend at one time or another, and that few of us enjoy. Middle-aged matrons — who had definitely seen better days — were milling about like restless cattle; minding everyone else's business or comparing their present ailments. One sauntered my way. "I understand you're majoring in Journalism at 'Juanita" College," she said: giving JC — as well as my surname — their most common mispronunciations. "Are you going to write for a newspaper when you get out of college?"

Diplomacy has never been my strong suit; and I could feel my tolerance level for this particular monied monomaniac drop quickly to zero. There I was, going through a major crisis — and she didn't even have the decency to read my name tag correctly!

No, lady, I attend Juniata (that's Joo-nee-ata) college! My ultimate career goal was to become a "madame" when I graduated from college, but my family would probably disapprove; so, I'll probably become a marriage broker, a marriage counselor or the author of sleazy paperback novels, instead! I might even go on welfare! My angry haze parted like dirty curtains hiding an even dirtier window.

"I don't know," was all that I could say. I didn't know. As I stood there thinking how "tacky" she looked wearing blue chiffon, in order to placate my previous fantasy, I wondered how many others didn't know.

I am twenty (count 'em) years old, a senior in college — and I don't know what I want to do with the rest of my life. According to the twelve year indoctrination period I underwent before coming to Juniata, I should have known exactly what I expected from my education by the end of my freshman year. I discovered that I didn't want to major in Modes of Thought/Methods of Inquiry or math competencies.

My high school guidance counselors should have spotted this potential difficulty and corrected it before it became a major problem. After all, they should have realized that there was cause for concern when a female considers becoming a professional thief a more rewarding career choice than a secretary, teacher or politician. (Never be totally honest on questionnaires that have been run off using a ditto-master.)

Like the vast majority of my classmates, I have "busted my ass" to get grades which, if I'm lucky, will qualify me for nothing but admission to graduate or professional schools, where I will be given an opportunity to become a "professional student." As for my value on the current job market, unless I can locate a rich uncle in dire need of a business partner, my dishroom experience will have been worth more to me — in terms of dollars and cents — than my diploma! No one can truly appreciate humiliation until you are sweating it out as a prospective employer thumbs through your rather impressive file with a jaded expression, only to ask: "How much work experience have you had in your fie'd?"

Yes, I am indecisive as to what my plans for the future will be — but is this really such a travesty? I have not lived one-fourth of my expected lifespan; I may die tomorrow. In either case, is it fair to expect me — or anyone else with a similar outlook on life — to pigeonhole ourselves as trivia majors who'd like to pursue the study of minutia in a graduate school? Why does society expect us to wait until we retire before we can live our lives on a daily basis?

We, students, are being mass-produced like automobiles! Programmed for efficiency and performance, we are channeled onto the superhighway of life. I don't know about the rest of you, but there are still a few scenic backroads that I'd like to explore.

Right To Gripe

By Adam Banning

What happens when the Ellis Hall cigarette machine is out of reach to the average Juniata cigarette smoker? That is what some fellow classmates of mine asked me. So I took it as a formal gripe for this column.

The usual thing that happens to the Juniata cigarette smoker after he or she has been put out of touch with the Ellis machine (due to the machine being broken down or Ellis Hall being closed) is a sudden urge to start walking to the nearest store so the person can quench his smoky thirst. But the winter winds have cut through many a coat and it's not exactly fun to walk a quarter of a mile in freezing cold.

So an answer came to mind. Yes, a second machine on campus would do the trick. Although this would seem very easy to do, there is more to it than just having it delivered on campus. The one outstanding problem is to convince the vending company that the Juniata cigarette machine would be safe from vandalism. There is only one problem. We here at Juniata have been known to kill many a vending machine in our rowdy fits of rage. Unfortunately, that doesn't give us a very good record with the vending company. So the next time you feel like punching the soda machine, go out and beat up a tree instead. And in that way we might get a good enough record (with the vending company) to acquire a second cigarette machine. Remember, it's all up to you!

Got A Problem?

By Brenda Geiger

Everyone on campus knows who their R.A. is, but have you ever stopped to consider what all an R.A. does to make your life at Juniata run more smoothly and more enjoyably? One of the major jobs of a Resident Assistant is counselling. This can be done on the individual level, which is where a student talks over a problem that they are having with his or her R.A. and are then directed towards whomever is qualified to deal with that problem. Counselling and advising is also done on the group level as they meet with their charges and explain special policies such as quiet hours.

The Resident Assistant is responsible for maintaining the discipline on their hall. This includes keeping the noise level down, enforcing the alcohol policy, and keeping an eye on the behavior in the dorm to help prevent damages. Your R.A. is the person you talk to about roommate switches and planning hall activities.

Something isn't working right in the dorm? Who gets called? You simply tell your R.A. about the problem and they get in touch with Jack Linetty.

Radio City: Royal Scam

By Nathan Wagoner

Once again, Donald Fagen and Walter Becker have surpassed the limits of their last album, in this case, Royal Scam, and mutated their music to yet another surprising twist. If it should chance that you don't like Aja (pronounced "asia") the first time you hear it, listen to it again. It's an album that takes a little getting used to, but Steely Dan albums are often that way.

As you will find when you read the liner notes (You do read the liner notes?), Becker and Fagen have finally gotten their mitts on the backup musicians they so richly deserve. As a matter of fact, Donny and Walter hardly play at all, although they are responsible for all the material. They have become, in producer Gary Katz' words, more of a "floating workshop" than a band, a trend evident since Pretzel Logic. They use a different drummer on each track and scads of guitarists, nothing new here; but this time all the bass work but one song is done by Chuck Rainey, a respected jazz bassist, and the bulk of the piano work is done by Victor Feldman. So what do Walter and Donny do? Becker has developed into an excellent lead guitarist, and Fagen sings a lot and plays the synthesizer. Jazz musicians do the rest (under Becker and Fagen's supervision, presumably). The sax section is particularly impressive, including Wayne Shorter of Weather Report, who solos on the title cut, and Tom Scott, who solos often and scored the horn arrangements.

Consequently, what aspects characterize the album are superb horn arrangements, innovative, jazzy changes, and crisp distilled solos. So what's new? The songs are longer than any since Countdown to Ecstacy, and the Dan have introduced strong background vocals as an integral part of the music. And there's more . . .

Side One

Black Cow — a funky, blue-eyed soul number, vaguely reminiscent of Boz Scaggs but with that unmistakable Steely Dan flavor. Tom Scott blows his horn.

Aja — the title track, is a Chino-Latiny love song, or starts that way at least. It's broken by a long instrumental section with some explosive drumming by Steve Gadd, saxophone by Shorter, and a guitar solo by Denny Dias in the same vein as the solo on Your Gold Teeth II from Katy Lied. The solo work on Aja has a jazz feel to it, as does the rest of the album, but it isn't, really. They fool you. The changes and chording to the supporting background parts are highly structured, polished arrangements, leaving the spontaneity to the soloist.

Deacon Blues — a haunting, fatalistic swing rocker with beautiful background vocals. Bass by Becker. "They got a name for the winners of this world/I want a name when I lose/They call Alabama the Crimson Tide/Call me Deacon Blues."

Side Two

Peg — A "danceable ditty" as the liner notes put it, with a touch of reggae in the rhythm guitar. Mike McDonald, an amazing vocalist who worked with the Dan on Katy Lied, sings what is essentially a sax section arrangement and pulls it off impressively.

Home at Last — Rhythm and Blues; strained saxophone synthesizer by Fagen, guitar by Becker. Steely Dan aims for an even greater intellectual elite with a song about Ullyses. "The danger on the rocks is surely past/Still I remain tied to the mast/Could it be that I have found my home at last/Home at last."

I Got the News — funky, funky, funky, again with the reggae guitar. Humorous piano by Victor Feldman.

Josie — the Dans' contribution to "punkadelia." This tune has instructions for everything that should be done on a Saturday night ("Dance on the bones til the girls say when"), except, of course, at Juniata, where nothing at all is done. Good, punchy, rock blues, of the same breed as Daddy Don't Live in that New York City No More. Jim Keltner hits the skins.

Every song on this album is, lyrically and musically, a gem. It's been well worth the wait for it. It really moves, mostly because of the sophisticated, almost "swing" arrangements to what are basically rock songs. Modulations between keys are frequent and various, spotlighting the optimum tonal range of the solo instruments, and generally keeping things lively.

But what I like most about Steely Dan and this album is a good example of it, is their ability to take any kind of music and warp it, or any kind of standardized lyrics, and through one of their sleazy narrators, pervert it into a fatalistic anthem, though not without humor. Says Becker,' "We have a hell of a time writing these lyrics, whooping it up over how hysterically funny we think it is." Well, I think it's funny, too, Wally.

And speaking of sleazes and perverts, anyone with information regarding Jim Donahue's whereabouts is advised to contact the local S.P.C.A. immediately. I suppose one could call the State Police first, though, it depends on one's priorities. There's been an A.P.B. on Jim since Thursday, or he would have written this column. Why? Well, the star witness for the prosecution, a certain Miss M., says this, "Well, yeah, like I knew he was

Unrhymed Couplets

By Wendy Chamberlain

"In the ageless rivalry for power, men and women have created situations sometimes comic, sometimes tragic, but always colorful."

With this in mind, Vicki Harris and Steven Nelson created "Unrhymed Couplets," which they presented Sunday evening in Ellis Ballroom.

Their two-person dramatic presentation is a medley of classic moments from poetry and the stage, ranging from Tennyson to Shakespeare to Clarence Day.

Vicki is a 1973 graduate of Juniata College. She majored in English, taught for two years, then continued her education at Emerson College in Massachusetts, where she is now majoring in speech and theater. She has directed a number of shows, including conventional, children's, and interpreter theater.

Steve was a speech and theater major at Clarion College and is also a graduate student at Emerson College.

The dramatic show "Unrhymed Couplets" "came out of a frustration from class. We had too many assignments and too little time." Because they wanted to do these projects in more depth, they decided to form their own show. They spent the summer creating, and Sunday's presentation was their fifth full-length showing.

"We keep expanding it," says Steve. And they plan to continue to do so to build up a repertoire from which they can draw. He and Vicki hope to take it to civic groups and high schools.

"We're excited by what we're learning in school," says Steve, "and we're sharing the excitement we're getting out of this art form." The emphasis, he points out, is more on the materials they choose than on the "spectacle of the theater."

Though both students have similar interests, their plans for the future lie in different directions. Vicki, who first became interested in drama through Dr. Esther Doyle's oral interpretation class, intends to resume work as a secondary school teacher. Steve would like to get into television drama and adult education.

Study Abroad

By Jerry Keenan

Sophomores interested in studying abroad during their junior year should contact one of the members of the International Studies Committee within the next few weeks to fill out an information sheet for use by the committee. Although the deadline for application to study overseas is not until the end of January, students should seek out a committee member to select a program suitable to the student's interests.

Interested freshmen should also contact the committee. The earlier a student considers studying abroad, the longer he will have to find the best program and prepare for it.

International Studies Committee members are: Dr. William E. Russey, C 202, George T. Dolnikowski, 425 Founders, Dr. Klaus Kipphan, 400 Founders, Mrs. Evelyn Church, 301 Founders, and William C. Vocke, 316 Good.

In addition, 300 Founders contains numerous pamphlets on overseas study programs. Students are welcome to look through this information so that they may begin to formuiate an idea of which program to choose.

Geology Field Trip

By Bill Corbin

Students of Structural Geology and Stratigraphy recently returned from a 1200 mile geologic field-trip to Northeastern Pennsylvania, New York, and Vermont. The five-day excursion, which began Thursday, Oct. 13, was prepared by Dr. Robert Washburn with in-the-field assistance from Dr. J. Peter Trexler. Participation in the field school was a requirement of geology majors in the higher-level courses.

Viewed and studied on the trip were numerous examples of sedimentary structures. Investigation of primary sedimentary features was made along the Catskill Mountain Front overlooking the Hudson Valley. Breaks in sediment deposition were noted near Otisville, N.Y., and other stops, which were interpreted by students as representing times of mountain-building in the Appalachian region. Paleohistory and paleogeography can often be deduced from such studies.

Pre-Cambrian basement complex rocks were part of the field exercises in the Adirondack Mountain region of New York State. Here, various stops were made where examples of intense orogenics were seen. A special trip to Cedar River Gorge showed extreme plastic deformation and passive flowage in the marble walls of the gorge. Numerous samples of amphibolites, layered gneisses, charnokites, anorthosites and glacial till were also observed.

Field-classes held in southwestern Vermont were aimed at student comprehension of the mechanics of folded rock-layers in an area of past tectonic activity.

Problems included orientation of bedding and the type of folding involved, and the measuring of dip vectors to apply in reconstructing the true lay of the rock structures. In addition, metamorphic effects on sediments were seen in the outcrops of numerous marble and slate formations.

Opportunities for mineral collecting were also provided.

Participants on the trip were: Randy Altobelli, Tom Powell, Bill Corbin, Donna Roy, Barbara Ross, Lia Fong, Mark Buschek, Paul Manley, and Robert Goldstein.

Eagles Mesmerizes Audience

By Judy Lee Young

Gil Eagles, celebrated expert of ESP and hypnosis, performed in Oller Hall last Saturday night, to the delight of a large Parent's Weekend crowd. During most of the first act, Eagles was securely blindfolded. Nevertheless, he successfully "read" the time on a twice-reset watch, by passing it over his head. He used the same technique in "reading" questions written by the audience on slips of paper, further amazing the audience by filling in unwritten details, and offering advice. He even proved himself able to answer some questions that had not been written. The fact that most of the questions were those of students of the Juniata community convinced many people here that the "act" was a demonstration of an actual phenomenon.

In the second act, Gil Eagles demonstrated his further mental abilities by placing several subjects under hypnosis, using the suggestion of a tropical garden. He had the subjects paint, go to the movies, cheer horses, and participate in an ice-cream cone licking contest (with a $1,000 purse to the winner). Then, as the highlight of the second act, Eagles provided the subjects with various roles to be played when the proper sound cues were provided by him or the audience. These roles included Tarzan, Miss Universe, a drill sergeant, a flamenco dancer, a Martian and interpreter, a person receiving shocks from his best friend, a modern dancer, the Road Runner, the greatest traffic cop in the world, and two people in warning of an Indian raid.

A "victim" of hypnotist Gil Eagles is told that she is a dancer. Other hypnotized participants watch on in amusement, unaware that they will be made to do crazy things also. Eagles performed last Saturday as part of Parent Weekend activities.

Konrad Spending Year At Juniata

By Brenda Geiger

There are many new people on campus this year but for one of them, this campus is all that they have really seen of the United States. Konrad von Kaltenborn is from Bad Hamburg vor der Hohe, close to Frankfurt, West Germany. He will be studying at Juniata for one year after which he will return to Germany to complete his studies at the Gymnasium. His future plans, once he returns, are to await his admittance into the university.

When he was asked why he wanted to study in the United States, Konrad replied that he "wanted to learn English better since he must have it for his entrance into the university." He is presently taking Writing Program and Nature of Clay.

What are Konrad's impressions about Juniata? "I like the smallness but I have never seen any others here." He also mentioned that he has found many German-speaking people in Huntingdon and also that the people have been more personable here. As far as the food is concerned, "it is good considering that it is not easy to make food for this great number of people." Konrad did add, however, that there are more breads served for breakfast in Germany. He also finds that the foods are harder on the teeth.

There are several similarities between the two countries that he has found. Coca-Cola, hamburgers, and our music are all the same. The largest similarity is the pinball machine. Instructions are even written in English. The only difference is that they are cheaper in Germany. Football is not as widespread, though, and Konrad feels that it seems to require a lot of conditioning.

One thing that has struck him the most was the number of people who have cars at Juniata. He said that "cars are not as frequent in Germany and the people there don't use cars for real short trips, as going a few blocks," as he has noticed here. "The cars are also not as large."

Living in Cloister, his one complaint concerned its condition. He said that "the building architecture is very nice but it is time to remodel the inside."

Dorms To Get Directors

By Sherry Heldibridle

A new program for residence hall directors is under way at Juniata this year. Right now, Dave Dierckson is the only director on campus, living in Cloister. He'll be joined by Terry Peters, living in Sherwood, winter term.

What is a residence hall director? He/she is an adult, living in a dorm, who acts as a liaison between students, and RAs, to Student Services. This person is a professional, not just a student, who practices counseling in areas from academics to personal problems. He will work with the RAs and student representatives for social and recreational activities. Other responsibilities include helping RAs to interpret and enforce policies, and coordinating the RAs with the Director of Housing.

Student Services is thinking of using more residence hall directors in the future, possibly one in each dorm. They'd like to arrange a program with Penn State to have their graduate students in counseling serve as director at Juniata. This way grad students could still attend classes at Penn State while living here and gaining experience in their field. As of yet the program is not official.

The Student Services' Staff feels Juniata needs directors as adults helping the RAs by being a more direct link to the staff. The present RA program is strong, they feel, but this will make it stronger. It will benefit students in that they'll have a close contact with the directors, who will be more accessible than the Student Services' staff.

Dave is originally an admissions counselor at Juniata, He's serving as an experimental director also, but it's not a new job for him. He served as a director during his graduate studies in college. His success as a director is evident in the fact that the program will be enlarged, and in the attitude of RA Bill Rielly, Cloister Arch. "Dave is friendly and helpful," said Bill. "It's good to have some one that's there when you need him. I don't always have to run to Liz or Jack, which gives them more time to devote to their work. Problems are solved faster, and things run more smoothly."

As for the future, Bill would like to see a residence hall director in each dorm. He feels they see students from more of an adult aspect. They can then compare their ideas with those of the RAs', and give a better picture of student needs. It's another attempt by Arnie Tilden to better student-staff relations.

Don't Read This Article

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is an opinion article written by Barry Young. Usually, articles of this type would appear on page 2, but due to layout difficulties this was impossible. As is the practice of this newspaper with regard to opinions submitted by students, spelling and grammar errors have not been corrected. Also, any quotes in the article are entirely fictitious.

As I leaned over my girlfriend's sweaty, heaving chest, I suddenly realized that the one-armed man was pointing a gun straight at my head; it was then that the tiger leaped. . .

All this has nothing to do with this article, but my high school writing teacher always said that a good narrative should have a lead sentence that really grabs the readers attention and as this article is otherwise pretty dull I decided that this opening line would grab anybody's attention.

Perhaps I should explain how this all got started. I began when the football game between North and Cloister on Sunday was called on account of apathy (only four of us showed up). With nothing else to do for the rest of the day, I figured I might as well write an article for the Juniatian. I had previously talked with Jerry Keenan (the editor) about the idea and he had sounded favorable. The only problem was that I couldn't think of anything to write about. Well, I thought, why don't I go over and ask Jerry? So I did.

"Well Jerry," I said "I've decided to write an article for the Juniatian."

"Oh?" He said, looking about as interested as if I had told him that I had an uncle with two thumbs on his left hand."

"However, I can't think of anything to write about."

"Whose fault is that?" He said.

"Well, I was wondering if you had anything in particular that you wanted me to write about?"

"You? ... Well, no." He replied.

"Well, I thought maybe I could write a follow-up on the letter Neeta Moonka wrote on Todd Kulp's appraisal of the freshman class. It's just that I thought that with all the replies to it that you got last week, the subject might be pretty beat."

"It is," he said, reaching for the nearest textbook, "but go on anyway."

"It's just that I thought that I could use some of my insight as a former freshman senator to throw a new light on the subject."

"Great, gimme some of your marvelous insights." He said while making horizontal slashing motions across a page of his textbook with a green highlighter.

"First, I think Todd was out of line in calling the freshman apathetic for not having a steering committee soon enough to build a freshman homecoming float."

"What's wrong with saying that?"

"It implies that other freshman classes haven't had the same problem."

"Well they didn't, did they? I mean both of our classes had floats as freshmen." He said.

"That's true," I said, "but several important points have been left out so far. For, example, no freshman election that I know of in the past two years has had more than one more person running for an office than were positions (I.E. four people running for three senatorships). So how can Todd imply that his class of four-hundred students was not apathetic because they had six people running for five steering committee positions. After all, six people can hardly be said to have represented the active desires of four hundred people to participate in student government."

"How do you know how many people ran last year?" he asked accusingly.

"I asked Brian Smith, last year's student government president."

"Also," I said, "Todd apparently didn't realize that this year's homecoming was significantly earlier than it was the past two years, thus the amount of time this year's freshman had to orientate themselves and decide if they wanted to run for an office was greatly reduced."

"But one final point to remember," I said, "is that in any evaluation system involving two parties, any evaluation made reflects on both parties."

"What in the hell is that supposed to mean?" Asked Jerry.

"Well for example, when a teacher gives a student an 'F', that 'F' not only says that the student failed, but also that the teacher has, in a sense failed too, because it was his or her responsibility to teach the student to do his best. In the same way, when Todd implied that the freshman class had failed because they had not had a float for homecoming, he also, implied, in a sense, that student government had failed too, by not doing all it could to insure that the freshman were informed."

"What about the three letters we received last week, what did they have to say about all this?" Said Jerry.

"Well, it's funny you should ask that." I said, "Because while looking at them I noticed that though the last two were written in response to Neeta's letter neither one really addressed themselves to the accusations made."

"What about the first one?"

"That one stuck pretty much to the accusations, but made what seemed to me to be a number of logical or factual errors."

"But" I said, "this is not Todd's fault, in fact it is a credit in his favor."

"How's that?" Jerry asked.

"Because the reason that he is sometimes hard to locate is because he is so busy. It just happens to be an occupational hazard that busy people are hard to get a hold of."

"Another thing that bothers me about the first letter is that the author makes the statement that 'the freshman class ... could have had a homecoming float.'." I said.

"What's wrong with that?"

"Well this author was a member of the freshman class. Doesn't it seem just a little bit hypocritical for a freshman to say tha t the freshman could have had a freshman float if they had really wanted it?" I said.

"Well you can hardly expect one person to take charge of something like that, especially if everyone else in their class is unwilling to help as the letter said they were."

"That's not true." I said. "When I was a freshman we also did not have a steering committee in time, so with one week to go another freshman senator and I completely organized and built a homecoming float. And whats more, the members of our class at that time expressed no desire to help us, so we had to figuratively and literally drag them out of their 'cell-like rooms' to help us build the float."

"Well look," said Jerry, "the whole idea sounds awful, but right now I have more important things to do, like maybe watch my digital clock change minutes, so why don't you go over to dinner and start writing this, uh, article?"

On my way to dinner I met a good friend of mine who also just happens to be the president of the Krazy Klub, so I decide to have dinner with him. At dinner, while he was trying to kill his tapioca, the subject of the quality of the food at Juniata came up, as it often does.

"So," I said, "what do you think of dinner tonight?"

"My God this stuff is torrid" he said.

"I think you mean horrid."

"Uh, yeah." he said. "You'll have to watch me, I'm usually not too cohesive this time of day."

"I think you mean coherent."

"Uh, yeah, whatever. Anyway I wish this tasted as good as it did on Saturday, man that stuff was really good. If they served that stuff all the time they would never have any complaints."

"Yeah, that the truth." I said. "Say, as long as you're here how would you like to read my newspaper article so far?" I said.

"Sure." He said. After reading it he handed it back to me and said: "Sounds pretty awful so far, except the part about your girlfriend's 'sweaty, heaving chest' tell me more about that."

"Well I don't actually have a girlfriend."

"Oh, well as long as you're writing this anyway why don't you include something about the Krazy Klub?" He asked.

He then asked me to relate that they are doing well in their scheduled activities, especially the apathy rally on North lawn which was a complete success, as no one came. Also he said that any students interested in the "Do-it-yourself" lobotomy classes should see him.

After finally getting all of this

Geology Lecture

By Bill Corbin

Members of the Andy Lawson Geological Society and interested students are invited to attend a geology lecture this coming Tuesday, Nov. 1, in 22 Deike Building of the Penn State University. Dr. Sergei V. Meyen of the Geologic Institute, USSR Academy of Sciences will present "Three Fundamental Principles of Stratigraphy." If interested, contact Tom Powell (643-5554) for possible ride information. The program starts at 4:00 p.m.

Hey Lefty

By Bill Corbin

Unusual gifts are nothing new to Juniata College and a recent bequest of $10,000 from the late Mrs. Mary Frances Beckley further supplants this notion. Mrs. Beckley, a former J.C. student, established the scholarship to help support an often-neglected minority — left-handers.

Citing her reasons for this fund, Mrs. Beckley explained how she had met her husband while playing tennis her freshman year at Juniata in 1919. The two were paired because both were left-handed ... thus began a first-sight love that has expanded through a strong personal feeling for Juniata College.

Alumni giving to J.C. is among the highest in the nation with as many as 49 per cent of its living alumni making annual gifts to the school.

Raystown Field Station

By Linda Szezerba

A log house built in 1825 is pioneering as a scientific research laboratory for Juniata College. The old house is located on a 700-acre tract of land leased to Juniata by the Army Corps of Engineers. The structure formerly was part of the James Grove dairy farm, once noted for its production of maple syrup. The remodeled, 152-year-old home now serves as a headquarters. The area has been transformed from a run-down farm to a modern, functioning field station science center.

Private gifts and contributions helped make the Juniata College Raystown Field Station a working reality. Notably, Frank A. Peirce, who has a keen interest in both conservation and the restoration of old structures, contributed $25,000 for the development of the field station.

Dr. Robert L. Fisher, associate professor of biology at Juniata, developed the ecological program. The hard work of Fisher and a dedicated crew of interested persons and students has made possible the initiation of a year-round research center.

The field station headquarters is nestled below a small ridge. More specifically, the site is located north of Entriken, just off Lincoln Township Route 402 and across from the James Creek boat launch.

The station occupies nearly all of a three-pronged peninsula. The basic elements of the field station are fields, forests and the waters of Raystown Lake. Juniata College has exclusive rights to 385 acres of the plot and limited use of the remainder of the 700 acres.

Fisher is enthusiastic about the station's location, which covers a complete "mini-watershed." The site is also adjacent to a game mitigation area, enhancing study of migratory bird populations.

The harbor accommodates a research fleet, including a 32-foot houseboat equipped as a floating lab and sampling base, a 16-foot Boston whaler and three other boats. The program also uses a nine-passenger; four-wheel driver "carryall."

A major purpose of the field station is to serve as a demonstration laboratory for the training of both students and the public in the use of ecological principles and practices. Fisher also stresses that the area is to be used to broaden and increase the effectiveness of Juniata's total educational program. He invites other departments to utilize the resources available The psychology department can conduct animal behavior studies while the sociology department can continue archeological research.

Juniata College will also cooperate with other colleges as well as with various agencies on research projects and special courses in wild-life management and aquatic and terrestrial ecology.

form in joining the particular company.

Villella feels that New York CityBallet Company is a leader of world artistic invention. He describes the American style of dance as quick and sharp while the European and British styles tend to be very placed, solid, and heavy. It is evident that Villella prefers the American style. He feels new composers such as Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky have developed a new floor to dance on leaving behind a wealth of material yet to be investigated.

Villella has just begun to investigate the area of television. He has choreographed many shows and produced two specials, one for which he won an Emmy. Television has fascinated him for years and he finds it challenging and inventive. Because of this, he has begun to choose performance dates and his repertoire. It would be physically impossible for Villella to do both television and stage full time. He would prefer to have parallel careers.

His advice to students practicing to become ballet artists is to obtain quality training. He said ballet is not something one just picks up. A student should come to New York to experience dance. One reason is because it allows students to experience good dance and another reason is that it allows students to see their peers. As Villella stated, ballet is a very disciplined physical endeavor which requires constant rehearsal to maintain.

"I think that I'd like you to make a few changes." He said.

"Like what?" I asked.

"Take out everything after the part about your girlfriend's sweaty heaving chest' and start over from there."

"But I don't have a girlfriend." I said.

"That's too bad because this article stinked the way it is."

"Well, don't blame me," I said. "After all, I told you not to read it."

"Picnic" To Premier

By Jerry Keenan

"Picnic," written by William Inges, will be presented by the Juniata Players on October 28 and 29 at 8:15 in Oller Hall. Both the cast and crew of the production are composed entirely of students.

According to Prof. Howard Crouch, director of the play, "Picnic" is a romantic comedy/drama that deals with two adjoining households and how the daily life of these homes is disturbed by a stranger.

Crouch went on to say that the play will leave a question in the minds of the audience as to the nature of this disturbing stranger. Although interspersed with comedy, "Picnic" provides an insight into human interactions.

Admission to the play is free for Juniata College students with presentation of an I.D. All other students must pay 50 cents, and adult admission is $1.00.

Chamber Music Recital

By Bill Corbin

HUNTINGDON — A quartet of instrumentalists will present a chamber music recital at 3 p.m., Sunday, Oct. 30, in Oller Hall on the Juniata College campus.

Students are invited to attend the event which is sponsored by the college's music department.

Performers for the recital are Lloyd and Rheta Smith of Philadelphia, Ibrook Tower of Huntingdon and Diane Gold of State College. The latter two are both members of the music faculty at Juniata.

The concert will open with "Grand Trio in D Major, Opus 29" by Ignace Pleyel. It will be followed by "Impromtu" by Thea Musgrave and a six-section "Divertimento" by Malcolm Arnold.

The second portion of the program will feature "Huntingdon 2's and 3's" by Burrill Phillips and "Trio in A Minor, Opus 114" by Johannes Brahms. The Phillips piece was written for the Huntingdon Trio of Philadelphia, of which the Smiths are members, and is to be published by King's Crown Music Press, with distribution by Galaxy Music Corporation.

Tower, a member of the faculty since 1974, received the bachelor's degree in clarinet and music education from the Peabody Conservatory of Music, Baltimore, Md., and master's degree in performance from Temple University (1972).

A flutist, Mrs. Gold received the bachelor of music degree at the University of Rochester's Eastman School of Music in 1962 and earned the master of music degree at Columbia University Teachers College four years later.

Flicks

By Judy Lee Young

This week Centerboard offers a special Halloween double feature of The Fly and Hush, Hush, Sweet Charlotte. The Fly, starring Kurt Newmann, Patricia Owens, and Vincent Price, is the story of a scientist's experiments with transmitting matter (a la Star Trek's "beaming" around) and the mishaps that occur when a fly decides to share the transporter with the scientist. The story brings in some interesting points concerning organisms that are not quite people.

Hush, Hush, Sweet Charlotte, starring Robert Aldrich, Bette Davis, Olivia DeHavilland, Joseph Cotten, and Agnes Moorhead, is a shocker set on a remote Southern plantation that was the sight of a murder many years before. The building is to be razed, but the eccentric spinster still living there (Bette Davis) refuses to leave. The arrival of her cousin (Olivia DeHavilland), who comes to help remove her, signals the start of bizarre and eerie events.

This double feature will be shown Sunday, Nov. 6 in Oller Hall. Admission for both features is only 75¢.

Science Day A Success

By Bill Corbin

This past Wednesday, Oct. 26, marked the fourth annual "Invitational Conference on Current Problems in Science" held at Brumbaugh Science Center for interested area high school students. Chairing the project this year were Doctors J. Peter Trexler, professor of geology, and Linda Sue Esch, professor of mathematics.

Career counseling and a series of lectures presented by faculty members and students were offered along with a variety of films and demonstrations.

The goal of the Science Day's activities was to acquaint participants in the current methods, job possibilities, and recent developments in geology, biology, chemistry, physics, and mathematics.

When asked about the importance of Science Day, Dr. Trexler replied, "The intent is to show on-going research and give high school students an idea of what science is like at a liberal arts college that has had a tradition strong in the sciences. A broad academic horizon is gained by seeing laboratory and research facilities on a college level."

Due to the large turnout of students, the conference is also scheduled for Wednesday, Nov. 2. At this date a repeat of the same lectures will be presented. For interested Juniata students they are —

10 a.m. — "Student Research on Mysterious African Disease," George Rung; "Student Research at Juniata," Jeff Bloss; "Radio Astronomy," Richard A. Kuseski.

11:30 a.m. — "Biochemistry of Eggs, Cholesterol and Heart Attacks — What TV Commercials Don't Tell You," Dr. Ruth Reed; "Mother of Rivers — Biological Research in the West Virginian Highlands," Dr. James Gooch; "Rock and Mineral Collecting — Hobby or Profession?" Wayne Downey and Robert Goldstein.

1:30 p.m. — "Chemistry of Coal and Coal Conservation," Dr. William Russey; "Food and Gas from Microorganisms," Dr. Robert Zimmerer.

Juan Gonzales of Caguas, Puerto Rico, will spend his college years at Juniata.

Juan Seeks New Experience

By Brenda Geiger

There is another new face on campus — that of Juan Gonzales, of Caquas, Puerto Rico, who is visiting our country while pursuing his college studies. Juan came to Juniata as a premed major but has since changed to pre-law. He intends to spend all four years at Juniata. Why did he want to study in the United States? "I wanted to get a different experience, be on my own, and practice the English I studied." Juan has studied English for 12 years. When I asked him why he chose Juniata over other colleges he responded, "My cousin came here."

What does he have to say about some of the typical Juniata complaints? "The food is not that good if you compare it to home cooking, but, if you compare it to the boarding school food I had it is good. It is not really that different except the rice is not very good." His courses this term are Modes, tutorials, and Biology of the Organism. His one comment concerning them was that "the grading system for Modes does not seem appropriate. You come to college to study what you want ... Perhaps it would be better if it was pass or fail." As far as dorm life was concerned, he sometimes finds it difficult to study in the halls, but great when it comes time to party. "The party life is totally different here. The music and way of dancing is different. Our parties usually last longer and can run all night ending with breakfast."

Juan finds that Americans are more liberal and the weather is much different; but other than that the two countries are rather similar. He did enjoy Mountain Day saying, "It was very relaxing putting away all your pressures for one day."

Juan did add, however, on a more serious note, that he feels the image that most Americans hold about Puerto Ricans is a wrong one. Puerto Rico has a diverse and colorful culture that has much to offer Americans. "If you would keep an open mind you could learn what we are really like."

Quartet Reorganizes

By Wendy Chamberlain

Juniata's barbershop quartet has reorganized.

The new members are senior Bill Kepner, first tenor, and freshman David Miller, second tenor Tim Eshelman and Mark Hyssong, first and second bass, formed the group last year after Christmas.

"We were watching Carol Burnett," said Mark. "They were doing some production number, and we jointly came up with the idea 'Wouldn't it be nice if there was a group like that?' And then I think it developed to 'I would really enjoy it if I were part of a group like that.' And then it developed into 'Why don't we form a group like that?' "

The Juniata barbershop quartet was born — with Randy Kochel and Bill Pettigrove as the tenor half.

"It really took off — compared to our expectations," said Tim. "People commented so much on our blend. That was the big thing with us. Sure we stood up and did ad-lib comedy —"

" — but that wasn't our strong point," Mark laughed.

"Last year our group was unique because we fought all the time," said Tim.

"We got along because we were all different," added Mark. "There were times when we were very divided. Yet we would go out there and we'd sing and we'd still have the blend."

The barbershop quartet performed last year in the President's Dining Room twice, for the Brethren College and Church Relations Council, for the Huntingdon Arts Festival this summer, and in many other places around Huntingdon. Their biggest job was at the Ben Franklin Hotel in Philadelphia for the Brethren and Mennonite Home Administrators.

By spring term they were performing about once a week. They have obtained jobs through both Andy Murray, campus minister, and Bruce Hirsch. Publicity is entirely "word-of-mouth."

The group was formed because they have a common desire to perform. "It's so much fun to go out into the public, to see them enjoying themselves, and know that you're the cause of their enjoyment," said Tim. They do profit financially somewhat, but the chief reason they remain together is that they enjoy singing as a group. The chance to travel adds incentive, and the success they've enjoyed is yet another reason for the continuation of the quarter.

The group made a tape last year of all the music they had done, and they have plans this year for either another tape or a record.

Three Join Faculty

Three new persons have joined the faculty at Juniata College, it was announced Tuesday by Dr. Frederick M. Binder, president.

The new instructors are Richard A. Kuseski, physics; Benjamin B. Sunderland, Jr., mathematics; and Clare I. Bretz, Spanish.

Kuseski earned the bachelor of science degree from Ohio State University in 1971 and the master of science degree in astronomy-physics from the Pennsylvania State University in 1977. He is currently working on his Ph.D. in astronomy.

His work experience includes teaching astronomy labs and introductory science classes at Penn State since September 1971.

A native of McVeytown, Sunderland is a graduate of Penn State where he received the B.S. degree in mathematics with highest distinction in 1970 and the M.A. degree, also in mathematics, in 1975. He is a 1967 graduate of Mount Union Area High School.

He has been a half-time graduate assistant in Penn State's math department since 1970.

A Ph.D. candidate in Spanish linguistics-literature at Penn State, Bretz has been working as a part-time Spanish instructor at the university since June 1975. From 1971-72, she taught Spanish at Forest Hills Junior High School in Pittsburgh.

Bretz is a 1969 alumna of Indiana University of Pennsylvania where she earned the bachelor of science degree in education magna cum laude. She received the master of arts degree in Spanish from Penn State in 1971.

Professionally, she belongs to the Modern Language Association and the American Association of Teachers of Spanish and Portuguese.

S G Notice

Anyone who is interested in forming a club of any type should come to the Student Government office and obtain a club questionnaire and fill it out. Student Government will fund these clubs. Questionnaires may also be obtained from any Senator.

Librarian Appointed

Sara J. Barnett has been appointed reference librarian at Juniata College, it was announced by Dr. Frederick M. Binder, Juniata president.

Barnett received the bachelor of arts degree in 1968 from Chatham College and the master of library science degree from the University of Pittsburgh in 1976. She also spent a year studying at the Sorbonne in Paris, France.

She has worked as a research assistant for the American Institutes of Research in Washington, D.C., for Arthur Andersen and Co. in New York, and has taught Spanish and English as a second language. In 197576, she served as assistant to the education and women's studies biographer at Pitt's Hillman Library.

Indians Drop Heartbreaker To Upsala

By Mark Cassel

A disputed field goal early in the fourth quarter lead the Upsala Vikings to a 3-0 victory over Juniata before a Parents' Day crowd at College Field. The game was a defensive battle the whole way, as both teams dropped below their normal offensive game average yardage. Neither team could sustain a long drive in the first half, and it ended in a scoreless tie.

In the third quarter, Juniata drove to the Upsala fifteen yard line. Bill Reilly, who came in during the drive for the injured Wayne Emerick, threw towards frosh tight end Mike Valdiserri in the end zone, but Viking defensive back Bob Peters crossed over and intercepted the ball. After the touchback, Upsala drove seventy-eight yards to the Juniata two, only to be denied. Tom McLoughlin came in and kicked a nineteen yard field goal, which the officials were not sure about. After taking a consensus, the referee ruled it good. In the remaining fourteen minutes, neither team could control the ball, due to penalties and turnovers.

Juniata's pass offense and defense both had a long day. Emerick and Reilly combined for three interceptions for the visitors, while the secondary allowed nine of fifteen passes to Upsala. Some of these came during the long Viking scoring drive. Bright spots for J.C. included the defensive line of Hars, Diielsi (who was injured late in the game), Mozer, Trapp, and Zimmerman, who held the New Jersey team to less than two yards per rush. On offense, Gary Lyter picked up ninety-one yards rushing. Tim Reed had a fine day punting, averaging 42.7 yards on eight kicks.

Juniata, now 2-5 (1-3 in the MAC Northern Division) plays a intra-divisional contest with Delaware Valley on the road. Next week's opponent lost last week 28-7 to Susquehanna, who Juniata has beaten earlier in the season.

Volleyball Victorious

By Kathy Splane & Cheryl Ondechek

Exciting play, electrifying spirit, and a crowd that rocked Memorial Gymnasium — ingredients in a story that is making JC history. The girl's varsity volleyball team has lifted its record to 8-0 with two more amazing victories. The Tribe defeated St. Francis on Tuesday, October 18 and Gettysburg on Thursday, October 20.

Sitting in the stands watching the girls' exuberance and listening to the crowd's enthusiasm, one would think that it was the seventh game of the World Series rather than a local college volleyball game. But what a game! St. Francis could have been the season spoiler, but instead turned out to be the catalyst for an exciting set of volleyball.

The Frankies ventured into Indian territory for a season rematch with revenge in mind. JC had other ideas and went on to show their power in an easy 3-1 victory.

The JC women had encountered this opponent once before during the season and the recollection of a vehement battle to emerge victorious dwelled in the minds of every Indian. The women remembered the forceful serves of No. 15 from St. Francis and were intimidated by her. Due to this fact JC fell to a 15-10 defeat by the close of the first game.

Between games, Coach Bock managed to lift the girls' spirits by one of his usually effective pep talks. The Indians never looked back throughout the rest of the match and put on a dazzling display of strength and vitality.

At the onset of the second game, there was some doubt as to the match's outcome but the tribe pulled themselves together and won handily, 15-6.

Nevertheless, a 15-6 victory was not satisfactory to the Indians. They wanted to really put the Frankies in their place. They did it with a remarkable occurrence never before precedented by JC. The tribe crucified St. Francis 15-0 in a vibrant and rapidly played third game.

The fourth game turned out to be the longest game of the match with the two teams fighting desperately to acquire points. There was a lot of trading of services and no team truly dominated this game. Needless to say, the JC women arose triumphant by a score of 15-8 to sweep the match.

The entire team was up for the match and played some of the finest volleyball to date. It seems that not only did each girl play an all around outstanding game, but excelled in some aspect. Amy Bowser and Julie George were spiking like professionals; Chris Reiser's sets were beautiful to watch; Nancy Zinkham's ability to save the ball just centimeters from the floor was awesome; and Priscilla Grove and Lissy Sencindiver had near perfect serves.

Travelling to Gettysburg will not soon be forgotten. The team got lost on the way to the college, but came away with their eighth straight win.

JC rose to the challenge however, and defeated their opponents 2-1 in three contests.

J C Club Ice Hockey

By Mark Cassal

The ice hockey club at Juniata opened its sixth campaign last week with a practice at the PSU ice pavillion. The roster now stands at 15 members, most of whom have had at least four years of experience, including some promising freshmen. The addition of Dr. Donald Mitchell as advisor to Coach Paul Heberling should also strengthen the team. Dr. Heberling expressed a cautious optimism regarding the coming season. It looks as though J.C. opponents will be more evenly matched this year, and the ten-game schedule is the longest yet.

The club holds two practices a week, one on ice at Penn State and one in the old gym. Those interested in full or partial membership should contact Jeff Bloss, room 212 Cloister, for details. The first game will be at PSU against Lock Haven, Dec. 12.

Defeated By Lock Haven

By Claire Swavely

Sunny skies greeted the Juniata College Indian field hockey team for their confrontation with the Lock Haven State College junior varsity team on Parent's Day 1977. Despite the sunny skies and relatively dry field the Indians fell in cloudy defeat by a score of 5-0. The Lock Haven squad was originally scheduled to be the freshman team, however, the second team arrived while their varsity squad, ranked third in the nation, competed elsewhere.

In spite of their defeat, the Indians played some of their best hockey of the season, keeping pace with the fine speed and skill of the Lock Haven team. The first two goals against the Indians came within the first few minutes of the opening bully. A third score also came in the first thirty-five minute half. At one point in the first half the Indians held their opponent scoreless for twenty-five minutes despite the 4-2-3 power offense of the Lock Haven squad. The final two goals scored in the second half slipped through the tough Juniata defense. And, despite the scoreless effort the Juniata offense dazzled the large Parent's Day crowd with several fine attempts at the Lock Haven goal. The game was viewed by the coach and players as a fine challenge, beneficial learning experience and a reference for the future.

Scoops:

The stickwomen of Juniata face their final regular season opponent at home on Friday, October 28 at 2:00 against Susquehanna University on Langdon Field. Playing in their final home game will be seven seniors including: Janet Bechtel, Bonnie Books, Diane DeRafelo, Pam Julius, Barbara Reifeis, Audrey Seasholtz and Claire Swavely.

The Indians are presently awaiting word as to whether or not they will be one of eight teams competing in the Middle Atlantic Conference tournament at Franklin and Marshall College on November 4th and 5th.

Cross Country Drops Two

By Mindy Anderson

Juniata Cross Country fell to the powers of both St. Francis and Shippensburg. The JC-St. Francis meet held Wednesday afternoon at St. Francis ended in a 27-28 score. The runners placing for Juniata in 3rd, 4th, and 5th places were sophomore Joe Guth, Scott Malay, and Bill Schuler. The St. Francis team compiled 6, 7, 8 and 10th place. Although JC lost the dual meet, the team itself was missing members Foster, Bodley, Koller, and Moore. On Friday afternoon the Indians were again faced with defeat, this loss a little more crushing than the last. Meeting with the Shippensburg Red Raiders produced a 48-15 win for the visitors, and a new course record was established at 29:52. The Raiders managed in capturing the first 6 places with only Joe Guth placing.

The Juniata harriers however will have a chance for revenge over St. Francis on Wednesday afternoon. Come out and support JC to a victory.

Flicks

By Diane Stuart

This week's Centerboard film attraction is Easy Rider, starring Peter Fonda, Dennis Hopper, and Jack Nicholson.

Fonda, as Wyatt, and Hopper, as Billy, portray two cyclists that ride East to the Mardi Gras from California. Their journey through the Southwest establishes a dreamy laid-back mood that continues until they meet up with George Hanson (Jack Nicholson) in a small Southern jail. Nicholson plays the young alcoholic devil-may-care lawyer with humor and sensitivity.

After getting Wyatt and Billy sprung from jail he joins them in their trek across the states. To the two cartoon-like characters he adds a sense of reality and of comprehension of life.

The Mardi Gras itself is a confused inarticulate representation of an acid trip. Its chaos seems to serve as a harbinger of the rapidly approaching senseless violence that Wyatt and Billy meet with on their way home.

Although tales for the search of the meaning of life are not uncommon, and although Easy Rider does not seem to offer any new insights or any answers, it is definitely a film worth seeing. Its value lies in the excellent photography of our most beautiful Southwestern landscapes, and in its oddly counterpointed emotion music, by Steppenwolf, the Byrds, and the Electric Prunes.

Easy Rider will be shown in Oller Hall at 7:30 p.m., Friday. Admission for this film is only 75¢.

Poetry Reading By Chad Walsh

By Wendy Chamberlain & Bill Corbin

Dr. Chad Walsh, the J. Omar Good Visiting Distinguished Professor, will give a reading of his poetry called "How Poems Get Born" at 8:15 tonight in Shoemaker Galleries. Dr. Walsh will read a wide sample of his works and talk about how each of the pieces came into being. Most of the poetry will be taken from his fifth book of verse, The End of Nature, published in 1969. Selections will also be included from his newest book, Hang Me Up My Begging Bow, which is scheduled for publication this spring.

Dr. Walsh, a member of the English faculty at Beloit College, Wisconsin, where he cofounded the Beloit Poetry Journal, is an ordained Episcopal priest. A listed member of Who's Who in America, Walsh's poetry has appeared in the Saturday Review, New Republic, and Virginia Quarterly. He has written a total of 22 books on topics ranging from literary criticism to theology to children's books. Among his works are the Psalm of Christ, The Honey and the Gall, and C. S. Lewis: Apostle to the Sceptics.

"The Red Shoes" Dance into Kiddies' Hearts

By Kathy Splane and Cheryl Ondechek

On Tuesday and Wednesday, Nov. 8 and 9, Mrs. Doris Goehring's Play Production class will present the seventh annual children's play on the J.C. campus. This is a play adapted from a fairy tale by Hans Christian Anderson and is entitled "The Red Shoes." It will be presented on the stage of Oller Hall at 1:00 p.m. on both days.

The villain, Snogg, and his clown, Jemmo, enter the village looking for a pretty dancing girl to carry out Snogg's crooked plans. They kidnap Karen and exploit her — he forces her to dance because of a pair of magical red shoes, keeping the money she earns. She is rescued by Nels (her boyfriend), the village burghomaster, and her newly-discovered grandmother. Like most fairy tales, this one too has a happy ending.

Since the class consists of sixteen people and the majority wished to act, the play was double-casted. Due to this fact, the two performances will be quite different. The only part which remains the same is the character of Snogg, the villain gypsy, played by Bruce Rothenberger. On Tuesday, Karen, the pretty dancing girl, will be played by Dierdre Schaebler; on Wednesday, she will be played by Pat Phibbs. Jemmo, Snogg's clown, will be performed by Holly Rutkowski on Tuesday and by Kathy Splane on Wednesday. John Grzesiuk will be playing the village burghomaster on Tuesday and John Lilley will take this part on Wednesday. The grandmother's part will be performed by Cara Kelham on Tuesday and Cheryl Ondechek on Wednesday. Steve Volle will be the cobbler's apprentice, Nels, on Tuesday, and Gus Kohl will play Nels on Wednesday.

No production would be complete without the backstage people — those who make everything gel, but who get the least amount of credit for their work. Mary Jane Brubaker, as stage manager, has the responsibility of seeing that the play runs smoothly. Gwen Sterling proved to be a big asset as set designer — her art work can be seen in the sets as well as in the backdrops. Tay Waltenbaugh and Martino Donati's backstage help in areas such as lights, makeup, and scene changes has been immeasurable. Pat Flaherty, amateur magician, will entertain the audiences prior to both performances.

The red shoes cannot be taken off except by special means and cause the wearer to dance and dance until dead from exhaustion. Due to this fact, much dancing had to be choreographed, and this contribution was made by Mrs. Karen Schettler, wife of Dr. Schettler. The music necessary for both Karen and Jemmo ti display these dances will be provided by a small band under the direction of Ibrook Tower.

The local elementary school teachers bring their students due to the fact that this is about the only opportunity for many of these children to see a live production. It is not only a good experience, but the children truly enjoy this form of entertainment.

Party Success

By Jenny DeBoy

Juniata's Halloween Party was held last Saturday evening, October 29, from 9 to 2 in the Tussey-Terrace lounge. Sponsored by the school's class officers, the dance featured the music of Killer Sound System as the night's entertainment. Students were encouraged to come in codtume to ensure a successful masquerade, and prizes were presented for the most original disguises. First place was awarded to Clare Librizzi and Deb Grigson for their unique "conehead" costumes; and a group prize was distributed among the unprecedented "roller derby queens" from Suite 208 Miller.

An added attraction by Killer was their ever-popular polka music followed by some riproaring, knee-slapping hillbilly tunes which got everyone to their feet. James Bartley and his swinging partner Michele Pitale won the polka contest.

The use of Tussey-Terrace's carpeted lounge, in addition to the tiled lounge, was experimental. According to Dean of Student Services Arnold Tilden, the party's sponsors are to be commended for a job well done. The class officers would like to sincerely thank the large number of people who helped make the dance a success by dressing up and joining in the fun.

American Chemical Society

The Central Pennsylvania Section of the American Chemical Society is holding its November meeting on the Juniata College campus on Thursday, November 10, 8:00 P.M. in Room B200 of the Brumbaugh Science Center. The speaker for the occasion is Dr. Johan Bjorksten speaking on "The Basic Chemistry of the Retention of Vitality — Aging."

Dr. Bjorksten is chairman of the board of the Bjorksten Research Labs, Inc., of Madison, Wisconsin. He was born in Finland; received his M.S. degree from the University of Helsinki and Ph.D. degree from the University of Stockholm. Before starting his own research laboratory, Dr. Bjorksten held positions as chief chemist of the Peosodent Co. and as the chemical director of the Quaker Chemical Products Corporation.

In addition, Dr. Bjorksten holds memberships in numerous scientific societies. His recent scientific inquiry has focused on the chemistry of gerontology. The Juniata campus community is encouraged to take advantage of the opportunity of hearing this lecture.

A bonfire will be ignited tonight at 8:15 in the parking lot adjacent to South Hall. The fire is intended to "burn our rivals" at the M.A.C.'s and in the football game against Wilkes College.

Devised as a hall project by the first and second floors in Lesher and the third floor in North West, the bonfire is being organized by Diane Sonntag and Kathy Suba, both freshmen. Diane and Kathy have been working for over a week with members of the halls involved to organize the fire, and to create the "rivals" that are to be burned.

The girls hope the fire will bolster support for the various teams participating in the M.A.C.'s this weekend, and for Saturday's football game against the "Colonels" of Wilkes. The entire student body is welcomed to attend the bonfire.

Letters to the Editor

Last week I read an article in the Juniatian, in which I took an immediate interest. It was the Muddy Run article written by Barb Frezza, in which she goes on about how, being 20 years old, a senior and not really knowing what she wants out of life! Now that's a pretty bad situation, but it's a situation which a good deal of seniors realize when they think that, in June, they are going to be out in that big, bad world, and they slowly begin to go nuts over the idea.

Immediately I sat down and decided to write a response to this article. I found myself in much of the same condition at the end of my freshman year. I changed my major from German and Business to Med. Tech. and German and decided to get away from this place — to go abroad for a year — to Germany — mainly to find out what I wanted out of life. It seemed like all you did here was break yourselves studying, going crazy trying to get all this work done and why? Then on Friday and Saturday nites the usual routine is to party, party, party (or sometimes in between). What kind of life was this? It seemed like a haven protected from the outside world!

So I went abroad and that was the best year of my life. Going abroad, one meets so many diverse types of people, you learn so much about yourself and the world. Almost every weekend I was off somewhere, backpacking and hitching around Europe. During the week I usually stuck around and attended classes at the University and did the appropriate work for them, but that really wasn't my main interest. My interest was to get to know as many different things as possible (including myself) and that's what I achieved. I took one Biology course all year, the rest were in History, Literature, Music, Linguistics, etc. You name it, the opportunity was there to take whatever held one's interest.

The University also had 15,000 students in a "small" town of only 50,000 people. To most Germans, that's a pretty boring place — but to a student from Juniata, where after two years you glance around and realize you know every face on campus with nobody new to meet, that's a pretty exciting place. Imagine meeting new people every single day. One really notices how different it is when you have to start turning down (to some extent) so many people who ask you to come by because if you didn't you'd be doing nothing but spending your entire year just visiting different people!

As time went by and I realized it was getting close to the time to come home, I looked forward to it with mixed emotions. Yes, I really wanted to come home, but it was going to be hard leaving these new friends behind. And how could I ever go back to such a small school way out in the middle of nowhere?

Easy. I was coming home. Home to my friends, my good and close friends, where I could go and visit my family when I wanted to. You don't really realize how much people mean to you until they get taken away. Imagine not being able to go home for some of mother's good old home cooking for an entire year! Well it's not all that bad. A year isn't that long and the things one experiences are fantastic. It feels good to realize that you're glad to be here and know where you're headed.

If it's money that has you worried, when I went, the program (BCA) cost $3800, which included the air flight, insurance, food, lodging and the University for an entire year, above which I spent about $100 on personal expenses, (like traveling to 11 different countries). The tuition of Juniata last year ($4300) wasn't much more than that of the BCA program. But, the experience was worth twice as much or more than spending another year at Juniata wondering where I was headed!

Another thing, if you go to Europe now, while still a student you are open to numerous student discounts and are still eligible for financial aid.

So if you realize that you don't really know what you want out of life and don't really know what you want to study or why you're here then for heaven's sake, take a break! Go home and work for awhile or somewhere else (like abroad) and think about it. Why waste $4000 or more a year not knowing what you're doing here. Taking that break was the best thing that ever happened to me in my life. I found out a lot of things about myself (my family and friends), about people and my country. I really grew up and learned to appreciate what I have and found out what I really wanted out of life.

I guess the emphasis of this article then is if you don't know where you're at, try leaving and getting your head together, you'll be much better for it in the end (and not poorer). And if you can do it — go abroad. It's something you'll never regret.

Contrary to the opinions of our illustrious student government president and various sundry administrative "cheerleaders" the student apathy at Juniata College does have its positive aspects. For example, when the "Moonies" visited JC in September, few people knew that they'd been on campus until October. I imagine this was quite a blow to the Unification Church; considering that, financially, just about everyone on this campus is a potential source of funds for Rev. Moon's plethora of portfolios and innumerable "charitable causes."

Consider the following possible — but not probable — dialogue between two fictitious "Moonies" overheard after their visit to Juniata:

"Judy, you know that the Rev. Moon likes us to smile. Our duty is to recognize the coming of Christ through Moon and be joyful. What's the score?"

"I know that we should smile and be joyful, Roger, but I'm afraid that Rev. Moon will be disappointed with us. The score is: Juniata College — approximately 1200, the Unification Church — 0. Whatever will we do?"

"Moon will prevail. He always does. How was your day?"

"I sold flowers in the dorms and near the cafeteria."

"Any potential converts?"

"Oh, Roger, you wouldn't believe it! Every other person I attempted to talk to about Rev. Moon and his Unification Church was studying for an Organic Chemistry exam or typing a paper that was due at five o'clock this afternoon. Even the freshmen, who are supposed to be so uncertain, were all writing papers for "Modes" — whatever that is.

I even attempted to talk with some of the student workers in the cafeteria; but one lady wouldn't let me in without my I.D. card, and another said that if I was going to work on the line that I should have been wearing a red shirt and a bandana. Even Mr. DeWalt was impossible to talk to; but he said that he would buy four dozen of my flowers — if I had that many — for use in a centerpiece at a trustee banquet they will be having this evening."

"I understand your predicament. When I was selling peanut brittle to students, a lot of them told me to "go to an undesirable place" because it was greasy. Others bought it simply because they had the "munchies" and didn't feel like walking to Sheetz's for a haagie. To top things off, I got into an argument with one of the members of an organization called Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship — and he won. He then proceeded to witness to me for two solid hours."

"What happened then, Roger?"

"We prayed a lot."

"Is he now a member of the Unification Church?"

"No, Presbyterian."

"You mean you didn't convert him?"

"I think he's converted me. It sounds like they've got a fantastic group. Besides, selling hoagies sure beats peddling peanut brittle!"

"Oh, Roger!"

"But Judy, they even let you eat! As a matter of fact, a few of their members are practically gourmet chefs. I don't know about you, but I sure could use a decent meal."

"Well . . ."

"We might as well hang it up. From some of the rumors I've overheard, Hare Krishna has beaten us to this area by at least five months. We really don't stand a chance.

Senate Line

By Dave Powell

Some of the things happening recently in Student Government are: the chartering of several clubs, election of three freshmen senators, the appointment of a Terrace senator, and the resolution of the South "parking lot steps" problem.

A soccer club, the Andy Lawson Geological Society, the J. C. square dancers and Kvasir were officially chartered as clubs. $150.00 was given to the J.C. dancers to help offset costs of an outside instructor. Attendance is running pretty high, and "Mom" seems to have things pretty much together so far.

Lynn Goodale, from 318 Tussey; Robin Propst, 228 Lesher; and Karen Snyder, 226 Lesher are the new freshmen senators. Hopefully, we will have better representation from the class of '81.

We are pleased to announce that Lucy DeFrance has been appointed by the Senate as Terrace representative last week, filling a vacancy caused by a non-returning senator. The college governance committee of S.G. interviewed three interested students and recommended Lucy.

For a long time there has been a "missing" set of steps from the hill outside of South dorm. When it is wet, snowy, or icy, students must exert an unreasonable amount of effort in reaching the parking lot. Buildings and grounds did not have anything budgeted for it this year. It was also very low on its long list of projects. S.G. learned of two estimates; both were very unreasonable — several hundred dollars in any event. Thursday afternoon I made a call to Smith Brothers lumber mill in Mt. Union, a firm that sells railroad ties to Conrail. After some discussion of our situation, I was told by Bernard Smith that they would donate 15 'rejected' ties to us. Mr. Quinlan arranged for a dump truck, and on Monday all 15 were delivered. Hopefully, we students will have them in as steps before too long.

The subject of vending machines has come up, and the Management and Budget committee is currently reviewing our contracts with vendors to ensure that we are getting the best deal. Although there is only one cigarette machine on campus, it should be known that A) a cigarette machine requires a very substantial initial investment, and B) Juniata doesn't have the greatest record of machine maintenance.

A thousand dollars was allocated to a special fund available to R.A.'s via the Management and Budget committee for use when necessary for the R.A.'s projects, which they are required to initiate this year as part of their contracts.

The great majority of what we do happens because of the input from you. Four more senators this month. Keep communicating!

Radio City: Johnny's Dance Band

By Jim Donahue

It was one of the secret opinions, such as we all have, of Nathan Wagoner that his main success in life would have consisted in his public image — but the jaded, dissipated intellectual is only surface; sure, there's the Voice and Rolling Stone on the coffee table, Che, Picasso, and Zappa sneering down from the walls, the wry allusions from Melville to Barthelme, and enough soap to enzyme-soak Trenton. But — there's another Nathan Wagoner, unearthed covertly by an investigative reporter in my employ, known only to me by her code-name, "Deep Soap." Full expose next week, including Verbatim interviews with the Bubblettes, and polaroids of Wagoner at a Juniata football game.

Last Tuesday John Marshall, Jim Jacetti and the concert committee brought Johnny's Dance Band to the lovely and accoustically perfect Memorial Gym; pretty astounding. The hip and well-informed Juniata community said "much later," and barely showed its face. Not so astounding. After a recent fiasco at Albright where accommodations were nil, where the keyboards were plugged into a 240 volt line and subsequently blew up, and where afterwards there was no payment for the band (what's the story, Arnie?), JDB had to face a quarter filled house at Juniata. The crowd that did show, for their part, more that compensated for their number, providing an enthusiastic reception for ONE OF THE BEST CONCERTS WE'VE HAD HERE IN A LONG TIME. Weep into your spaghetti, disco-dopes.

It was nearly five years ago that I first saw JDB, having had to sneak underage into "Grendel's Lair" on South St. in Philadelphia. They were largely unknown then, and played long driving sets to rowdy crowds until 2 in the smoky, bleary-eyed morning. Since then, they have lost two members — who are reported to be composing a play w/music for cabaret theater, and have expanded their following to — well, not all that far, actually, but at least they play concerts now instead of bars, which the band has unanimously outgrown. Oh yeah, and then there's the record ... Well, yeah, there is the record ... Which completely obscures the band's sound by non-equalized mastering, muddy production, and a dogmeat AM sounding mix that flattens out the punch of the rhythm section, and dilutes their "bar-band" rauch to a milky blandness. This came out of Electric Lady? Hendrix is bumming out in his grave. The band agrees that the production job is beat, they've canned the producer and will record again sometime around February. The band's infectious, party-rocknroll has to be seen, and, yep, you can even dance to it (A splendid time is guaranteed for all). I talked to them before the concert and asked about a live album. They said the suggestion had come up before, but with only one very dubious album, a live one would be a big gamble, since live recording can't match the sound quality of the studio, and is more expensive when done well. (The keyboards player told me that he really didn't care what I wrote, as long as I spelled his name right. Well, if I could have remembered it, I probably would have spelled it right . . .)

The concert lasted for about two hours and was undoubtedly a surprise for those who expected the soft-boiled sound of the album, or for those who thought that their name had disco connotations. The music is rhythm and blues rocknroll tinged with funk, punk, and Philly Soul; alternately springing from solid rhythm (Courtney Coletti on bass plays a Stanley Clarke-style funk), tight harmonies, fine guitar work by Bobby Lenti, and the multi-talents of Nannette Mancini, the lead singer. Standout numbers included "The Best Days Are Here," "Roll It Away," "Alfredo," a new tune called "Help Is On The Way," and "Cold, Cold Ground." Mancini does a tour de force with a song called "Pushed Around Too Long," taking it up from a bluesy purr to a full-tilt wail, her stage presence personifying a cornered alleycat with its back up — this is anima rising the way Joni Mitchell never envisioned it; she withers the male ego with devastating accuracy and a touch of punk insouciance. Mnacini shows remarkable tonal versatility, and her struts and stances were electrifying — everything you always wanted to know about Oral Interp but were too shy to ask. Along with Bobby Lenti's vocals and guitar, a bargain at $2.50.

"Picnic" A Success

By Mark Casale

So that's how people wind up getting married! This revelation came to me this past weekend after seeing the play "Picnic . . . A Summer Romance," presented by The Juniata Players and directed by Dr. Howard Crouch.

The play opens in a nice, stable domestic setting that begins crumbling when the "new kid," Hal Carter (Jeff Boulton) comes on the scene. The presence of the innocent and virtuous young man (he's "never had to pay for it") forces, for better or worse, drastic changes in the relationships between characters. Time, as always, lends a hand in the process.

The acting had varying degrees of effectiveness, but overall it was good. The audience, fairly large on both occasions, came away pondering their fates; at any rate, no picnic is going to catch me off guard.

A slide presentation of 300 color shots of the Yukon region of the Rocky Mountains will be presented on Wednesday, November 9, by senior geology major Wayne Downey. The program, showing highlights of Wayne's summer field camp, will begin at 7:30 p.m. in room P116 of the Geology Dept. Along with scenes of geologic interest will be shots of mountain wildlife and of the environment. Samples of gold, jade, and silver will also be shown.

Final Hockey Victory

By Marian Pagano

The Juniata Women's Field Hockey team won its final home game of the yeary by defeating Susquehanna 4-1 last Friday. The team displayed some of its best work of the season, showing the kind of highly skilled, fast moving hockey that they are capable of.

The attack was led by center-forward Capt. Alison Reeves whose first half hatrick led the way for the Juniata victory. However, the entire JC line displayed beautiful passing and dodging as they gave Reeves the valuable assists she needed. The fourth Juniata goal came in the second half as wing Lisa Masood and inner Cindy Hastings weaved their way around the Susquehanna defense and scored, Hastings assisting Masood.

Volleyball undefeated

By Cheryl Ondechek & Kathy Splane

The combination of Coach Bock's expertise and the girls' immense talents has led J.C.'s first year varsity volleyball team to an undefeated season. The latest victims of the Tribe's massacre were PSU-Altoona on Monday, Oct. 24, Chatham and UPJ on Thursday, Oct. 27.

The Cougars from Altoona made a brief appearance in Memorial Gym; J.C. wiped them out in three quick games. The Tribe opened the match by whitewashing their opponents and, for the second time this season, arose victorious by a score of 15-0.

Chris Reiser was responsible for serving fourteen of the fifteen points acquired by the Indians in the second game. Amy "In Your Face" Bowser's spikes were so powerful that the Cougars were overcome with fear and fell to a second defeat by a score of 15-3.

The third game was the longest one of the match as the Indians slacked off a bit and allowed the girls from Altoona to play a little. The score was tied twice, once at 3-3 and once at 5-5, but the Indians went ahead to win the game 15-7 and clinch the match 3-0.

Never having played Chatham and having beaten UPJ in a close match previously, the girls were both apprehensive and excited about their final night of seasonal competition — a three-way match in Johnstown.

Despite several ominous occurrences (the falling of a ceiling tile prior to the start of the Chatham/Juniata match, and the theft of several items from J.C. players) the Tribe once again showed their strength and determination.

Since it was a three-way meet, the teams played in matches of the best of three games. The Tribe quickly defeated Chatham 2-0 and then went on to clinch a perfect season by beating UPJ 2-1.

Despite a late game rally, the Indians outlasted Chatham 15-10 in the first game. Taking an early 14-2 lead in the second game, J.C. let their opponents know who was number one and won by 15-5 to sweep the match.

The match with UPJ went the full three games. The first game was a setback for the Indians. The Tribe had a commanding 10-4 lead when their opponents started making a move. Once UPJ caught up, the lead seesawed back and forth. In the end, UPJ got by the somen from J.C. by a close score of 16-14.

Cross Country Victorious

By Bob Wallace

Juniata crosscountry team closed out the regular season with a bit of revenge as they avenged an earlier loss to St. Francis. The Indians ran off with a 27-28 victory on the home course. The runners are now preparing for MAC competition.

Results: 1. Barley (SF) 2. Reynolds (SF) 3. Guth (J) 4. Malay (J) 5. Foster (J) 6. Shuler (J) 7. Dougherty (SF) 8. Kohler (J) 9. Harchick (SF) 10. Castor (J) 11. Gallagher (SF) 12. Moore (J) 13. Machern (SF) 14. Butler (J).

J.C. Rolls Over Delaware

By Bob Wallace

The Juniata Indians traveled to Delaware Valley last Saturday to take on the Aggies and came away a 23-6 winner. It was a total team effort of both the offense and defense. Junior quarterback Bill Reilly, starting for the injured Wayne Emmerick, ran a potent offense that racked up 307 total yards. Most of those yards came on the ground as the Indians rushed for 270 yards, their best effort in the last 29 games.

The defense was just as much a factor as they held the MAC Northern Division passing leaders to just 46 yards in the air and a total yardage of 135. Defensive end Jim Zimmerman led the defense with 12 tackles.

The Indians opened the scoring in the first period on a 23 yard field goal by Stan Nosal. But the lead didn't last long as Mike Mackrides returned a short kick off 77 yards for a touchdown, and a 6-3 lead.

Juniata stormed back on a 70-yard drive engineered by Reilly. On fourth down Reilly scooted down the sidelines on a 26 yard T.D. run for a 10-6 lead. There was no further scoring until the fourth quarter when Reilly directed another long scoring drive. With 11:54 remaining in the period Reilly capped a 69 yard drive by hitting Mike Valdiserri with a 13 yard touchdown strike. Jim Jones closed out the scoring for the afternoon with a 21 yard T.D. run on a pitchout.

The victory upped the Juniata record to 3-5 and kept alive the possibility of a .500 season. The next step to that goal will be a clash with Wilkes at College Field this Saturday.

Scoring:

Juniata — Nosal 23 yard F.G.

D.V. — Mackrides 77 yard kick-off return (kick failed)

Juniata — Reilly 26 yard run (Nosal kick)

Juniata — Valdiserri, 13 yard pass from Reilly (Nosal kick)

Juniata — Jones 21 yard run (kick failed)

Juniata	10	0	0	13-23
Del. Valley	6	0	0	0- 6

Smoke Signals: Tom Trappuzzano was the leading ball carrier with 96 yards on 24 rushes ... The Indians ran 82 offensive plays to just 54 plays for Delaware Valley ... Punter Tim Reed averaged 38.6 yards on five boots ... Next week's foe, Wilkes, beat Albright 7-0 two weeks ago ...

The Plagerism Plague

By M. J. Brubaker and Cheryl Ondechek

To cheat or not to cheat, that is the question. Whether 'tis nobler to plagiarize or simply mimeograph ...

A few weeks ago, rumors concerning the grading process in Modes were brought to the attention of Ralph Church, director of the Writing Program. The discrepancies in the grading techniques of various teachers were being questioned by students who had handed similar papers into different discussion leaders. These students received widely varying grades. This prompted Church to check into the grading process in Writing Program, uncovering "the freshmen cheating scandal."

The amount of cheating discovered in the Writing Program investigation caused Janet Lewis, director of Modes, to initiate a search into the assignments turned in for Modes, revealing tremendous evidence of cheating throughout the class.

The methods employed by the students actively participating in this literary fraud included hand-copying papers verbatim, mimeographing papers with spelling errors and grammatical mistakes intact, and paraphrasing the work of others.

The immediate effect on the faculty upon learning the extent of the cheating was one of anger. After its initial shock, many faculty members developed a sense of disappointment. Lewis related her feelings of understanding, yet not approval, of this scandalous situation. She acknowledged that the freshman's first term in college can be a traumatic experience, differing greatly from high school. The academic and social pressures added to the amount of cheating, estimated to include up to twenty-five per cent of the class.

Senior Dee Schaebler summed up the situation stating, "I think they (the freshman class) probably didn't realize what a serious offense plagiarism actually is. Hopefully, this will make not only them, but many others, aware of the importance of doing their own work."

Coffeehouse Success With Roth

By Judy Lee Young

Last Saturday night, Kevin Roth and his Mountain Dulcimer appeared in Sherwood basement in one of the best coffeehouses of the year. Roth's clear, sensitive style and his handling of ballads, jazz-inspired pieces, and slightly bawdy folk songs put the audience in a quietly festive mood. Among the songs played were Dry Bones, Somebody Give Me Direction, and The All-Night Cafe, which well-displayed Roth's talents in voice, mountain dulcimer, and piano.

Kevin Roth, originally from Kennet Square ("the mushroom capitol of the world") began playing the mountain dulcimer, an incredibly versatile instrument, about eight years ago, after he heard it played by another artist. He has recorded five albums, the latest of which are Somebody Give Me Direction and All In One Evening (the latter completed just last week). In his show and on his albums, most of the material Roth presents is his own. The coffeehouse was Roth's third appearance in slightly over a year, and it is hoped that this gifted performer will be back fairly soon.

Danceteller For Artist Series

By Bill Corbin

Danceteller, the professional modern dance company of eight performers will perform in Oller Hall, Thursday, Nov. 10, at 8:15 p.m. Jointly supported in part by a grant from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania Council on the Arts and The National Endowment for the Arts, the presentation will be one of a number of "Artist Series" programs.

Modern dance, only as old as the twentieth century, is almost entirely an American art form. Along with jazz, it is one of the two original American performing arts. Beginning as a carefree descendant of classical ballet, modern dance exists in the Western World in two basic and widespread forms, social dance and theatrical dance. As an expression of hopes and fears, dance has moved into new ways to explore and communicate the joys, sorrows, and the complexities of today's society.

Last year, during the 1976-77 season, Danceteller was awarded a grant for the creation of four significant new works. Three of these dances will be performed at Juniata. The first of these, "Lunch at John Wanamaker's," is for a trio of dancers, She Hall, Trina Collins, and Noel Feely. The dance takes a light hearted look at the serious need for limits on

Dr. Tilden Discusses Policy

By Jamie Pirrello

Last Thursday evening Dr. Arnold Tilden, Dean of Student Services, met with about fifteen students who were interested in discussing this year's alcohol policy. The meeting was limited in scope to the Tussey-Terrace housing complex. The "Zoo" (first floor Terrace) had asked Dr. Tilden for the meeting in an effort to find out what role the administration, resident assistants, and students are going to play in the future because of recent problems that have become apparent in the dorm concerning alcohol.

Fielding questions and comments, Dr. Tilden attempted to bring across to the students, not only the policy as it now stands, but the rationale and possible changes for it in the future. Commenting at the outset, Dr. Tilden said that "I think the policy is reasonable." John Schneider, one of the members of the "Zoo," tried to find out what were Dr. Tilden's feelings on the strict enforcement of the rules pertaining to the policy, especially the problem of walking in the hall with "open containers of beer." Dr. Tilden said in response that "the big thing (this year) was drinking in public areas." He noted that it can possibly be an infringement on other students' rights.

The students responding expressed their feelings that walking in the hall carrying a beer from one room to another should not be considered a violation. They also realized, though, that congregating in the hallways would then constitute possible infringements. Dr. Tilden agreed that there is a difference between walking in the hall and congregating in the hall. He said that there are "levels or degrees of infraction." Our primary concern is congregating with open containers in hallways.

Students also voiced concern over the pressure placed on resident assistants to try to accommodate students and still meet their contractual obligations with the Student Services staff. The students seemed to feel that this was unfair to the resident assistants who are students and peers also. Dr. Tilden understood the point but pointed out that it was part of their job. Concerning enforcement he mentioned that we "dont want to have a police state on the halls." But the rights of all students, who are paying nearly five thousand dollars a year must also be protected to help maintain an atmosphere

Why Cheat?

Certain members of the Class of '81 seem to have distinguished themselves in the Juniata College Community by being caught cheating in "Modes" and "Writing Program." This dubious honor will probably be dealt with by the administration in a fairly severe manner, as has been the tradition in cases such as these. So be it. If these freshmen were caught doing something contrary to established college rules, then they should be made to take the consequences. However, why is it that a seemingly large number of freshmen felt the need to cheat?

Perhaps the answer to this question lies in the nature of the courses in which the cheating occurred. "Modes of Thought and Methods of Inquiry" is designed, supposedly, to show how Western Man has developed a standard for thinking in several disciplines. The logical mode of thought is the spine of the course. Why, then, is it that a student can turn in a paper for evaluation to one instructor and receive a totally different critique from that instructor than he would from another? This fallacy certainly seems contrary to the standardization of thought ideal! The disagreement is not a new one for the Class of '81; it is one that has been faced by all classes since the inception of Modes.

This year's "Writing Program," however, is different from previous years'. For the first time, students are receiving a grade of A-F on the work that they turn in. And once again, the subjective nature of the course dictates that two professors will not give similar evaluations of the same paper. The discrepancy was not noted in the past because the course was pass-fail. Now the students in "Writing Program" are faced with varying degrees of passing.

Considering the discrepancies in the way in which a student's work is evaluated, is it any surprise that a fairly large amount of cheating occurred? Surely the administration and the faculty involved with the two courses could not have expected that all students would try their best when faced with classes in which the evaluation of their work would be carried out on an entirely subjective basis.

Perhaps the grading system for "Modes" and "Writing Program" should be re-evaluated before the Class of '82 arrives next year. Such a re-evaluation will not be easy. It is difficult to standardize grading in courses where such large numbers of students are enrolled. However, an attempt should be made to create a fairer way of grading.

The administration should deal with the freshmen who have been caught cheating in the usual way. However, this punishment should be carried out with the motive for the "crime" in mind. A good analogy can be drawn from an entire class that fails an exam; can the failure to perform be entirely attributed to the students?

A Step Ahead?

It's refreshing to see Juniata College preserving some of the small school advantages, at least at times. Last week's meeting between the "Zoo" (first floor Terrace) and the Dean of Student Services, Dr. Arnold Tilden, to discuss some

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor:

Amateur radio is a rapidly growing hobby, capitalizing on the interest in radio communications made prominent by CB radio enthusiasts. Amateur or 'ham' radio differs from CB in that a much greater frequency spectrum is available, long range communication — 10,000 miles or more — is possible on the ham bands, and an operating license is issued by the Federal Communications Commission upon passing an examination in radio theory and practice and radiotelegraphy (morse code). There are grades of licenses; the lowest, the novice license, is fairly easy to obtain and still confers considerable operating privileges.

I have gotten into this pastime recently and I find it fascinating, for example, to talk to a fellow amateur in California over lunch break. If there is interest on campus among students and staff we can form an amateur radio club or at least an informal group, with the eventual aim of setting up a licensed station on campus. Affiliation with the Huntingdon County Amateur Radio Club is also a possibility. We might organize teaching sessions for interested persons to bring them to the point where they can obtain their license.

If any of you in the Juniata community are interested in this venture, stop by my office (B217) and we will try to get something going on campus.

Food Service

By Sherry Heldibridle

Jeff DeWalt, director of Food Service for Juniata, is in a bind. Not only must he face rising costs in food preparation due to inflation, he also must cover for the financial loss caused by students each year. Students don't realize that taking extra food and "borrowing" dining hall equipment runs into a lot of money.

Each student is allowed 3 meals a day. The amount of food that each person will eat is estimated by Food Service, and the total amount prepared each meal. When students take extras back to their room, this increases the amount of food estimated per person. That causes the cost to go up for every one, and students who don't take extras must pay for those who do.

Food waste is another big problem Jeff faces. People take more of something than they need, and the extra gets thrown away. Rather than take a lot at one time, students are encouraged to go back for seconds if they want more. Peanut butter is better on a bagel than in the dishwasher.

When students don't eat in the dining hall, but pass their card to a visitor, again food estimation is thrown off. Food Service counts on a number of students not eating at each meal, and extra people throw off their count. This costs them money. Students are warned that if a "passed" card is confiscated, a $5.00 fine will be collected. This isn't a way for Food Service to make money, but a way to deter throwing off the count. The money is used by the college as a general fund.

"Borrowing" dining hall equipment is a problem students create for Food Service. Only a small amount that is taken over the year comes back in the spring. Last year, 600-700 trays were taken by students and had to be replaced. That money thoughtless consumption.

The second dance is a major piece titled "William Blake." This dance centers around the life, poetry, and painting of the immortal visionary English poet, William Blake. The dance is for seven performers, and reveals the antagonism between Blake's emphasis on imagination and the spirit of the time, reason.

Artistic director and choreographer for the group, Tina A. Collins, will be featured as a soloist in "Mindstream."

A recently completed dance titled "Merry Belly Muscleworth" will also be performed. This work is rendered by five dancers with musical excerpts from Jacques Offenbach's music, "Gaite Parisienne."

As a form of artistic entertainment, Danceteller appeals to people of all ages, because they are fun to watch. And beyond this they use motion to say meaningful things to the people of today. The grants awarded to the group were given in the hopes that sizeable modern dance audiences throughout the country would have an opportunity to see new and significant modern dance in concert.

Nowtime Singers

By Bill Corbin

A new musical group combining the vocal and instrumental abilities of its members has been put together at Juniata. Although the Concert Choir has been well established, a lot of voices more suited for a "different" sound existed and Dr. Bruce Hirsch felt that it was time for a new and more contemperaneous group to seek its own identity. Thus was formed the NOWTIME SINGERS. Talent-wise the SINGERS will parallel the Concert Choir, but will perform to different musical interests. They will fill a void for popular music; music that is often overlooked in an academic setting. Being smaller in size, they will also be able to attend local social functions as representatives of the college.

problems concerning the alcohol policy comes as such an example. For once, students put aside their usual apathetic personalities and made an attempt to seek out a knowledgeable individual in the area in which they had concerns. It is also nice to see an administrator who decides to get out and meet the students in an atmosphere that is comfortable to both, and to answer comments and questions. Even more surprising was that the discussion produced some real answers to some important questions facing students today at Juniata College.

The meeting was a major breakthrough for the campus, because for the first time students had the ability to communicate as a group with someone of importance in the Administration. Dr. Tilden didn't evade any questions, he answered them both professionally and personally. He was under constant fire, and the teams weren't even at all; with the students having a fifteen to one advantage. But Dr. Tilden kept his composure, never saying anything illogical, and yet responding to the questions on the same level as they were asked.

The students, in keeping with the general atmosphere of the conversation, didn't resort to yelling. Tom Cottner, one of the members of the "Zoo," single-handedly kept the discussion moving along and at the same time kept the students' arguments logical and practical. Both the students and Dr. Tilden seem to now have a better understanding of one another's position. This is not to say that they agree, but at least there is understanding.

One point that was discussed was that of social functions in the lounges, and their downfall because of the College's interpretation of the Pennsylvania laws. This year entertainment had to be provided in order to comply with the state laws that prohibit the sale of alcohol. But, through discussion, a system was worked out that would comply with the state laws and yet allow inexpensive social functions. These functions will foster a better environment on campus through the ability of students to attend them and meet people.

The biggest problem with this year's interpretation of the alcohol policy was not that it became harder to become intoxicated — because it didn't; but that it imposed limits on the ability of students to get out and meet other people. This year's policy basically allowed parties, in students' rooms only. The policy also prohibited hall parties. This had the effect of turning students into many, scattered, small cliques roaming about the campus by themselves. The policy eliminated any chance for being able to meet other people easily. Juniata College has no "off campus," as do other colleges and universities; all we have is ourselves. To split up — as has happened — only helped to split the college community more and more. Juniata College must move to form a community, if only to provide the students with an insight of what it will be like when they leave Juniata and enter the much larger community that surrounds them.

Students must learn how to properly handle rights and responsibilities. To take these away on the premise that, "if you don't have any you can't abuse them," is surely illogical if one considers all the externalities that will soon be imposed upon each and every Juniata student. The Administration must help Juniata College students learn how to properly and maturely use rights and responsibilities. For if the students don't learn now, in the relatively small and safe community of Juniata College, then how can they possibly be asked to enter the outside world as mature adults?

Hopefully, students will begin to maturely accept rights and handle responsibility. For if they can prove without a doubt to the Trustees, Administration, faculty, parents and fellow students the ability to master the rights and responsibilities given to them, then they might (and should) be allowed even more room to mature by the delegation of more and more rights and responsibilities over a span of time. Hopefully, the students of the Juniata College community will realize this and act accordingly. Hopefully, the Administration will provide the chance to allow the students to mature on a personal level and as a small community in constant interaction. Hopefully, more students will ask to have meetings with people in the administration to discuss problems about anything that is of concern to students. Hopefully, the administration will be able to see the importance of this and get out and at least understand the students' view-point. To separate the students from the administration and faculty is to weaken the community, which allows a disruptive minority to jeopardize the whole community. But with the different parts of the Juniata campus united, a minority will not disrupt the campus, but rather the community will force the minority to either grow up and comply or to leave.

This is a step in the right direction as the community should not remain stagnant, but an attempt to leap forward, however, would be wrong; because by leaping forward the community risks being caught off balance. The college community should slowly pace itself down the road to maturity with the help of the administration. It is hoped that last week's meeting was "for real" and not a lesson in diplomatic bureaucracy by the Administration. For even worse than immaturity is to not care about the community you live in.

would have been enough for an extra steak night each month this year. Glasses, bowls, and silver-ware also must be replaced each year. This money can't be put into bettering Juniata's food program if it has to go to replacing utensils.

Students often make the comment, "I payed for it, why shouldn't I take things?" Few of us realize that the charge for board is much lower than it would be if students had to pay for the 21 meals they're entitled to. All students are allowed 3 meals a day, but since not all students eat 3 meals, they aren't charged the full amount. This may not be the case if food continues to be taken.

Jeff wants students to eat their fill, but to do it in the dining hall. If a student wants seconds, he can have them. To take even more food for a snack is being unfair. If a student wants a snack, Tote is open specifically for his convenience. Food Service operates for the students, but it can only work with student cooperation. Which would you rather have — an empty tray or a steak dinner?

Glen Gress, as a maid, and Josie McCoy, as "Madame," in a scene from Jean Genet's "The Maids" to be performed next week at the Carriage House Experimental Theatre on Washington Street.

Carriage House Presents "The Maids"

The Carriage House Experimental Theatre, 316 Washington Street, will present Jean Genet's play, "The Maids." The play deals with the shame falsehoods and pretensions of the serving class that seeks to emulate its masters. Chet's production of the play stars Glen Zaccashen Gress and Lynn Streightiff as the maids, and Josie McCoy as Madame. Edward Kinchley Evans is the director.

Chet completes its fourth season with this production of "The Maids." The Experimental Theatre, the first of its type in Huntingdon, has involved various members of the Juniata community in the past.

"The Maids" will be presented November 10-13 at 8:30 p.m. Adult admission is $5.00, while Student admission is $3.00 for people under 18, or with a student with an I.D. card. Tickets are available at the door, or by calling 643-5125 to make reservations.

Music: Thing of the Past?

By Naomi Iriks

(CPS) — Music to get down with may become a thing of the past on campus. Beginning January 1, colleges will be paying royalties on most live and recorded music heard on campus. Royalty fees are expected to bring disharmony to student activity budgets and that's why the get down might go. Licensing fees could run as high as half of every student activities budget.

Thanks to a bill signed by President Ford last year colleges and universities will no longer be exempt under the federal copyright law from payment of royalties for music played on campus. Music covered by the law runs from rock to rag to Rondeau. Nothing is sacred whether it be live John Denver concerts, band music at football games or record parties at the local sorority. Even muzak in the cafeteria is covered. Anytime a fee is charged for an event that includes music copyrighted by one of the big three copyright agencies royalties will have to be paid.

No one is certain yet how the fee arrangements will operate. Several organizations from higher education are meeting this month with the three music licensing agencies. Between the three are held the copyrights to virtually all music published in the last 75 years. Since a college cannot know in advance whose music may be performed on its campus, it will have to pay fees to all three under three separate contracts. A blanket agreement is trying to be worked out that would cover everything in campus music with a minimum of record keeping and establish a uniform standard for basing fees.

Gary English, executive director of the National Entertainment and Campus Activities Association, one of the higher education groups involved in negotiations said the original royalty exemption for educational institutions "was a trade off between the composers' rights and the need to support arts in the community.

"Now they're opting for composers rights. Maybe Congressmen (sic) decided that a lot of contemporary music wasn't very cultural."

Hearing On Tax Bill Scheduled

WASHINGTON — Hearings on the tuition tax credit bill introduced last month by Senator John Heinz (R-Pa.) and 42 of his Senate colleagues have been scheduled for January 12, 13 and 19 before the Senate Finance Committee, Senator Heinz announced.

The legislation, whose principal sponsors are Senators Robert Packwood (R-Ore) and Daniel Moynihan (D-NY), was introduced September 26 and would allow taxpayers to subtract one-half of the tuition they pay, up to a $500 maximum credit per student, directly from the income taxes they owe. The credit would be available for tuition paid to elementary and secondary schools, prep schools, colleges, vocational or technical colleges, accredited business and trade schools and graduate schools. The credit is refundable and will help low income families whose taxes are less than the credit.

The Treasury would refund the difference between the tax credit and the tax liability. However, Senator Heinz said the major impact of the bill would be to the middle income taxpayer who is "too poor to afford the cost of college, too well to do to qualify for federal financial assistance."

In announcing the hearings, Senator Heinz said scheduling the hearings is a "recognition by Congress that the way we finance our education system is troubled and in need of re-examination. We are faced with a middle-class poor, and good education may be squeezed out of the budgets of a large segment of our population unless we find a way to relieve the tuition burden," Heinz said.

"Lightning" To Strike Out?

By Neeta Moonka

Lightning, a black and white dog identified as a hound by the vet, has been living on the Juniata campus. Recently Jack Linetty, Director of Housing, has considered Lightning a public nuisance and says that he has to go. Enraged students have started a satirical "Lightning for Housing Director" campaign to express their anger. Some concerned students are now taking care of him and took him to a veterinarian. The vet declared Lightning to be in very good physical health with a life expectancy of about seven years. He now has his shots and has no evidence of fleas or worms. The only minor problem he has is a bad eye that he can see out of only slightly.

No one is absolutely sure who Lightning belonged to or how he got on campus, but he has been here quite some time. In a real sense he has become a part of the Juniata College Community.

Linetty said that he first noticed the dog sometime in September and hadn't given him a lot of thought until he saw him several times in Ellis center and the residence halls. One faculty member called Linetty and expressed concern about the dog being around the children's center. After numerous phone calls from the faculty member, Linetty called the dog catcher and told him to come and get the dog. As of last week, he hadn't done so. A few residents of Lesher approached Linetty and "Lightning," shown here in a rare alert position, will not be around the Juniata campus after Thanksgiving due to state law and college regulations. Anyone with any idea for a home for "Lightning" is urged to contact "The Juniatian" before the term break.

Repairs To Begin

By Jerry Keenan

The renovation of several college-owned buildings on 17th St. as part of the Humanities Complex should begin within a month, according to William Alexander, Business Manager. This statement comes in the wake of the Board of Trustees' decision to approve a contract in the area of $250,000 for the renovations.

The buildings affected are: Carnegie-Shoemaker Hall, The Manse, the I. Harvey Brumbaugh House, and the Nye House. Under the terms of the pending contract, the renovation of the Manse should be complete by December 31, while the last repairs to the buildings should be accomplished by August 31 of next year.

The Dana Corporation donated a $100,000 matching grant that was matched with $112,000 from cash and pledges collected from friends of the college. Due to funds already spent, however, approximately $100,000 is still needed to complete the project.

In addition, the Board decided that the college-owned home located at 1700 Mifflin Street should be demolished due to the poor condition of the building.

Garon To Speak

Dr. Allan Garon of Gulf Research and Development Co. will speak on "Will Underground Coal Gasification Ever Be Commercial in the USA?" on Tuesday, November 15, at 1 PM in A-100 of the Brumbaugh Science Center. Dr. Garon is a Senior Research Engineer with Gulf Research & Development Company. He received a PhD degree from the University of Minnesota in mechanical engineering with a heat transfer specialty. Since joining Gulf in 1970, Dr. Garon has worked on thermal enhanced oil recovery, specifically involving fireflooding and fire-water flooding, and is currently involved in the application of these methods to tar sand recovery. He has been involved in underground coal gasification for the past four years.

(CPS) — How you carry your books parallels sex role definitions, says Dr. Walter G. Stephan, University of Texas. Women usually carry books cradled in their arms while a majority of men tote their books by their sides. Women also display a wider variety in carrying styles which has led Dr. Stephan to theorize that "men have more rigidly defined sex roles." Women are freer to express themselves while it is considered unmanly to cry.

There is a more practical explanation if one cares to research the subject further. The ratio of hip to shoulder width in adults is larger for women than men. This makes carrying books at one's side more difficult for females because a woman's arm has to angle outward while a man's can hang vertically.

(CPS) — And now here's something from the believe it or not files. A man disguised as a mallard duck was spun around by one wing and beat over the head with his duck bill.

It happened in Seattle. Bob Holt, 20, was dressed as a duck to advertise a local radio station and was attacked on a downtown street by a six-foot bearded man wearing an English driving cap.

Holt said the man grabbed his left wing, spun him around, pulled off the duck head and hit Holt with it.

The attacker ran into a hotel where the police searched for him. The man disappeared.

"I didn't speak to him, I didn't flap my wings. I didn't do anything like that," Hoit said.

About $50 damage was done to the duck suit.

that encourages academicism. He did feel, though, that resident assistants should use discretion in reporting students to the administration for possible disciplinary action.

The "Zoo," which is a very close hall in terms of friendships, asked if it was at all possible to have a hall party. Dr. Tilden responded negatively, saying that he must look through the perspective of the whole campus and that this would be a bad precedent-setter because on other halls people might be forced to agree, by peer pressure, against their wills. He said that he can't start making exceptions for one hall on campus.

In response to questions concerning larger social functions, specifically those in the lounge, students noted that these functions were becoming impossible to continue. This is so because compliance with the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board requires that beer be sold only if it is served along with live entertainment during performances. Students pointed out that live entertainment was quite expensive and because of the costs involved they were all losing money. Instances that were noted included coffeehouses and this year's Halloween Party which seemed to be an overall success, except that its sponsors lost over seventy dollars, according to sophomore class President Calvin Rhodes. In response, Dr. Tilden said that the college itself does have money that might be used in a "Programming Fund" to defer costs of entertainment, but positively no money could go to alcoholic beverages.

Dr. Tilden was asked if live entertainment was needed if donations were collected. To this he replied no, that entertainment was only needed if money was going to be charged to get in. He was then asked if students sponsoring the party could keep it closed and invite only those people they wanted. He answered yes. Therefore, the student replied, that the way to comply with the laws would be to collect donations in advance and then only invite those people who donated money; this would thereby remove the need for live entertainment. Dr. Tilden agreed, saying that that was true. This came as a major breakthrough this year: to comply with the state laws and still have social functions that were inexpensive. Dr. Tilden mentioned that the lounges would have to be signed out by two people who are twenty-one or older.

Towards the end of the meeting Dr. Tilden also mentioned possible changes in the policy that were being considered. The major one was that the Student Affairs Council (SAC) will likely submit to the administration a proposal asking to allow halls to have hall parties twice a trimester, that would be registered in the same manner as the lounge parties are now. He also discussed briefly a possible "preference to alcohol" in somewhat the same manner as choosing visitation policies. Meaning in part, students could choose a hall based on its visitation policy as well as its alcohol policy. He did mention, though, that he has not given much thought to it at this time.

Tom Cottner, another member of the "Zoo," wrapped up the meeting that ran for over an hour and a half by expressing his thanks to Dr. Tilden. As a concluding comment, Dr. Tilden, on the lighter side of things, said that any rumors that came to Juniata College and its students saying that his main goal was to dry up the campus were completely false.

The "Burn Our Rivals" bonfire held last Thursday was a success even though Mother Nature was less than cooperative.

Spirit Fired Up

Neither wind nor rain could stop the spirit of the students gathered at last week's bonfire. Enthisiasts gathered to cheer on members of the field hockey, football, cross country, soccer, volley ball, and rugby teams in their pursuit of week-end victories. Special recognition went to the field hockey, volleyball, and cross country teams who were to participate in MAC competition.

Due to a conflict in schedules, the band couldn't play, but Juniata's cheerleaders stirred the crowd. The cheering could be heard at East Houses as Chris Miller lit the fire. A dummy, representing the Wilkes' football team, as well as the letters MAC, went up in flames. The fire lit the practice field, until it finally had to be extinguished. Team members left knowing Juniata's students were behind them 100%.

A tradition on campus in the past, the bonfire was the first held in several years. Kathy Suba and Diane Sonntag of 2nd floor Lesher came up with the idea. "We wanted to start arousing school spirit," said Kathy. "Beth Sollenberger, our RA, was looking for ideas for a hall project, and we suggested a bonfire." Beth and Rick Hauenstein of 3rd Northwest were going to do their projects together, and Rick agreed the bonfire would be a good idea. Occupants of 1st and 2nd Lesher, and 3rd Northwest gathered in Lesher basement to build the dummy burned in the fire. They also, along with Jack Linetty, gathered wood, and built the fire.

Kathy said she'd like to organize another bonfire for basketball and wrestling. Beth and Rick, also pleased with their success, would like to see more held in the future. While it helped them fill a requirement for RAs, it also stirred up long needed enthusiasm in Juniata's students. Maybe the bonfire will be a campus tradition once more.

Study Before Sleep

Are you the kind of student who usually studies hard before going to bed, or the kind who goes to bed, sets the alarm for five or six o'clock and then crams? If you're a pre-sleep studier, GLAMOUR Magazine reports you may be getting better grades as a result of your study habits than someone who does the work afterward.

Recent research into sleep and study habits shows that sleep prior to study disrupts memory significantly, unless considerable waking time is allowed before digging into the material you want to learn. The shorter the period of sleep that precedes the studying, the more this sleep disrupts learning. Sleeping four hours or less was found to be highly disturbing to memory; sleeping six hours disturbed it less.

Researchers aren't exactly sure how sleep disturbs the memory process, but they believe it might involve hormones. In laboratory tests on mice, the hormone somatotrophin, produced naturally during sleep, severely affected the memory of mice injected with it.

If you have a test to study for, study first instead of putting it off until the next morning. Better grades might be your reward.

Scholarships Available

The Pennsylvania Institute of Certified Public Accountants is sponsoring its annual accounting scholarship program. This year seventeen (17) $500 scholarships will be awarded to the most qualified individuals from those nominated from approximately 58 colleges and universities in Pennsylvania.

Each participating school may nominate one student. Schools with more than 200 accounting majors in its junior class may nominate two students to compete for the schoiarship award.

For more information contact the Accounting Department Chairman.

Fear of finals finally getting to you? All sorts of psychotic ailments such as manic-depression, acute paranoia, persecution complexes, (everything but delusions of grandeur) taking hold of your mind? Don't try and stay sane — help them along — try something different — something COMPLETELY DIFFERENT ...

AND NOW FOR SOMETHING COMPLETELY DIFFERENT! Yes, Monty Python's And Now For Something Completely Different is being shown this Friday at 7:30 p.m. in Oller Hall, with admission only 75¢. If you're an old Python fan, you won't want to pass up this chance to see such skits as the killer joke, the dead parrot (to non-Python fans, seriously, this sketch is not in the least morbid!) the lumberjack, the grandma gang, the penguin on the telly, the dancing teeth, etc., etc. and so forth. If you're a new Python fan (or not yet a fan at all) take that break from studying, anyway. It's educational — enough Monty Python and you'll understand all those references that make your friends double up with laughter as you silently watch them and wonder.

So, be sure to see And Now For Something Completely Different.

Free copies to the lyrics of "The Lumberjack Song" will be available at the door, and short features by the Three Stooges, the Little Rascals, and Laurel and Hardy will precede the movie.

asked him if they could find a home for the dog. He said that it would be all right and he would give them until Thanksgiving. The faculty member called Linetty and told him that he was in the wrong and said that he was liable for any harm that came to the children.

In any event, Linetty stated that there is no way to keep the dog on campus and he won't be around after Thanksgiving vacation. State, borough, and college policy prohibits the dog from being on campus. It is against the health laws of the state to keep animals in a building that houses large numbers of people. Lightning also violates the borough's leash laws and college policy states "Pets, except fish and turtles, are not to be kept in the residence halls. Cats and dogs are specifically prohibited. With written approval of Mr. Linetty, small caged animals may be permitted."

Linetty commented that he would have done something even if it hadn't been brought to his attention. He maintained that pets of that nature are not allowed and he will not see them present on campus. The best hope for Lightning is that a home is found for him. If anyone has ideas for a good home, please contact the Juniatian.

North Dorm Scene Of "Smokers"

Last Sunday night at about 10:30 pm, there was a small fire in Northwest Dorm. Apparently something was ignited and thrown down the trash chute, setting the trash in the basement on fire. The basement sprinkler system was activated, and, as the hallways began to fill with smoke, the alarms were pulled. ..Questioned afterwards, several residents in the dorm commented on the incident. Apparently, many of them originally passed off the entire business as a joke, at first, and even when the fire was discovered to be "for real," the general reaction was quite a bit below panic. As one second floor dweller put it, "I thought, 'Holy _____, they must be burning a couple of lbs.', so I sprinted, and I saw the smoke coming out of the dumpster — I was about to dive down, but my finer instincts told me that the smoke wasn't the right kind, so — I went back to my room." Chuck Parsons, who with Tim Moore are the self-professed discoverers of the source of the fire, gave this dramatic account, "We saw the smoke coming out of the trash chute and ran downstairs to the boiler room. We felt the door — it was hot, and water was rushing out." Doug Wood, first floor RA, added, "I alertly called my Mom, and asked her what I should do." The alarm was soon spread.

The only person seen to panic was a certain freshman football player who realized that his Teddy Bear was still inside. Some first floor residents commented, "We thought it was a KKK meeting, so we weren't too alarmed." One second floor resident felt that a lesson was to be learned from the entire affair — "Not to have sex on Sunday night at 10:30 — the heat's a little too intense."

Actually, there are a few things to be learned. First, although nothing extremely serious came of the affair, the consequence that most upset the Northwest residents was the fact that neither the sprinklers nor the alarms can be turned off very easily. It was necessary to turn off the dorm's water supply to stop the sprinklers, and the water wasn't turned on again until Monday morning, so whoever started the fire really did inconvenience everyone else, and that could have been obly for starters. Mr. Linetty, who arrived about fifteen minutes after the fire was discovered, is to be commended for his promptness. Also, in all seriousness, Doug Wood commented, "The students handled the situation pretty well." They must have, as nearly everyone who was asked for commented reported helping to spread the alarm. It all sounds like a big joke now, but the smoke was said to be rather bad, and everyone took the incident calmly.

Geology Club Meets

A regular meeting of the Andy Lawson Geological Society was held on Friday, Nov. 5. Prof. Jeff Williams, a new instructor with the geology department, was introduced as the club's faculty advisor. Williams, along with Mark Bushchek, Mike Antonetti, and Jim Connors were then inducted into the society.

Field trip plans were made for Saturday, Dec. 3. The group intends to conduct a day-long excursion to Cumberland County where members will be able to collect specimens of agate. Local phosphate mines will also be surveyed. Interested members are urged to contact Tom Powell early next term if they are interested in going on the trip.

Plans are presently in the works for a Christmas party for members and guests on Dec. 10.

Heinz Calls Carter To Honor Pledge

PHILADELPHIA — Declaring that "we need a separate Department of Education to clear up the bureaucratic mess that exists in the educational field," Senator John Heinz (R-Pa.) called upon President Carter to honor his campaign commitment to create a separate Federal Department of Education.

In remarks prepared for delivery at a meeting of the Pennsylvania State Education Association (PSEA) at the Northeast Philadelphia Hilton, Heinz said: "We need a Cabinet-level spokesperson for education — just as we have one for defense — a spokesperson who can represent the needs of education and who can fight at the highest levels to get education the attention it deserves."

Heinz was an original sponsor of the measure to create a separate department (S.991) which now has 57 cosponsors and has started hearings in the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee.

"There is only one person who can help us move this legislation toward more swift final passage," Heinz said, "and that's Jimmy Carter."

"Jimmy Carter was endorsed by the National Education Association, and he made a solemn promise to you. He promised to work for and support the creation of a separate Department of Education. Up till now, he hasn't lived up to that promise.

"He seems to have doubts he didn't have during his campaign. But as long as Jimmy Carter fails to live up to his promise on this critical matter, his credability must be held in question. I've written to President Carter, and I've asked him to support a separate Department of Education now, just as he did last fall when he was seeking your votes.

Student Loans: The Facts

There are two very popular loan programs for higher education. One, the Guaranteed Student Loan Program (GSLP), lends up to $2,500 a year, with a maximum loan of $7,500 for undergraduates (including those taking vocational training) and $15,000 for undergraduates who then go on to do graduate work. Most of the lenders are banks, credit unions, savings and loan associations and state agencies; in a few cases, the college or university makes the loan directly. The Federal government reimburses the lender 100 per cent if the student defaults. Repayment is required in ten years or less, with minimum payments of $30 a month, and usually begins within nine months after leaving the college program. A new law, which was enacted last year and which went into effect October 1, 1977, prohibits any student with a GSLP loan from having it discharged through bankruptcy until at least five years after the required repayment period begins. There is talk in Congress, though, about repealing this.

The other, the National Direct Student Loan Program (NDSLP), lends up to $5,000 for undergraduate education, $2,500 for certain vocational programs, and up to $10,000 for undergraduate and graduate education. Under the NDSLP, the school itself makes the loan with some 90 per cent of the money coming from the Federal government and 10 per cent from the school. If the student defaults, the school is out its 10 per cent. Repayment is required in ten years or less, usually beginning within nine months after education is completed. Minimum payments are $30 a month.

Filing for bankruptcy at any time is still a legal alternative for NDSLP loans. However, a New York State Appeals Court ruled recently that even though a young man had declared bankruptcy, his NDSLP loan was exempt — that is, it was not canceled. The ruling so far is applicable only in New York State, but it could have far-reaching effects on potential bankruptcy cases in other states where NDSLP loans are involved.

The Juniata Indians overrode the Colonels of Wilkes College in last Saturday's game. The last home game of the season saw Juniata win by a score of 5-3.

Tribe Ends With Victory

By Bob Wallace

The Juniata Indians won a battle of nerves as they pulled out a squeaker against the Colonels of Wilkes College last Saturday. The game failed to produce much scoring and the Indians were able to make a field goal and a safety enough for the win.

After a scoreless first period the Indians took the lead 2-0 when Mile Long and Dom DiIelsi combined to tackle Mel Johnson a yard deep in the end zone for a safety. Earlier the Indians had had a touchdown called back when a Bill Reilly to Mike Valdiserri scoring pass was nullified for an ineligible receiver down field. Reilly was intercepted on the next play and the drive was stopped.

The two teams played a scoreless third period to set the stage for a dramatic finish. Early in the fourth quarter Wilkes took the lead on a Dan Pisarcik 32 yard field goal. But Juniata's senior placekicking specialist Stan Nosal responded with an 18 yarder with just 2:49 remaining on the clock. Nosal, who had not kicked all week in practice, was playing with a badly injured leg. He had earlier missed a 36 yard attempt but came through when the pressure was on.

The Colonels made a last effort to score and mounted a 65 yard drive to the four yard line with just 18 seconds remaining. But mass chaos appeared as the Colonels tried to get the field goal unit on to the field, and with no time outs remaining, the clock ticked away to seal the victory for the Indians. The Indians close out the season next week on the road against Ursinus.

Scoring Summary

Juniata: Safety (Johnson tackled by Long and DiIelsi)

Wilkes: Pisarcik 32 yard field goal

Juniata: Nosal 18 yard field goal

Smoke Signals: Tom Trappuzano became the first J.C. running back to go over the 100 yard mark this season as he totaled 108 yards on just 15 carries ... Gary Lyter added 88 yards on the ground in 20 rushes ... Once again the other half of the kicking game was in top form as punter Tim Reed averaged 41.8 yards on six boots ... Larry Sheppard totaled 24 tackles for the afternoon ... Bill Reilly received ECAC honors for his performance against Delaware Valley.

J.C. Women Third In M.A.C.'s

Last Friday 12 excited volleyball players arose at 5:30 am to start their trip to the MAC's. Juniata's first match was Gettysburg. The Indian women took them in three; 15-11, 12-15, 15-12. After a brief rest, the team took the floor only to encounter their first loss. Scranton was a scrambling team. Their constant hustling wore down the usual JC aggressive game. The women looked tired and unenthused, and just didn't play good volleyball. As a result, they were defeated in two straight, 11-15, 10-15. The final match of the evening featured Western Maryland and Juniata. W. M. was a polished team. They did not make mistakes. Juniata once again looked slow and sluggish. The tribe lost this match 8-15, 7-15.

The team was shocked as well as disappointed with their performance. Coach Bock said, "The girls were tired from the trip, they just didn't play to their potential."

Saturday was a different story. After a good night's rest they were ready to play some serious volleyball. And they did. Every team member played their best, sweeping past Dickenson 15-3, 15-5. After reviewing the rest of the team records JC was locked into a 3-way tie for the fourth team to enter the semi-finals. To break the tie the girls had to play Gettysburg once more, for one 15 point game. JC won 15-11. The women went on by defeating Scranton 15-8, winning the semi-final spot.

The semi-finals pitted Juniata against host Washington College while Dickenson played Western Maryland. The powerful Western Maryland breezed Dickenson, and Juniata appeared to be heading for the finals as they won the first game 15-3. Washington rallied however, and won the next two games by narrow margins, 13-15, 12-15.

Coach Bock reported that the team played "super ball." He was obviously proud of the showing JC made. "We were beat by a good team. The games could have gone either way." Western Maryland went on to take first, with Washington College second.

The Juniata Women's Volleyball Team would like to thank especially the student body who supported our season. We had the greatest crowd. It was fun to play for such enthusiastic fans. Also, we'd like to thank our "traveling kazoo followers." It's been an exciting and successful season for the girls and for women's sports at JC.

Field Hockey Ends Season

By Marion Pagano

The Juniata Women's Field Hockey team closed out its 1977 campaign at the MAC tournament held at Franklin & Marshall College last weekend. Unfortunately the team did not place in the top four but did win one of the three games played.

Juniata opened the tournament Friday morning against second seeded Gettysburg. Gettysburg has an extremely strong offense that kept JC on the defensive for most of the game. At the end of the first half Gettysburg was up 1-0 but the JC defense could not hold them in the second half as the final score was 5-0. This defeat moved Juniata into the consolation round of the tournament and the chance for third or fourth place was there.

JC next met Lycoming College on Friday afternoon. Juniata and Lycoming have met twice this season, each team winning one. But the JC squad was fired up for this game and won it by a score of 2-0. Both of the goals came in the first half from senior inner Bonnie Books whose tournament goals were her first of the season, assists were from Alison Reeves and Lisa Masood.

The next game for Juniata was with Dickinson College who played JC earlier this season and ended in a 2-2 tie. Juniata dominated the play of the game and seemed to be running around the Dickinson players. However, JC was unable to capitalize on its many scoring opportunities while Dickinson was able to use one of its few attacks to score a lone goal and win the game 1-0. So ended the hockey season of 1977.

Five seniors played their last hockey game for Juniata over the weekend. These included Captain Janet Bechtel who played left wing scoring one goal and assisting another; Inner Bonnie Books who scored JC's two goals in the tournament that beat Lycoming she also assisted once during the regular season; Halfback Diane DeRafelo who did a fantastic job moving up from fullback to halfback to fill in for the injured Shawn Hansen. Diane also assisted once; Fullback Barb Reifeis who did an exceptional job at the MAC tournament; and Goalie Claire Swavely who has done a good job for Juniata all season along with many outstanding saves at the tournament.

Looking forward to next year, Juniata will have one of its most experienced teams ever with ten letter winners returning and Coach Nancy Harden has quite a few good recruiting possibilities lined up.

X-Country completes Schedule

By Bob Wallace

Juniata's cross-country closed out the 1977 season last weekend in the MAC cross-country championships at Memorial Lake State Park. The Indians finished 12th in a field of 17 schools with Franklin and Marshall capturing the crown. Joe Guth led the Juniata runners covering the 10,000 meter course in 34:17. He was followed by Mike Bodley, Jim Foster, Jim Shiller, Tim Moore, and Casey Kohler in order of finish.

Results:

1. F&M (41) 2. Gettysburg (74) 3. Ursinus (117) 4. Johns Hopkins (121) 5. Lebanon Valley (145) 6. Swarthmore (148) 7. Susquehanna (200) 8. Scranton (203) 9. Haverford (232) 10. Delaware Valley (234) 11. Wilkes (298) 12. Juniata (356) 13. Muhlenberg (385) 14. Widener (394) 15. Albright (395) 16. Drew (428) 17. Washington (455).

The Test

We're looking for a few good college men who will make good Marine officers.

It's a test of body, brain and spirit: If you've got it, prove it. If you want it, work for it. If you think you're a leader, show us.

That's our challenge. The only promise we make is that you'll be running in good company.

Scandal Viewed in Retrospect

By Jerry Keenan

The "Freshman Cheating Scandal" of Fall term involved thirty-five members of the Class of 1981 in Writing Program and seventy-nine in Modes of Thought and Methods of Inquiry, according to the directors of the courses.

Dr. Ralph Church, director of Writing Program feels that the high number of incidents of cheating was due to a combination of several factors. He feels rumors that cheating was possible to "get away with" along with the fact that work was assigned in both courses for two consecutive weekends caused the dishonesty. He further went on to note that cheating occurred in Writing Program in the second weekend's assignment.

Prof. Lewis pointed out that freshmen are subjected to the upperclassmen's attitude of "everybody passes modes" and therefore don't take the course seriously. Since the course is large, freshmen believe that different discussion leaders won't compare papers turned in by the members of the courses. Prof. Lewis feels that these attitudes and beliefs, along with a down-playing of the seriousness of copying contributed greatly to the cheating.

Consequences for cheating were similar in both courses. Students found copying received a zero on that assignment and were put on a list for future reference. In "Modes" the effect of the zero was to lower the students' final average five per cent, while in "Writing Program" the grade lowered seven per cent. In some cases this resulted in the dropping of a letter grade on the students' grade report.

Both Prof. Lewis and Dr. Church seemed to feel that the cheating had an historical precedent, but not in the magnitude in which the phenomenon manifested itself this year. Both directors indicated that isolated cases of cheating had occurred in the past and that occasionally a cheating "ring" had surfaced. Neither instructor had ever seen cheating on such a scale as this year, however.

Steps have been taken to prevent cheating in the future in both courses. In "Modes" all papers will be checked against one another, and Prof. Lewis stated that a program to catch cheating has been developed, although she declined to give specifics for fear that the system would be ineffective if students knew how it operated. She did mention, however, that the program was not difficult to develop. Dr. Church said that future cheating will result in a zero on the paper and a lowering of one letter mark on the final grade. A second offense will result in automatic failure of the course. He feels that these policies are more in line with the college's official stand on cheating.

Dr. Church summed up his attitude by stating that any cheating is a detriment to the student. "Writing Program" is designed to help a student improve his writing. If the assignment turned in by the student was not original, then the student will not benefit from an examination of errors, etc. Prof. Lewis felt that as far as "Modes" goes, discussion of ideas is a good way to understand the course. She emphasized, however, that such discussion did not include copying of another student's work. Such an action she defined as "stealing."

Marathon Benefits MS

By Brenda Geiger

The Circle K Marathon for the benefit of Multiple Sclerosis drew to a close Saturday night, December 3rd, at 11:00 p.m. The marathon had lasted 26 hours, and so had quite a number of its participants. A lot of credit goes to the many people who made it all 26 hours. There were four volleyball teams and seven dancers left at the close of the marathon. They were the Key Club team, the Community Center team, Cara Kelham's team, and Jim Angstadt's team. The dancers were Carl Brown and Mindy Anderson, Calvin Rhodes and Marge Porter, Brenda Geiger, and the defending champions from last year, Mike Gibboney and Patty McElwain.

Terry Bittner, a staff announcer from WHUN in his ninth year at the station, also lasted the full 26 hours. Terry, who had also been sponsored, broadcast the marathon live at different intervals during the 26 hours and also interviewed some of the participants. The records that were played came from the station and Terry's own collection, and some were donated by Miller's in Huntingdon. Food was provided for the participants by several church organizations and faculty members.

The planning was all done by the Circle K marathon committee, which was headed by Teal Telep. The committee consisted of Trudy Rhodes, Cara Kelham, Miles Shearer, Jeff Wollett, Sue Meissner, Barb Hale, Barb Linder, and Ruth Frye. All benefits go to Multiple Sclerosis and the proceeds are to be turned in to box 1303 by January 6.

'Deck The Halls...

By Bill Corbin

The Christmas season is upon us and students' thoughts are rapidly drifting away from studies and more in the direction of partying.

In keeping with the festive nature of the coming week, J.C. officials will permit a modification in the guidelines concerning campus parties.

Dean Arnold Tilden of Student Affairs feels that in the past, students have been positively receptive about party privileges and he sees no change this year. When asked how he saw things, Tilden replied, "Christmas parties are a social tradition that we like to encourage at Juniata. A relaxed policy will help the continuance of these student functions."

Basic procedures will have to be followed.

The days of Dec. 9 through Dec. 16, inclusive, will be open for parties. Information can be obtained Friday, Dec. 9, from all resident assistants if you care to sponsor a floor or hall party. A 48-hour notice and completion of a social function form, obtainable from Wayne Justham in Ellis Center, is required for all affairs. This also applies to use of any of the dorm lounges.

The provisions as stated in the guidelines on the use of alcohol on campus, issued during the fall term, will be strictly adhered to. Students will be permitted to have alcoholic beverages, but they cannot charge admission to a party for their consumption.

DiFranco Solos

By Neeta Moonka

Loretta DiFranco is the product of the New York Metropolitan Opera. A late starter, she began studying singing at the age of sixteen and at eighteen she applied to become a member of the American Guild of Musical Artists (AGMA). The reply was in the form of an invitation to audition at the Met which Ms. DiFranco decided to do. She was accepted into the extra chorus, and in 1965 she became the first opera soloist to be taken from the Met's chorus. She was also the first and only

Senior Value Studies

By Mark V. Casale

Senior Value Studies, or "Modes II" (the affectionate appellation given it by students), is the last in the series of required courses at Juniata. In addition to its air-tight no-escape clause, it features some of the most rigorous testing of those grey mental attitudes called values. Why is such a course necessary? Success is bound to side with the students who can crank out a convincing essay or those who possess reams of patience. They are no more likely to to have a strong sense of values, nor would they be any more likely to act responsibly on them. If the purpose of the course is to make us think, the trauma of commencement should stir at least a little self-evaluation in each senior, and for others there is always the school of hard knocks. I feel that one's values should be an integral part of whatever the course but can never be the objective of the course itself. They can't be taught.

In a final, fifteen page paper, every student will answer a question like: "What things do I consider most worthy of my time, attention, energy and money — and why?" I do not consider Senior Value Studies a good investment of these elements. Perhaps, then, SVS means that, instead of studying ourselves, we are being studied by the staff. That is unlikely. I would just like to have the opportunity to stand up for my values and pass this course by.

Met chorus member to win the Metropolitan National Auditions.

In addition to singing, Ms. DiFranco also studied acting and languages such as French, Italian, German, and Russian. She said that sometimes it takes a total of months to prepare for a performance. It's not just the singing involved but the relationship between the other performers on the stage. She loves working at the Met and feels it is like a family.

She has sung more than 20 roles with the Met, among them Mimi and Musetta in La Boheme, Lauretta in Gianni Schicchi, Zerlina in Don Giovanni, and Susanna in Le Nozze Di Figaro. As a performer Loretta DiFranco is superb and as an individual she has the sensitivity which appeals to audiences.

Planning to hang around old haunts over the holidays? You may be the best person to talk to your friends about Juniata. If you will be visiting your old high school over the Christmas break, perhaps you'd like to take some Juniata information with you. Merely drop by the admissions office before you leave for term break.

Letter to the Editor

To The Editor:

The so-called "Freshman Cheating Scandal" is, as indicated by its name, scandalous. To treat it lightly is a mistake and a poor reflection on Juniata College. In "The Plagiarism Plague" (The JUNIATIAN, November 10), various people excuse the freshmen for their actions on the grounds that their first term in college "can be a traumatic experience, differing greatly from high school" and that they "probably didn't realize what a serious offense plagiarism is." The people being accused are not irresponsible children; they are allegedly mature young men and women who make the decision to cheat quite aware of the gravity of what they were doing. If they are not, they don't belong at Juniata. To excuse them with little more than a slap on the wrist is unfair to the rest of us who; despite the "traumatic experiences" of college life, managed to survive our first, and consequent, terms at Juniata.

For those who need reminding, "Attendance at Juniata is a privilege and not a right. If any student has serious reservations about his or her ability to adjust to the traditions and general policies of Juniata, he or she should consider carefully enrollment at some other educational institution." (the Pathfinder)

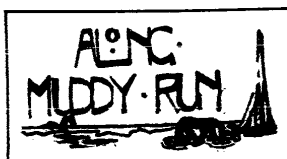
SBO Party A Success

By Kathy Jacobs

On Friday December 2, the Student Business Organization sponsored a fund-raising Christmas party. This was the first organized tower party of the year, under the new alcohol policy.

Live music was provided by Steve Rossi and Greg and Frank Yesko in the Flory-Kline lounge. Everyone seemed to enjoy their variety of songs. They would have played for a longer time, but due to the volume of the audience, it had to be cut short.

People stayed out of the stairways which pleased the administration, as well as those students who worked hard to make the party a success.



By Barbara Frezza

After bullshitting my way through a "values" paper for HEA, in which I was to defend those principles I supposedly cherish, I wondered how many of my fellow classmates were quilty of using the same modus operandi. After all, who wants to admit—and on paper, no less—that they have "socially unacceptable" values?

Although this lesson in self-examination was, for me, more of an exercise in superfluousnouss, it did open my eyes to some of the values—or lack thereof — in society as a whole, and in the various offices of the Juniata College Administration in particular.

It has been brought to my attention that our Resident Assistant at N.J. House (as well as several other R.A.'s) may not be considered for a position as a Resident Assistant next year—not because they are planning to raze N.J. House—thereby making her job obsolete, or because she has failed to honor her conract; but because she attempts to deal with us on an adult level.

Aside from their usual duties as surrogate parents, enforcers of the ever-popular alcohol policy and sounding boards for complaints about noise-levels, roommates, housing conditions and life in general, R.A.'s have been delegated an added responsibility: which is referred to by the Student Services Staff as "Programming in the Residence Halls", but which amounts to little more than advanced babysitting techniques. Included in this "Programming' are "cultural events", such as: bonfires, exam scream-ins, pumpkin carving contests, plus a host of others that you wouldn't believe, that R.A.'s are responsible for getting us to participate in.

Unfortunately, when an R.A. is put in charge of the welfare of fourteen females with distinct personalities, differing interests, varied types and degrees of neuroses, all of them quite good at bitching, and all living in what can only be described as one of the few ghettoes with "class" on the JC campus, the list of possibilities for "cultural events" is narrowed considerably.

For some reason, I doubt that a greased pig contest or a strip-mine tour would be winning suggestions. And if anyone would have seen the cleaning lady's expression after our pre-Halloween party, they would have been recommended that we have a pumpkin carvin contest. It took a couple of cases of Shlitz to get us through the carving of four pumpkins; and the combination of stale beer and pumpkin pulp makes a paste that rivals dishwasher-hardened peanut butter in its tenacity. A bonfire within a hundred yard radius of the place is out of the question, as N.J. House is supposedly a fire-trap; but we have toasted marshmallows over the kitchen stove. And who needs to have an exam scream-in when we sit around and solve the problems of the world every weekend?

But as Juniata College students living on-campus, we aren't entitled to special treatment. After all, if all of the R.A.'s could sit around brainstorming this wonderful list of

Recently some problems have come up in response to an article in the November 10th issue of the Juniatian. The article, entitled "Dr. Tilden Discusses Policy," was seen to be somewhat ambiguous by Wayne Justham, Director of Student Activities and Dr. Arnold Tilden, Dean of Student Services.

The problem is due to the lack of clarification by Dr. Tilden in qualifying the impression made. It is important for students to know that parties supported by donations cannot make money; only cover costs. Dr. Tilden also felt that parties of this nature should have some type of guest list which would be brought to the Student Services Office. The guest list, though, would not have to be an axact list, but rather an informal list of guests possibly attending. This would be necessary to insure that organizers of such parties would not throw parties to make money for themselves.

Adaptive Aquatics Program

By Anne Wald

Have you heard about the Adaptive Aquatics Program which Juniata senior Ann Shultz initiated this past fall at the Middle School swimming pool? Ann was aware of the need for an adaptive aquatics program in the Huntingdon community when she received her certificate as a special instructor for adaptive aquatics last summer. So, with the help of various individuals in the community and the local chapter of the American Red Cross, she has gotten the program well underway.

It is designed for individuals of all ages who have emotional, mental, or physical handicaps which require special attention and thus make regular swimming classes inadequate. Requirements of the program are adaptive enabling every one of the participants to have a successful experience. Swimmers who complete the course receive a special swimming card indicating that they have had the adaptive aquatics program.

Publicity brought sixteen children and adults from the community — mainly from the public schools, the developmental workshop, and the Huntingdon Group Home — to attend this year long class on Tuesday evening from 7-9 at the Middle School pool. There are presently sixteen aides from the Juniata campus who spend their time and energy to work individually with the swimmers. The only requirement to be an aide is the ability to swim. Ann instructs the aides who then work on a one-to-one basis with the swimmers.

If you are interested in volunteering as an aide or if you know of someone who would benefit from the course, contact Ann Shultz at telephone number 643-5694 or box number 1603.

Flicks

By Judy Young

This week's Centerboard film feature is Funny Lady, a sequel to the now-classic Funny Girl, in which Barbra Streisand first began her role as Fanny Brice. (Fanny Brice was a famous singer and comedienne in her own right, best remembered for her character creation, "Baby Snooks.") In Funny Lady, Barbra Streisand continues her portrayal of Brice as she enters into a relationship with Billy Ross (played by James Caan), a flashy Broadway star, and Omar Sharif continues his role of Nicky Arnstein, the ill-fated gambler.

This star-studded musical extravaganza will be shown in Oller Hall this Friday evening at 6:45 p.m. If you like Streisand, you'll love Funny Lady.

Along the Muddy Run

"cultural events" the least we could do is try just one. Besides. We'd like to keep our R.A.

Reluctantly, we scanned the sheet of "Brainstorming Ideas" for something in which we could all participate. We immediately eliminated team sports or anything requiring coordination. I can't speak for the house as a whole, but making it up a flight of steps without tripping over people, the phone cord or my shoelaces is enough for a challenge for me. We eight don't have enough people or enough money to be considered eligible for group rates for many of the trips and activities, and anything involving food is definitely out of the question; we're all on a perpetual diet—starting tomorrow! Some of the other suggestions evoking little or no enthusiasm from the group include: Sadie Hawkins day (Why chase after guys if they're content to chase after you?(; interior decorating (We have the only bathroom replete with a panelled ceiling and a neurotic fern, on campus.); turnkey pageant (What do you thing we sit and laugh at from the front porch?); and breaking world records (See how many people on your hall can wind up at J.C. Blair Memorial Band-aid Box in less than fifteen minutes!).

We mulled over the list for the umpteenth time, trying to find something—anything—that we could all agree on. It is at this point that I would like to make an "Immodest Proposal".

In keeping with the less than reputable image that N.J. House has always had, we would like to be the first group of persons to sponsor a co-ed pajama party—date to be announced. To enhance the rapport between students and the persons responsible for making Juniata a great place in which to learn and have fun, all members of the JC Administration, Faculty and Trustees will be cordially invited. (We do, however, caution those members of all three groups with a history of cardiac problems or a predisposition to nervous breakdowns to think twice before accepting this invitation.)

The pajama party will be held at N.J. House, with the ultimate attention given to a tasteful presentation. All persons must wear pajamas. Those persons appearing in their underwear or in the nude, claiming not to have pajamas, will not be permitted to attend; although those of you who are "timid" souls may wear your bathrobes, as well. Refreshments will be served, and there will be a modest donation asked for the evening's entertainment. We do hope you'll make an effort to attend.

TO THE RESIDENTS OF N.J. HOUSE: Please see me for an explanation before the lynching...

Radio City: Time Loves A Hero

By Jim Donahue

Time Loves A Hero is the sixth record by Little Feat, a cult band out of California that plays a distinct brand of countrified funk that refuses exact categorization; add to this the city-slick production and cynical, hard-line lyrics:

off our rockers, acting crazy, with the right medication, we won't be lazy and ya know that you're over the hill when your mind makes a promise that your body can't fill
Doin the old folks' boogie and boogie we will Cause to us the thought's as good as the thrill ...

Little Feat's vocals leave much to be desired, but at least they're confident enough to sound like they belong. The outstanding aspect of this record (and what more can you ask?) is the music, which ranges from tight electric blues to multi-melodic jazz. Little Feat is the first band I've heard that has taught an Oberheim Polyphonic Synthesizer how to funk; they wire the synthesizers to distort like guitars (or was it wiring distorted guitars to synthesize?) "Rocket In My Pocket" and "Day At The Dog Races" are impressive showcases for whatever it is they do. They extensively use various combinations of keyboards and guitars; the natural superior ability of keyboards to sustain chords allows guitarists Lowell George and Paul Barrere freedom to make what sound like impossible changes in the lead lines. With a subtle but important assist from Bill Paine's keyboards, the Little Feat guitarists sound like they have three hands. The flow of the music is not sacrificed for pyrotechniques, though, which are subtle and used sparingly. There is considerable interplay between the musicians, all of whom play very well — this is not an album that gives the impression that you are listening to a studio full of electronics instead of real instruments and musicians. It would be hard to subject blues or rock'n'roll to that kind of treatment and come up with anything that captures the energy of the original performance or material. Little Feat's producer Ted Templeman uses the studio to the material's advantage, not allowing it to abuse the sound of the band. I can't imagine anyone wanting to get up and dance to synthesized, phase-shifted, prefabricated music. With Little Feat you don't need the medication.

Confidential Note: If I find out who ripped off ten of my albums, I'm going to CrazyGlue K.C. and the Sunshine Band onto your turntable.

Juniata Nips Crusaders in Opener

By Bob Wallace

The Juniata Indians opened their 1977 home schedule on a winning note with a 66-65 win over Susquehanna. Tay Waltenbaugh arched in a long jumper from the left baseline with three seconds remaining to gain the victory.

The Indians came out running and opened up a quick 10-2 lead at the onset. But with just over 13:00 minutes remaining in the half, Waltenbaugh was forced to leave the game with three personal fouls. The Crusaders managed to close the gap on Indian turnovers and missed free throws. But Juniata put on a late half surge to take a 38-34 halftime lead.

The fact that the Indians had this lead was mainly due to the play of two players. Sophomore center Andy Dwyer controlled the inside play scoring 21 of his game-high 28 points in the first half. Meanwhile Bob McNelly put the clamps on Susquehanna scoring leader Mike Scheib. Scheib who was averaging 26.0 per game was held to just four points in the first half and 12 for the game.

The second half play was even throughout and with 2:55 on the clock the Indians had a 62-57 lead. At this point Coach Pat Frazier serted senior guard Tom Bickel to run the four corners offense. But Indians turnovers and poor shot selection allowed Susquehanna to take a 65-64 lead with just 47 seconds left on Bruce Bishop jumper from the foul line.

The Indians ran the cloek down to 13 seconds and timeout was called to set up the last shot. The play was designed for Waltenbaugh to take the last shot, and with 3 seconds left his jumper sailed through the net for two points and a 66-65 victory.

Dwyer led the Indians with 28 points and 15 rebounds. Waltenbaugh hit on 7 out of 10 from the field and 2 free throws for 16 points. As a team the Indians hit on 53% compared to 49% for the Crusaders.

The victory along with two losses on the road gives the Indians a 1-2 mark. They hit the home floor tonight against the Westminster Titans.

Harden Readies Team

By Kathy Splane & Cheryl Ondechek

Winter term is upon us and so is the start of another girls' basketball season. Under the expert guidance of first year coach Nancy Harden, the girls began a conditioning program in early October, with nightly two hour practices beginning Nov. 7. Starting with eighteen prospects, the ranks had dwindled to thirteen by the first scrimmage held Dec. 3.

The Tribe travelled to Penn State University-Altoona Campus, where they outplayed the Cougars, showing their immense talent. Senior Jan Edgar paced J. C. with thirty points while Junior Heather Morrison connected for nineteen.

With four returning starters from last year's team (having lost Mardi Frye to graduation) and some outstanding freshmen players, this year's team has expectations for a successful campaign.

Coach Harden's basketball skills and knowledge coupled with her understanding of the players, has developed the rather young team into a strong contender this season.

Team leadership will be coming from this year's tri-captains: seniors Jan (Rookie) Edgar, Janet (J.B.) Bechtel, and sophomore Nancy (Zink) Zinkham.

The first season match for the Indians will be tonight at Bucknell with the home opener coming on Jan. 7 with Susquehanna.

Winter Track Opens

By Mindy Anderson

JC's new team, the Winter Track team had its first practice December 5, at 4:00 in Memorial Gym.

Practice is held on a voluntary basis. The JC cross country team composes a majority of the men's team, whereas the female team finds representation in Mary Crosby, Sherry Heldibridle, Mindy Anderson and Sue Hoadley. The meets scheduled for JC so far this year include Gettysburg, Shippensburg, and Bucknell, all indoor. Team captains were to be chosen at the last practice.

Ice Hockey Opener Ends In Ties

Juniata and Lock Haven battled it out to a 5-5 tie last Saturday at the Penn State Ice Pavilion. The game featured clean, end-to-end action and a superb four-goal performance by JC freshman Coy Butler.

Lock Haven jumped off to an early lead with two breakaway goals in the first two minutes. Jamie Pirrello pulled JC to within one goal five minutes later when his wrist shot from 12 feet out eluded the Lock Haven goalie. Lock Haven added another goal, followed by Butler's first, a wicked point-blank slapshot.

The second period belonged to Juniata, with Coy Butler getting two more goals while some excellent back-checking by the defense limited Lock Haven to just five shots at JC goalie Mark Casale. Coy's fourth goal in the final period put the Indians on top 5-4, but at this point the team seemed to tire. Lock Haven put the pressure on and finally came up with the tying field goal late in the third frame.

An overtime period was played but later discounted under NCAA rules, which state that only playoff games may have overtime.

Cagers Start Under New Coach

By Bob Wallace

The Juniata Cagers have started their 1977-78 season with an optimistic outlook. Under a new coach the prediction for a winning season seems to be a good bet. Pat Frazier has taken over the head coach spot. Frazier, a Juniata grad and former Indian MVP, came over from Huntingdon High School where last year he led them to a 22-2 record and the District six crown.

Back this year are all five starters from last year's team and some new faces to provide Frazier with a number of quality players. Heading the list is 6-7 senior Tay Waltenbaugh (18.3 ppg and 10.8 rebounds) from Tarentum. Waltenbaugh is being tabbed as a Little All-American candidate. Another possible Little All-American is 6-1 junior Roger Galo (13.3 ppg) from New Kensington. This could be the best 1-2 scoring combination in Juniata history. The other returning starters include 6-5 sophomore Andy Dwyer (12.0 ppg) from Hazleton, 6-4 junior John Grzesiuk (7.5 ppg and 9.5 rebounds) from Pittsburgh and 6-1 junior Bob McNelly, the Indian assist leader, from Somerset.

Paskill Takes First Place

By Mindy Anderson

The Juniata Wrestling squad came back victorious after the Lebanon Valley Invitational held on Saturday the 3rd. Out of the 16 teams involved Juniata emerged in 8th place, the highest place the Indians have occupied since the Tournament's beginning.

The tournament had some changes over last year; the competition was stronger overall for all teams. The JC grapplers overall did a great job. Sophomore Joe Paskill captured 1st place proving his fine wrestling ability, and freshman Bob Funk took 4th. Sophomores Tim Jackson and Todd Roadman did well racking up 2-2 and 1-2 match records. Heavier weight brackets experienced some trouble; Bill Bruner and Hurk Perry each lost in touch, close matches.

Grapplers Prepare for Season

By Mindy Anderson

Once again the matmen of JC take to the mats with an outstanding team. This year's squad is comprised of basically freshmen and sophomores. Interviewing Coach Berrier, he has high hopes that this team has the chance to be the best team since 1967.

This year's team will be full of some pleasant surprises. The light weights are solid this year with outstanding wrestlers to fill them in. The 118 pound weight class will see the battle between freshman Robert Gay, Kevin Roads and sophomore Bruce Amig. The bracket expected to produce some startling results come in at 134 pounds. Three freshmen will be involved here, Mick Miller, Robert Funk and Dale Snyder. Sophomore Joe Paskill holds down the 142 pound class. The upper berths however, even with the outstanding wrestlers filling them will be shaky territory, due to the fact only one wrestler is available for each berth. Randy Leopold, Bill Bruner and Herbert Perry will fill the 167, 177, and 190 pound slots respectively. The team as a whole, faces a new challenge in the 1977-78 season. JC will be wrestling four out of the top ten teams in the Middle Atlantic Conference. The MAC standings in wrestling have improved in quality. The Division III powerhouses of Gettysburg, Lycoming, Elizabethtown and Delaware Valley will prove admirable foes for JC. A new aspect to wrestling this year are most of the matches for JC are quadiangular as well as at home. The first match for the matmen will be at Lebanon Valley. Of the 16 teams participating, Coach Berrier hopes that JC can return home with 2nd or 3rd place.

The first home match is with Susquehanna on December 6, along with Widener, Delaware Valley and Lycoming. Come out and support an excellent team. There will be announcements bearing match dates as to time, date and place.

Counseling Situation Explored

By Jamie Pirrello

Juniata College's counseling facilities would be more effective if they were separated from student services, according to several past and present members of the College's counseling staff.

Marsha Hartman, freshman counselor who also deals with upper classmen, feels that there is a real need for such a separation. Noting the conflict that can arise between the counseling and disciplinary aspects of student services, Mrs. Hartman stated "I've felt all along it would be nice to have a real counseling set-up; staffed strictly with counselors." Mrs. Hartman felt that many students who do have problems don't use the Student Services Office because of the fear of retribution should their problem have stemmed from wrong-doings.

Terry Peters, Admissions Counselor and Resident Director of Sherwood Dorm, echoed Mrs. Hartman's views. Peters sees Founders Hall as a place with negative connotations for students who are seeking help with personal problems. He feels that a counseling service located in a more "neutral" area, such as Ellis Hall or within the dorms, would be more beneficial. In addition, Peters sees the need for a psychiatrist or psychologist on a referral basis. Such a professional would not necessarily be located on the Juniata campus.

The College does in fact have a practicing psychiatrist on a retainer basis. His name is Dr. Frank Wawrose, and his office is located in J.C. Blair Memorial Hospital. If a student has a problem that Student Services feels they are unable to handle, the student will be sent to see Dr. Wawrose free-of-charge for the first visit. For any additional visits, the student must pay the normal 35 dollar an hour fee.

Associate Dean of Student Services Liz O'Connell felt that "not that many students need such care" as Dr. Wawrose offers. She saw "threats of suicide or irrational behavior" as reasons for students to be sent to Dr. Wawrose.

In general, Associate Dean O'Connell felt that the Student Services Staff does "adequately and properly handle the psychological problems students might have." She thought that the vast majority of students needed only "adjustment counselors." On the question concerning the possibility of a campus psychiatrist or psychologist, it was her opinion that students "chose to come here (Juniata College); if they have severe psychological problems maybe they shouldn't be here." She noted that the college didn't want to "get into the business" of financing student need for a psychiatrist because the college couldn't feasibly afford to provide such a service.

Former Dean of Students, and now present Dean of Academic Affairs, Dr. Terry Hartman mentioned that, "nationwide 10% of the students on college campuses have sufficient psychological problems that their ability to study is impaired." He said that across the nation people involved with student services and counseling at the college level see a conflict between discipline and counseling. Dr. Hartman also asked, to prove a point, "How often do academic problems impair students emotionally? Rarely," he answered. But on the other hand, very often emotional problems affect academics. Academically students can attempt to solve their problems by seeing their professors, but students are more hesitant to consult counselors about emotional problems, he commented. He felt that all young people are "trying to grow up both ways (emotionally and academically)." To achieve this, "a lot of young people try out different alternatives" which sometimes cause problems on college campuses. Referring to the 10% of students who need counseling services he said that historically on the Juniata Campus (while he was Dean of Student Services) hardly any of these students showed up at Student Services.

In talking about the counseling ability of the Student Services Office, he said that "in comparison to other institutions we spend the same as most." He did note that "20-hour days, 7 days a week are not uncommon for people working in Student Services." In commenting on the Student Services Office during his years, he said that the Student Services staff had to "deal by exceptions — worst problems first" because of the Bank and Bookstore Robbed

By Sherri Heldibridle

Serious crime hit Juniata's campus when the student bank and bookstore were robbed. The incidents resulted in a mass of commotion and police investigations, causing a great deal of concern for everyone involved.

The bank personnel discovered that they had been robbed when balancing the books for the day of November 10. Five-hundred dollars was missing from the safe, assumed taken when the clerk, Teresa Copenhaben, left the area for a short time. While Mrs. Copenhaben locked the cabinet door which contains the bank's safe, she did not lock the safe itself. The cabinet door was broken open, and the cash was removed.

The police were called in to investigate by Mr. Bill Berrier. It was then discovered by Irv Thomas, who is in charge of the bank, that sums of money had been taken from the bank in preceding months. In September $39.00 was stolen, $99.00 in October, and $74.00 in the early part of November, but Mrs. Copenhaben failed to report these to her superiors. She was recently fired for neglecting to report these incidents, and for not locking the safe's door before leaving the bank.

Post Office and bank personnel were questioned, resulting in the identification of a suspect. After considerable pressure to admit his/her guilt, a student confessed to taking the money while working in the Post Office. The $500.00 was returned on December 6. Whether the same person was responsible for the previous robberies is unknown. None of the money from the first three thefts has been returned to date.

"We have no idea why this happened," commented Mr. Thomas. "I've been in charge of the bank for three years, and had no problems before. It caused quite a lot of commotion and pressure on students working in the Post Office. In the future we'll need references from our student help. I have not had to do that in the past."

A week after the robbery, someone burglarized the student bookstore. Upon opening for business on November 11, the store's manager noticed scattered objects by the cash register. Then he noticed a display case was missing several pen sets and other high priced goods. Additional items missing were men's jewelry, gym shorts, and butane lighters — a total of $500.00 worth of merchandise. No cash was in the register to be taken.

Because he had taken an inventory of the store's merchandise the day before, he knew that someone had removed the goods after the store had closed the evening before. Since there were no signs of entry police believe that someone entered the store before closing time, hid in an aisle, and robbed the store after it closed. The back door served as the exit. The locks had just been changed on all of the doors, so no one could have entered with a key.

Though the investigation is still going on, there are no suspects, and no merchandise has been recovered. The store has tightened closing procedures, checking aisles and back rooms before locking up. It is the first burglary the store has had in several years.

Vandalism A Serious Problem

By Sherry Heldibridle

Though many students may not be aware of it, there is a large amount of theft and vandalism occurring at Juniata. Alarmed and concerned, Arnie Tilden reports the situation as "extensive and depressing." He has called on Student Affairs to raise the level of peer consciousness.

The dining hall situation has already been aired, but to no avail. This is evident from the stolen Christmas decorations. As for dinnerware, Food Service is considering giving each student one set, which would be theirs to use all year. This way extras would not be sitting out, available to be taken back to dorm rooms, and students would have to take their utensils with them to meals. It will be an inconvenience for students, but will be cheaper for Food Service than replacing missing utensils. Another idea is having people stationed at the dining hall exits to check students for food and utensils as they leave the area. Again the purpose is to cut down on theft.

Dormitory vandalism is also a major concern to Dr. Tilden. Numerous fires have been started in wastebaskets, ceiling tiles destroyed, curtains torn, and furniture stolen. Sherwood Lounge is an excellent example of the latter. After the school put $3000 worth of furniture into the lounge, all of it was removed within a few days. Two room-checks yielded only 2 pieces of the furniture, the rest still at large. If the lounge is to have furniture, it may be a more rigid type, able to be permanently fastened. Comfort would be sacrificed to decrease theft.

Broken vending machines and washing machines are another source of concern. Students must do without their use because money boxes are broken into and the cash removed. A proposed solution to this problem is using a token system with the washing machines, which would eliminate tempting cash boxes.

More recent acts include the broken piano and furniture in

Language Placements Questioned

In the first (fall) term of this year, an interesting phenomenon appeared in the Spanish III class. The students who placed directly into the class did better on the average than the students who had followed the usual course progression of Spanish II to Spanish III. This situation drew my attention for two reasons: first, because it was so pronounced, with most of the former Spanish II students getting no better than C's for Spanish III, and second, because it was predicted only about two weeks into the term, when I was told by more than one of the former Spanish II students that they felt that the placement students had already indicated abilities exceeding theirs. Even that early in the term, at least three former Spanish II students had indicated to me that they didn't feel able to compete with the placement students.

I know the feeling. I felt it when, as a sophomore aspiring to be a scientific journalist, I walked into my Microbiology course last week. As the only prerequisite was Biology of the Organism, I felt confident, until I saw that the class also included some senior pre-meds who I am still intimidated by. Just from this little surprise, my case of cold feet was so bad that I not only dropped the course, but I decided to change my entire POE. Since that first shock, I've come to my senses again and returned to my POE, but not to the course. Quite possibly the pre-meds wouldn't have had a clear advantage and I could have held my own in the course, but I don't want to find out right now.

The former Spanish II people faced a similar situation, but theirs had more drawbacks. Spanish III is a logical course to take after Spanish II — they weren't exactly jumping into a course for which they weren't sufficiently prepared. Also, the intimidating competition was in the form of "new kids." It would have been absurd for any of the Spanish II people to abandon their former class group because of the presence of placement students in Spanish III, but the psychological disadvantage of inferiority wouldn't be relieved by sharing it.

I discussed this situation with Mrs. Church, the instructor of the course. She agreed that the situation was strange, and added, "I do feel that this year (last term) has been a freak — I've sensed it as much as the students did." It is difficult to place all of the language students at their proper levels, especially if the student is highly qualified. All students who have had a foreign language in high school and are planning to continue their language education here are strongly advised to take Juniata's placement tests. Problems can occur in both overplacement and underplacement. Mrs. Church added, "Sometimes when we had students who were mis-placed, we could re-place them in the first week." There is not much flexibility in the language schedules, though, and this can hinder replacement to the correct level. However, the system usually works, which is why the Spanish III situation stands out. In referring to the unusual correlation between placement students and high grades, Mrs. Church said, "It's never been so pronounced, but it did not affect the grading." She stated that she does not grade on a curve, but according to the performances of each individual, and, while there were "one or two (students) who were probably underplaced," the abilities of the students covered a span expected of a Spanish III class. True — the abilities of the former Spanish II students formed the bottom of the class, and the abilities of the placement students formed the top.

The only positive view of the situation is that, as Mrs. Church put it, it "has been a freak" and not a common incident. Even considering the fact that the course was graded according to the ability that each student displayed, this could be so altered by the presence of others who were obviously of higher quality that the final result was not necessarily a reflection of how the student may have done under more comfortable circumstances. The former Spanish II students in Spanish III took a course in the normal progression of their language, and suddenly found themselves in a learning situation at least partly adapted to abilities beyond those that they had. For some of the placement students, one of which told me that she'd been told that it was not possible to place higher than Spanish III, the course was nothing more than "busy work." Situations like this may be rare, but for the ones that do occur, something should be done immediately to amend them, even if it's necessary to form a "fourth level" to accommodate students of such varying abilities. Hopefully, neither the students nor the faculty of any of the languages, or for that matter any of the courses at Juniata, will have to cope with such a lopsided situation in the future.

(One added note: Mrs. Church informed me that in the future, credit will not be given as a result of the placement tests unless the student takes the course into which he or she has placed. Success on the placement test does not necessarily reflect true ability, and, unless the student takes the course into which he or she has placed, their right to the credit cannot be proven, and so no credit will be given on the basis of placement tests alone. Recently, too many people have been inclined to "take the credit and run," without following through and taking the course into which they've placed.)

Counseling Inadequate?

This issue of the Juniatian carries an article on the counseling facilities present on the Juniata campus. As is evident from this article, the administration is divided in opinion as to whether or not these facilities are adequate. From the evidence collected during the course of writing this article, it seems that some type of revision of student counseling is necessary.

With due respect to Associate Dean O'Connell, the Student Services staff is just too small to deal with the disciplinary, academic, and personal needs of all Juniata students. Some separation of duties is necessary to achieve maximum efficiency.

Fear of Student Services is a very real enigma. Many students were asked, "Would you consider going to the Student Services Office if you had a personal problem?" For the most part the response was "no." Students see the office as performing a myriad of services, ranging from replacing I.D. cards to dealing out punishments. The individual student may have difficulty in seeing where he fits into this picture with his personal problem.

What is called for, then, is a separate counseling service free from Student Services. Such a service should be located in a place in which students will feel comfortable. How the service is to be staffed will of course be dictated by finances, but at least two full time counselors with easy access to Dr. Wawrose would seem to be the optimum measure. Or, as Terry Peters suggested, the increased training of Resident Directors could be the key to the problem. The directors would be graduate students trained to be paraprofessionals in the field of psychology. Again, they would be located in a "neutral" area in which students could feel comfortable.

Almost all students at Juniata will have some type of personal problem during their four years here. The school should provide an agreeable place for student counseling free from the pressures of the rest of the college. With an easily accessible form of counseling, perhaps students' problems can be checked before they become serious.

Letter to the Editor

To the Editor:

I wish to take issue with the logic of the editorial of November 10, 1977, entitled "Why Cheat."

The author of that editorial apparently assumes that because there is "variation in evaluation" it follows that grading is "entirely subjective." This is not true.

The Modes staff met approximately two hours per every course assignment in order to standardize grading. That standardization can not be absolute should be obvious. Each student is graded within the context of his/her discussion section. Therefore I might hold my student responsible for mastering points which we had discussed, while another professor may have steered his discussion group in a slightly different direction and, thus held his student responsible to a different degree. I have heard no students complain that they were unfairly graded re their own discussion section. I would argue that there is probably some variation in grading in every team taught course and some in the same course, taught by the same person from one year to another. The variation is not an instance of unfair grading, but rather the instructor's attempt to treat the student fairly given the context of that particular students' classroom situation.

Modes of Thought is not a perfect course; there is probably more variation than is desirable and we have, are and will work to minimize it. But to conclude from this that the students cheat because the grading is unfair because grading is entirely subjective because there is variation is both irresponsible and illogical.

Sincerely,
Janet R. Lewis

Vandalism

Flory-Kline's lounge, railing removed from the bridge to East Houses, grafitti spray-painted on the gymnasium, the 18th Street sign knocked over in front of Ellis Hall, and automobiles being driven over campus lawns. Dr. Tilden describes these actions as "pure and simple destructive behavior."

Student Services is greatly alarmed by the conditions of vandalism. In an environment where values are stressed in the classroom, their actual practice is violated day-to-day. Dr. Tilden feels the campus should be a comfortable, trusting place, not one of distrust and reprimand. Rather than resort to fastened furniture and inspecting people he would like to educate students about the situation, and re-orient poor values. A campus-wide response is preferred to reprimand, and that calls for total student cooperation. If problems cannot be dealt with this way, stricter measures will follow.

After undergoing my daily routine of hastily reconstructing my bod from what was left of it from the preceding evening, I emerged from the bathroom to the strains of "Joy to the World," which was emanating from heaven knows where, at the ungodly hour of 7:45 a.m. on a Monday morning. It was the first day of Hanukkah.

Later that same day, with only twenty minutes left in which I could grab some lunch before my next class, I was "assaulted" by a member of the Gideons; who tried (in vain) to give me a copy of The New Testament. Trying to refuse a FREE copy of The New Testament can be harder than saying no to the one you love. And when one supposedly suffers as many spiritual shortcomings as I, the extra insurance might help.

Not knowing quite how to handle the situation, but wanting desperately to escape, I replied in as sweet a voice as I could muster: "No thank you — I'm on a diet." The expression on his face would have made an interesting candid study for my photography course.

This escapade started in a vain attempt to write an article that was in keeping with that grand institution, Christmas; unfortunately, the only Christmas Spirits to be found were of the varieties available in kegs, six-packs, and fifths. This year, the spirit of Christmas Presents resides at Murphy's, Posers, JC Penney, and Miller's Hardware Stores; and that plethora of Santa Clauses you see may in reality be "Christmas Clones." Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer was last seen strapped to the hood of a car, owned by a hunter from Jersey City. (Damn Jersey Drivers!). Even Arnie Tilden has declined a more traditional role: that of Ebenezer Scrooge.

For those of you who are also sick to death of Currier and Ives snow scenes and hackneyed Hallmark quatrains, I would like to dedicate the following:

The cold braces my body
LIKE A GASP —
or maybe a warning.
I contemplate the newfallen snow smooth and undefiled in the first light of morning; blessed absolution
for man's many sins
Dare I violate this Holy place?

A snowball scatters against rough shetland wool
I grasp at its fleeting moisture in indignation — but I halt at the sound of giggles.
Behind the hedgerows
a group of children make angels
in my sacred snow.

Dried brown grass
pokes through the disheveled piles of fallen angels
As I glance behind me, my solitary footprints scream obscenities
in the snow.

MERRY CHRISTMAS!!!

Award to Briggs

By Bill Corbin

"Silent Sentinel," a film dealing with the physical and technical aspects of the construction of Raystown Dam has won an award for Associate Professor of Speech and Theatre, Clayton E. Briggs. The prize was given at the Fourth Annual Film Festival of the Speech Communication Association of Pennsylvania.

Briggs, a member of the Juniata faculty since 1962, has also recently completed a two-year documentary study of the college's Raystown Lake Environmental Studies Field Station.

Counseling Situation

lack of staff. Following up this idea, he pointed out that the faculty consists of about 80 members who deal with the students for about 15% of the time, while the three or four persons from Student Services deal with the rest.

Marsha Hartman, coming from the same angle, said that, "Since I've been here (Ellis basement) the more time I spend here the more work that comes to me." Mrs. Hartman, who is a part-time counselor, felt that she could easily work a full day because of the work load.

Some resident assistants seemed to feel that some type of counseling service should be provided to students apart from Student Services. They believed that not only is Student Services under-staffed, but also (for some reason) "students are turned off" by the thought of going to the Student Services Office for counseling help.

Students' feelings on the subject seemed to compare basically with the resident assistants'; the need for a campus psychologist or psychiatrist was mentioned also. Students felt that a definite barrier exists because both counseling and discipline are part of Student Service's concern.

Other colleges that closely parallel Juniata, including Dickinson College, Lebanon Valley College, Susquehanna University and Elizabethtown College were contacted. Dickinson and Elizabethtown didn't have any services that were exceptional in comparison to Juniata. Susquehanna, however, has a full-time psychologist heading a counseling center apart from Student Services. The services are offered free to students. Lebanon Valley offers a psychologist who comes in once a week, as well as a psychiatrist who comes in another day of the week. Both of these are free to students.

Senate Line

By Dave Powell

Well, here's the latest from your governing body on campus:

Student Government (S.G.) has chartered SBO, a Skeet club, and finally Circle K club (which has an outstanding debt to S.G. of $300).

Student Government has moved its mimeograph machine up to the information desk, making it somewhat more accessible to its users.

Some recent events concerning Center Board, coupled with a long-term desire for serious interaction, has materialized into a call by S.G. for another Leadership Conference away from campus in January.

Good news for Sherwood. After it was determined that in fact students were not hiding lounge furniture in their rooms, the O.K. was given for the acquisition of a color T.V. to arrive after Christmas.

S.G. will be nominating in mid-January an outstanding student for an award from the alumni.

Apparently, the administration continues to demonstrate its continued long-term desire to convert to the two-semester system. The idea, presented for input at a recent meeting, met mild to heavy opposition in the senate. It does seem that most students are perfectly comfortable with the present mode. The idea of 4-5 FINALS sends J.C. students into convulsions, and a change such as this would seem to bring about a tidal wave of reaction, crashing into the relative tranquility of our campus life. Benefits to be realized include substantial energy savings during the long vacation in January, and better long-term comprehension of courses.

DEAR PROFESSOR KAMINSKY, EXXXXXCUSE ME!!!!
SINCERELY,
TODD "LEGEND" KULP

Editorial: What's Happening to the Basketball Team?

By Bob Wallace

The basketball season is almost one quarter into the 1977 schedule and followers of the Juniata Indians find that the team's record stands at just 1-4. The Indians could easily be winless at this point if not for a long jump shot as time ran out in the Susquehanna game. The two home losses in Memorial gym last week (something that doesn't happen very often) have left the fans disappointed and wondering what has happened to the team that received such promising pre-season reviews.

As I left each game last week I found myself wondering how the opponent had come away with the victory. I was able to rationalize plenty of excuses for the loss to Westminster. The Titans were probably one of the top three teams that are on the schedule and played sound fundamental basketball to gain the win. Probably the key to the victory was the team defensive effort by Westminster. They also dominated the offensive and defensive boards. These reasons combined with consistent outside shooting explain the defeat. Maybe Westminster is better than Juniata this year, but nobody will ever convince me that Delaware Valley is a better team. Yet last Saturday as I left the gym, I found myself wondering how had Delaware Valley beaten Juniata. They have nowhere near the individual talent that Juniata has, but what they have they put to good use. Ken Mitchell, a 6-3 sophomore from Philadelphia, put on one of the finest individual performances that a player could give. When the evening was over, Mitchell had 38 points (over half of his team's total) and a lot of respect from the fans who watched the game. The four players on the floor with Mitchell seemed to be well drilled on how to go to their best. Combined with the defensive lapses and lack of defensive help, Mitchell had a field day which brings us back to the Juniata team.

The individual talent is definitely there yet the offensive patterns just don't seem to get the ball to these players in shooting position. It was almost seven minutes into the Westminster contest before Tay Waltenbaugh took his first shot of the game. He took just ten shots against Susquehanna (hitting on 70% of his shots) and foul trouble lowered his shot total against Delaware Valley. It also seems that most of the patterns and plays have Waltenbaugh out of rebounding position when shots are taken.

Roger Galo is another player with a lot of individual talent. When Galo plays with confidence he is a joy for the fans to watch. The combination of Galo and Waltenbaugh should give opposing coaches nightmares on how to defend against such a potent scoring attack from the inside or outside.

Looking further down the roster it is hard to find a weakness. Sophomore Andy Dwyer adds inside scoring and rebounding. Junior John Grzesiuk offers game to game consistency on the boards. The other starting spot is split between sophomore Bob McNelly and Senior Tom Bickel. Each are capable playmakers and both play solid defense. Coach Pat Frazier has a strong bench to back up his starters. Steve Rossi, Dave Bizousky, Bob Musser, Tim Kearney, and Mike Matese give Frazier a number of capable players to chose from in any situation.

The talent on this year's team is probably the best Juniata will see for awhile. They have the potential to be the best team in Juniata history (15-6 is the seasonal record) even with this disastrous start if, as a "team," they can play with confidence and intensity and believe that they can blow out almost every team they'll play. I don't think this feeling is present now. The players seem disoriented sometimes in running the offensive plays and defensive break-downs have occurred too often.

By the time this editorial is published the Indians will have played Union College at Memorial Gym. I hope their record is upped to 2-4 and all the adjustments and problems have been solved. Then with the team on the winning track I'll have to find another excuse to explain why the small gymnasium isn't filled at each home game to watch top class small college basketball.

Wrestlers Up Record

By Mindy Anderson

The Juniata grapplers have done some fine wrestling in the last week.

Tuesday night, December 6, found the Indians hosting Susquehanna in Memorial Gym. Susquehanna proved to be quite a team; JC just nosing them with a 24-17 victory. That slim 6 point lead was the work of freshman George Bojalad, wrestling in the unlimited class.

The lighter weights of JC carried the match with victories scored by Gay, Roadman, Funk and Joe Paskill. JC experienced some trouble in the upper berths, Susquehanna receiving slim victories.

The quadrangular match held Saturday afternoon, December 10 was a display of upstanding wrestling.

The Indians came through as Coach Berrier had predicted, with 2 out of 3 wins. Both Widener, and Lebanon Valley fell to Juniata. Fine wrestling was seen by Widener's Tom Jenkins, in the 134 pound weight class, pitted against a spirited JC wrestler, Jim Kiely. The Jenkins-Kiely match finally ended with Kiely falling late in the 3rd period. Kiely holding out where most predecessors had fallen into the grip of Jenkins earlier in the match.

All in all, Juniata now stands with a 4-1 record, which is the best they have had at this stage in time, since 1968. The only loss occurred Saturday afternoon to Division III powerhouse, Delaware Valley.

Indians Split

By Kathy Splane & Cheryl Ondechek

The Juniata Women's Basketball team record stands at 1-1 after the first week of play. Traveling to Lewisburg, the Indians dropped the season opener at Bucknell on Thursday, December 8. J.C. came back to victory however, at Gettysburg on Saturday, December 10.

Playing the tough Bisons, the Indians fought an uphill battle before finally succumbing 70-63. The Bucknell press, late in the second half, rattled J.C. causing numerous turnovers.

The Juniata offensive attack was led by freshman Julie George with 20 points, followed by senior Jan Edgar with 17 and sophomore Nancy Zinkham with 14. Bucknell was paced by Bobbi Castens who tallied 17 points for the winners.

Gettysburg also proved to be a good opponent and Juniata narrowly escaped with a 56-55 victory.

After leading throughout the game, the Bullets found themselves deadlocked with the Indians at 54 a piece when Zinkham put in two foul shots with 1:24 remaining in the game.

J.C.'s press was quite effective and, except for a foul shot, Gettysburg hadn't scored when Juniata called time out with 57 seconds showing on the clock. Down by one, 55-54, the Indians quickly regrouped. Thirty-six seconds later the Juniata women were winning on a Jan Edgar bucket. The Bullets called for time and J.C. decided to remove the press.

Gettysburg brought the ball down court and it became obvious that the players were tense, as each ream quickly had turned the ball over. With just twelve seconds left to decide the winner, the home team swiftly moved the ball around and put up the shot, but it was too late. The Indians had won 56-55.

J.C. scorers were led by Edgar with 20 points and George, Zinkham, and junior Alison Reeves with ten a piece. Zinkham led the team in rebounds with 10 followed by Edgar with 6. High scorer for Gettysburg was Lisa Yeo with 16.

Both teams shot 54% from the free throw line, but despite the loss, the Bullets led in field goal percentage 50%-38%.

The Indians next travel to Elizabethtown on Saturday.

Cagers Drop Two At Home

By Bob Wallace

The Juniata Indians dropped to a 1-4 record with two defeats in Memorial gym last week. Last Thursday the Indians lost to Westminister 74-64. The contest was close throughout with Westminister leading by a 66-64 score with two minutes left to play. But Tim Glass added a three point play to his game high 25 points and the Indians never could catch up. Roger Galo led the tribe with 20 points.

Last Saturday the Indians lost to Delaware Valley 75-65 in a closely fought contest. The tribe couldn't contain 6-3 sophomore Ken Mitchell who hit on 16 of 20 shots from the floor and 6 of 9 from the line for a game high 38 points. Mitchell also had a game high 13 rebounds. The score was even until the late minutes of the game when the Aggies put on a late surge to seal the Victory.

Senior Steve Rossi came off the bench to lead the Indians with 15 points. He was followed by Roger Galo with 13 points. Andy Dwyer grabbed 10 rebounds to pace the Indians in that department.

Juniata hits the road and travels to Elizabethtown for its next game.

Due to the amending of the Federal Wage Laws some new provisions will go into effect on January 1, 1978. One of the provisions which will affect students will be the raising of the minimum wage from $2.30 an hour to $2.65 an hour. Besides affecting students' employment wages off campus, the wage paid to student employees on campus will also be increased. The increase will be 30 cents from the present $1.96 to $2.26. Student employers are required to pay only 85% of the minimum wage

Ayars Appointed Senator

By Jamie Pirrello

During last Thursday night's Student Government meeting Kit Ayars was unanimously appointed Student Government Senator from second floor Lesher. The appointment was necessary because Judi Gross, the elected Senator from second floor Lesher, has left school for the rest of the year due to illness. Kit Ayars, who is a sophomore from Landisville, Pennsylvania, was selected over freshman Robyn Driscoll.

In other business, the Senators unanimously approved the club charters of the Barrister Club and the Ski Club. Relating to the Ski Club. The Senators approved a four hundred and eighty dollar grant to help defray the traveling costs that will be incurred by the Ski Club during their outings to the Blue Knob Ski Area. The first trip was held last night.

Mark Hyssong, Budget Director, reported that the solicitation policy on campus was being looked into by the College's Attorney; he added that due to the election of a new Mayor of Huntingdon this could add a new "twist" to the present situation. The Budget Director also reported that the proposal to charge five dollars for students and student organizations who wish to solicit on campus was still being reviewed by the Budget and Management Committee.

Senator Dave Powell responded by saying that he felt a one dollar registration fee would be all that was necessary. He said that students "should not be discouraged to sell at Juniata."

In old Business it was reported that the Alcohol survey has been prepared by the Student Services Office and will be available, after printing, for distribution. Also, President Todd Kulp reported that the Student Government News Letter, which he is preparing, will be completed after all Committee reports are submitted, so that the News Letter can be sent out to the College Community. The idea of the News Letter is to report what Student Government has done and plans to do within the year.

Gillespie Adds Jazz to Series

Dizzy Gillespie, widely considered the greatest living jazz trumpet player, will appear Tuesday evening, Jan. 17, in the fifth program of the 1977-78 Juniata College Artist Series.

The program, featuring the Dizzy Gillespie Quintet, begins at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall.

Of a 1973 London performance, a reviewer said: "Dizzy Gillespie is as exciting a player as ever. In a way, he has now succeeded Louis Armstrong as the senior figure of the mainstream of jazz."

Of a recent Philadelphia concert, critics said "he has certainly kept pace with the times. Delightfully so. There are no pretenses here. Just Dizzy and his group playing excellent music and generally providing a good time."

Born in 1918 in Cheraw, S.C., John Birks Gillespie got his musical start at home. His father, an amateur musician, provided "Diz" with a working knowledge of several instruments. While still in his teens, Gillespie was a soloist with big bands led by Earl Hines and Cab Calloway. He was leading his own band by his early twenties.

As an innovative composer and band leader, Gillespie was responsible for the transition from swing to the more progressive style of jazz. He also introduced African, Cuban and Oriental elements into his own music, a style best represented by his well-known composition "A Night in Tunisia."

Gillespie has had bands numbering from five to 20 players. His students have included John Lewis, Milt Jackson, Percy Heath and Kenny Clarke (the original Modern Jazz Quartet) Lalo Schifrin, Quincy Jones, Yusef Lateef and James Moody.

During a 1956 world tour — one of many for "Diz" — his band was subsidized by the U.S. State Department, making the first time the U.S. government had accorded official economic aid to jazz.

Gillespie is a member of the Jazz Hall of Fame and considered by most experts one of the five most important figures in jazz history. He also holds New York City's Handel Medallion, the city's highest cultural award.

Students Apprehended in Bookstore Robbery

By Jamie Pirrello

School Authorities, in cooperation with local Boro Police, have apprehended four Juniata students in connection with the Book Store robbery that took place November 18, 1977. According to the Huntingdon Daily News three of the four students, Thomas Trappuzzano of Pittsburgh, Mark Watts of Russellton and Terry Holt of Pittsburgh were charged with burglary and theft; the fourth student, Robert John of Uniontown, was charged with receiving stolen goods. School Authorities did not make the names of the four students public; the local Authorities released their names to the Daily News.

According to Jack Linnetty, Director of Housing, search warrants were issued over Christmas vacation to search the rooms of the suspects, where most of the Book Store merchandise was recovered. The students were apprehended when they returned to school from the Christmas break. Afterwards, during questioning, the students confessed to varying degrees of involvement in the robbery. Civil Authorities are going to press charges against the four, according to school officials.

Dr. Arnold Tilden, Dean of Student Services, informed the Juniatian that the four individuals are no longer students at Juniata due to the incident. It is possible though, Dr. Tilden noted, that some of the individuals could come back to Juniata if they made re-application; this would be possible due to the fact that these individuals were only slightly involved.

Would you be interested in writing for the Juniatian? We are always in search of more writers to help us report the events and opinions of the Juniata campus. It's a lot of fun, and it looks great on your resume!

Center Provides Practical Education

By Bill Corbin

A college level education isn't all that is being provided for at Juniata College. The Early Childhood Center, located on the bottom floor of Lesher, offers pre-school instruction for children from the ages of 3 to 6. The center, administered by college trained instructors, attempts to "teach the whole child." Activities at home and outside the school environment are also shaped by specifically devised programs.

In addition to providing social contact for the children, formation of basic learning skills is stressed. The center's setting allows for the development of cognitive abilities in a controlled manner. Such instruction would include teaching of numbers, colors, shapes, letters, and other varied subjects to help prepare the child for elementary school.

Contrary to current belief, the center doesn't just prepare professor's children, but is open to all area youngsters of all social-economic groups. A scholarship program has recently been established to aid disadvantaged families in meeting the costs for enrollment. This way the center offers its services to a broad cross-section of individuals.

Many Juniata students have had first hand exposure to the center. Those education majors, and those enrolled in Human Development or certain socially oriented courses work as aides as part of their subject requirements. In this capacity they can apply learned theories in personality and cognitive growth with the "real-world" problems of children. Tasks may range from designing learning centers or writing children's books to "being a big brother or sister." Video tape recording equipment is available to provide the student with experience in televised instruction techniques. Above all, the working background permits an elementary ed. major a glimpse into what a future area of employment may have to offer.

Recent accreditation authorizes the Early Childhood Center to support a kindergarten in addition to the nursery; . . . of value to the Juniata student who wishes to pursue a dual program in both elementary education and early childhood development. In a profession where jobs can often be difficult to find, this lateral flexibility may help in acquiring employment.

The uniqueness that such a program has to offer has led the admissions office to relate the information to prospective education majors and include the center as one of the possible stops for visitors and guests of the college.

An added benefit for children at the center is their early contact with "campus life." Field-trips to the theatre, the libraries, and class rooms supplement in-center learning experiences.

Personnel at the center include instructors Janet Cobelli, Jessiann Dortsch McCarthy, and aide, Virginia Roop.

Editorial:

J.C. to lose Dignity?

The recent wave of vandalism and theft that has swept the Juniata campus is not only sickening, but inconceivable.

A lounge is destroyed, the bank and bookstore robbed, stereos are stolen, a car is overturned, dorms are damaged, and the list goes on. Unfortunately, the indications are that students are responsible for these actions.

This mass destruction and damage is unprecedented in Juniata's history. The present student body has the dubious honor of setting a new level of irresponsibility and plain stupidity.

Writing this editorial is probably useless. It's simply a vent of personal concern and frustration in view of a deteriorating situation. But, how can someone destroy a piano for absolutely no reason? The mentality behind such an action is so low that it is beyond comprehension. In fact it is so low that nothing said here will bother it in the least. It is a sick mentality.

It is not the intent of this editorial to preach and declare the situation to be "wrong." Rather, it should be noted that it is the opinion of this editor that anyone caught destroying school or personal property should be immediately dismissed from the college. The college should also intensify investigations into instances of vandalism. Regardless of the loss of revenue from the loss of a student, vandals should be eliminated from the Juniata community.

Perhaps the worst aspect of this situation is the seeming lack of concern on the part of the students. The only ones who care are those who have had some article of personal property destroyed or stolen. Everyone else could give a damn. What's wrong with us?

Something has to be done. It is the primary responsibility of the college to protect property from damage. This means frequent security checks (how often do the security guards check doors and windows?), immediate repair of any broken doors and windows (are the rumors that locks and windows go unrepaired for up to four weeks true?), and heavy investigations into any vandalism with strong penalties for the author of any such act. Secondly, it is up to the students to protect their own property (Do you lock your door? Do you have your valuables marked for easy identification?), and to be cooperative with the college in uncovering vandals. If stronger action is not taken soon, this college will not only lose its reputation but its self-respect.

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor:

I read, with both interest and regret, the two cover stories concerning the robberies and vandalism which struck the campus (Dec. 15). I was not as disturbed at the acts themselves, as at the fact that I was living under a myth. You see, I thought the individuals who made up the Juniata community respected both themselves and their opportunities here, and had pride in those things. I was under the assumption that these were the things that set Juniata apart and above Rutgers, Penn State, and the others. To be sure, the perpetrators of such incidents are in a minority (if that is any consolation); however, I still feel that I grossly overestimated the amount of pride the Juniata community had in itself.

Mark Hyssong

Letter to the Editor:

I am writing in response to the article on counseling in the last edition of the Juniatian. There are a few issues raised in that article which are stated in such a way that my views have been unclearly expressed.

Although my office has been relocated in Ellis College Center, I still report to the Dean of Student Services and am, therefore, part of that staff. I am the only member titled "Counselor" on the staff, but everyone on the staff is qualified to do counseling and counseling students is part of their daily activities. This includes the Dean and Associate Dean of Student Services who have counseling as a major function. Discipline is not one of my duties, but other staff members do have that responsibility. That does not mean that they are not capable and willing to help students handle a wide range of problems, and this in fact consists of a large part of their responsibilities.

There are many reasons why students go to the Student Services Offices in Founders; only a few go for disciplinary reasons. It is true that many students use student services for routine concerns such as ID pictures and room drawing, but that is certainly only the beginning. In fact, Dean O'Connell and I overlap considerably in our counseling responsibilities which include personal adjustment, academic problems, career decision making, etc. In addition, Dr. Tilden has an extensive background in counseling and testing, especially career planning.

In short, I would like to set the record straight by saying that it is not my opinion that counseling should be separated from Student Services, since it is a student service. Also, Founders Hall is not a threatening place for students to go. I do think it would be "nice" to have a larger staff to handle students' non-academic needs, but I am by no means the only person available to students to help them with their problems at present. And I do not feel that disciplinary responsibilities preclude a helping relationship between a student services staff member and a student.

Sincerely,
Marsha F. Hartman

Letter to the Editor:

I appreciate the attention that Jamie Pirrello has given to the subject of counseling services. However, I would like to stress some of the aspects of counseling at Juniata that were unclear or not included in the Juniatian article of December 15, 1977.

The philosophy of the Student Services staff regarding psychological services is based on the premise that students are challenged by new academic, social, and personal experiences. Values, attitudes, and self perceptions are constantly being challenged and re-evaluated. In addition, the adjustment of some students is compounded by problems that arise independent of the college experience. The majority of students handle such adjustment by themselves or with the help of close friends or parents. Some students, however, prefer the help of college staff members who have had experience in dealing with similar problems.

Students have a variety of counseling options from which to choose. On the peer level, 27 trained Resident Assistants are assigned throughout the residence halls to provide information and a "willing ear" to students who are working through minor adjustment problems. When an RA can no longer be of assistance he or she will suggest that a student speak to a Student Services staff member. Some students come directly to the staff and others are referred by faculty, parents, or friends.

Some members of the staff are specialists in a specific service, eg.g., housing, financial aid, student activities, and career planning and placement. However, Jack Linetty, Ken Grugel, Wayne Justham, and Bill Martin are also very willing to discuss non-related issues with students and they are sought out by students who feel comfortable talking with them.

Marsha Hartman and I are identified most widely as the "counselors" and consequently we see quite a few students with concerns ranging from adjustment to more severe psychological disorders. Marsha is employed on a half-time basis (although she puts in many more than twenty hours a week) and I have administrative responsibilities in addition to counseling. Students with serious and often temporary psychological problems are encouraged from time to time and are referred by staff members to Dr. Frederick Wawrose, the College's consulting psychiatrist. With his advice these students either continue counseling with the staff member who remains under Dr. Wawrose's supervision, continue to see him (at the student's expense), or the students take medical leaves of absence (most often voluntarily) in order to get professional help elsewhere. When students have severe psychological problems they often have difficulty with their academic work. It is to the advantage of those students to leave school, work out their problems, and return when they can concentrate more fully on academics. The number of students in this category is very small and does not warrant the hiring of a full time psychiatrist.

Dr. Arnie Tilden, as Dean of Student Services, must be familiar with all aspects of student services. His academic background is in educational psychology and his experience at Albright in counseling makes him a well qualified counselor and an excellent resource for staff development in the field of counseling. It is Dr. Tilden who most obviously must deal with the discipline vs. counseling issue. It is this issue on which Jamie builds his argument for a separation of counseling and administration. It is my opinion that in an institution which dedicates itself to education it is impossible and undesirable to completely separate the two. The majority of students who are called into the office for disciplinary reasons (and this is relatively few) have made mistakes from which they can learn — about themselves and about community living. A counseling approach to discipline (which does not suggest that no sanctions be imposed) helps the student to learn from the experience. A good disciplinary counseling experience can result in the building of rapport between students and staff members through better understanding on both sides.

The Juniatian article and editorial indicate that many students "fear" the Student Services office and would not consider going to it if they had personal problems. If this is true, it certainly is regrettable. It is regrettable that we are seen by many students as an "office" rather than as individuals, as adversaries rather than advocates, as punitive rather than helping. I suspect that such attitudes are based upon a few bad experiences (yes, we do make mistakes!) and perpetuated by a lack of contact with staff members. Perhaps a more active attempt on the parts of both students and staff to get to know each other would help to establish mutual trust and respect. Dr. Tilden and the rest of the staff initiated a weekly "coffee break" in the fall term in order to meet with students in a convenient and informal setting. The staff will resume that program this month and will continue to search for a time and location that is convenient for students. This is one step in the right direction.

I am pleased that students are interested in the delivery of counseling services and I welcome further conversation. I do feel, however, that in light of the present fiscal priorities the present system is adequate. We are not turning students away. In most cases students are seen the same day they seek counseling and in many cases they are seen immediately. However, I am not suggesting that the counseling services do not need improvement. I agree that a full-time counseling center staff would be an asset and would allow us to expand our program. The Student Services staff is looking into our present situation with improvement in mind and welcomes comments and suggestions from students.

Elizabeth C. O'Connell
Associate Dean of Student Services

Editor's Note: A letter on the counseling situation from Dr. Arnold Tilden, Dean of Student Services, will be published next week.

Being a Juniata student for four years, I often think of the changes that have taken place — both for me and for the campus. As for my personal "maturing," is of no matter here. But as for Juniata's "maturing," is a matter for all involved with this institution — trustees, administrative personnel, faculty members and most important, the students.

The reasons for this letter stems from a seemingly growing wave of "what-the-hell" attitudes directed towards the campus's activities, interests and even property. The first two of this list can be exemplified by the disorganization and apathy displayed for Homecoming procedures, or the degrading numbers of absenteeism at a typical center board meeting. But it is to the recent onslaught and wanton destruction of Juniata's property to which I now want to turn.

Some may attribute this increasing wave of vandalism to a freshman class accused of being a derelictive as a whole. Now, this class, dubbed the "Xeroxive Zeroes" by some may have their faults (like any group of people), but should not be used as scapegoats for the new wave of vandalism.

I believe (along with a fairly common concensus of other Juniata students) that the main criminal here is the "nothing-to-do-on-weekend-nights-"blahs." In place of the once flourishing big social gatherings in South, Sherwood, East and other "party-havens," they now are small; restless often sexually-segregated parties. A big social gathering is now greatly restricted and proves to have so many hassles stapled to it that the big donation, open-house gatherings are a dying breed.

The results of the big social gatherings were, admittingly, not always good. But the results of the small party are worse. Small hordes of temporarily nomadic drunkards stalk the campus seeking a fitting end to their night's activities. If their "creative" appetites are not checked by fellow, perhaps more responsible peers, the results can be literally damaging. Or if there appetites can not be channeled to a more desirable intimate communication with the opposite sex, again these penned-up emotions and tensions may be directed to the wrong places or things. The big social gathering of years past provided for civilized means to accomplish these in proper manner, qualities the small party lacks. This becomes evident in the fact that during the big Christmas social gatherings at Juniata, vandalism was at a yearly low, and the new wave of vandalism that has hit Juniata this year — the correlation seems irreputable.

Of course, this can't be used as an explain-it-all-device. There has always been some degree of lying, cheating, stealing and destroying — but that, unfortunately, comes with the darker side of human nature. But perhaps if the policy of the non-existent big social gathering continues, Juniata College may well turn into an overgrown and once destructively flourishing Emmert Howe, an unwelcome reminder from the past of the "nothing-to-do-blahs."

Kevin Long
A concerned Juniata student

It has been brought to my attention that there have been several misunderstandings about various parts of the December 8, 1977 "Along Muddy Run" (pajama party).

First of all, many perceived it to be an attack on Allison Reeves, R.A. of N.J. House. In fact, it was an attack on an asinine idea, i.e. R.A. Cultural Projects; which are far from cultural and in several instances have the potential for doing as much harm as good.

Second, some people have wondered where I "get off call-

I was fielding the usual questions from inquisitive relatives during intermittent slurps of my aunts' homemade chicken noodle soup.

"How are you doing in school?"

"Fine."

"Having lots of fun there?"

"Yeah." (Okay, so I did stretch the truth.)

I was bracing myself for the question of major importance: "Do you have any boyfriends?"

"Uh-huh." (I could feel the ice getting thinner with each slurp of soup.)

But one of my cousins, who's almost as impatient as I am when it comes to verbal parrying, asked THE QUESTION that was on the mind of everyone present at the time: "Think we'll be having a wedding in the family three Octobers in a row?"

It is quite difficult to gag calmly on a mouthful of egg noodles. My faith in chicken noodle soup as a panacea was shattered.

* * * * * *

With typical freshman naivete, I had come to Juniata with the idea that college students were supposed to be academically oriented. A couple of JC weekends shattered most of those illusions. Our college population was relatively normal — with the few ubiquitous exceptions.

It wasn't until some friends of mine from Penn State made a remark about the "ratio" being very good here, that I had even bothered to regard the Juniata College campus as a twentieth-century substitute for a marriage broker. I couldn't help but wonder if this was a less — than — subtle hint on the part of my parents to make me realize that members of the opposite sex did indeed exist. After recovering from this initial paranoia, I vowed that I would not get married until I could sit on my hair without bending my head back — which at its present rate of growth should be about another ten years.

If most guys were aware of the painstaking planning that a lot of girls executed in an effort to secure their "piece of the rock," most of them would probably think more than twice about becoming engaged — not to mention actually going so far as to commit themselves to marriage.

Exact facts and figures are not available on the subject; but the springboard for quite a few of these serious couplings could be as innocuous as magazine articles that tell us "How to Catch and Keep Your Man" or gushy paperback romance novels.

The next illogical step in this inane progression is poring over periodicals such as "Bride" magazine and formulating one's "dream wedding." As fate would dictate, I was fortunate enough to be able to observe one of these "planning sessions" at about 11:00 p.m. after we had rejected one of my programs eight times. The added frustration of knowing approximately eighty per cent of the girls on my hall knew exactly how they wanted their wedding dresses to be made, who their bridesmaids, maids of honor and flower girls would be, and what they would all be wearing, what types of flowers all of them would carry and how many people would be invited to the service and the reception — right down to who would sit where at each — all in lavish detail, of course; while I was still wrestling with the intricacies of a FORTRAN error chart, was psychologically devastating. The only thing missing was the groom — but at least they knew what he would be wearing!

Of course all prospective brides will be expected to set up housekeeping. With this in mind, we are beset by a plethora of masters of the high-pressure sales pitch, who peddle everything from silver and china patterns to towels and bed linens.

Siezing upon what appeared to be an excellent opportunity to observe a marketing process in action, I — along with fourteen other girls and about half a dozen guys — listened to a two-hour spiel for hand-monogrammed towels and sheets, watched a guy tramp on some matching plush bathmats, and passed around dainty napkins and satin pillowcases — all monogrammed. It's utterly amazing what people will endure for a free beer mug.

But for many JC females, the "fun and games" period is coming to a close. Those of us who don't have the security of a ring on the third finger of our left hand had better resign ourselves to a life of despair as a social anathema. After all, if we can't make it here where "the ratio" is good, how will we ever fare in the real world?

Parkers Pay Fee

By Linda Szczerba

All students possessing motor vehicles on campus are aware of the five dollar registration fee for using campus parking facilities. In an interview with Mr. Bill Berrier, the reasons necessitating this fee were disclosed.

There are basically three purposes for the registration of motor vehicles. Requiring all motor vehicles to be registered provides a record of all vehicles on campus; it maintains a control over vehicles on the campus; and the money collected from the registration fee is used for the purchase of the display stickers, in addition to the improvement of parking and traffic facilities on campus.

The college receives $750 to $1000 from the yearly registration fees; however, much of this money is used for purchasing display stickers, traffic tickets, traffic signs, and installing concrete curbs. Major projects, such as paving the various parking lots on campus, require large sums of money. In 1972 when the Cloister lot was paved, it cost $12,000. The South dorm lot has been prepared for being paved, and this ballast or preparatory layer amounted to $3,000. Juniata College has received a bid of $14,000 to complete the paving of the South dorm lot.

There is always a reason why an area around the campus has not been improved upon. Future plans for paving the South dorm lot have been delayed because of the possible construction of a field house, swimming pool, or football station house at the site. The lot adjacent to the gymnasium has not been paved because it also was seen as a possible location for a swimming pool.

The reasoning for charging the five dollar registration fee of students with cars is so the students without cars do not have to pay for facilities that they do not use.

New Soft Ice Cream machine which was added by Food Service over Christmas break.

The Soft Touch

By Cheryl Ondechek

Food Service is constantly trying to improve and to give the students the best possible service. Their latest innovation is the soft ice cream machine that mysteriously appeared while everyone was home for the holidays.

According to Jeff DeWalt it was just "an extra added part of Food Service" as he felt that they hadn't added too many new facets yet this year. To allay any fears that may be creeping into the minds of students, Jeff said that the machine would have no effect on regular ice cream and would stay as long as it was accepted by the student body.

In addition, Food Service will occasionally have cones, chocolate ice cream, and frozen yogurt for the machine. The possibility also exists that on a non designated ice cream day, they will provide chocolate syrup and one or two other toppings for the soft ice cream.

There had been several complaints in the beginning that the ice cream had a bland taste. Jeff attributes this to obtaining the wrong mix at the outset. This has since been corrected and the taste has greatly improved.

Other upcoming features planned by Food Service are:

Pew Trust for Humanities Center

Juniata College has received a $25,000 grant from The Pew Memorial Trust, which is administered by the Glenmede Trust Company of Philadelphia.

The gift, will support the construction of a $400,000 humanities center at the college.

A two-story structure with Georgian-style architecture, the humanities center will include several seminar rooms, a dozen faculty offices and a lounge area. A courtyard will be situated at the rear of the building.

The center, scheduled for construction next spring, is designed as the focal point of Juniata's humanities cluster, which will be situated on 17th Street between Mifflin and Moore Streets. The college has already raised the necessary $200,000 for the renovation, refurbishing and landscaping of the Shoemaker Art Gallery and four large McKinley-vintage houses comprising the humanities cluster.

The Pew Memorial Trust is the oldest and largest of six trusts established over the past 25 years by J. Howard Pew, Mary Ethel Pew, J.N. Pew, Jr., and Mable Pew Myrin. Originally established as the Pew Memorial Foundation in 1948, it was created in memory of Joseph N. Pew, founder of Sun Oil Company, and his wife, Mary Anderson Pew, by their four surviving children.

The trust, a grant-making private foundation, is dedicated to religious, charitable, scientific, literary and educational purposes and concerned with the promotion of the public welfare.

According to Foster G. Ulrich, Jr., Juniata vice president for development, the college already has raised more than one-half of the funds necessary for the construction of the humanities center.

Radio City:

Boz Scaggs' new album is a slick, commercial, and impressive followup to his first big success, Silk Degrees, which hit Juniata Campus Fall Term of last year and was immediately played into utter exhaustion. Doubtless, the same fate will befall this album, though I wish it wouldn't. Let's hear it for self restraint, this is an album that could very quickly be overplayed and all played out.

On this album Boz's voice is much stronger and cleaner, and he shows a great deal more confidence than on previous albums. His guitar work, which was always respectable, has improved right along with his voice, and on Whatcha gonna tell your man he cuts loose with the best solo I've ever heard him play. The album, however, is not always that punchy, and like Silk Degrees, rides a very thin line between disco and good commercial rock, only this time he's cut it even closer. At points it seems like it could go either way; during some of his sweet, sweet tunes, like Tomorrow never came, he comes very close to the kind of sloppy sentimentality that has claimed such determined old rockers as Rod Stewart and Paul McCartney. Perhaps that wasn't fair. There are few musicians on the market who could match Boz's strikingly original melodies (though when he gets a good formula, he milks it to the max — you'll hear the Georgia formula several times on this album), and even fewer who could match his voice, which is sometimes all that keeps him out of the muck (note the difference between the Rita Coolidge and Boz Scaggs versions of Harbor Lights).

Nevertheless, I have occasional, vivid flashes of John Travolta "bumpin' to Boz" and that worries me. Right now, like Fleetwood Mac, he's pleasing everybody, and that kind of thing is tough to pull off for long. The disco Boys like him, and for the wierdos that like musicianship in their music, there are Boz's own talents, as well as those of such superb session men as Jeff Porcaro, Victor Feldman (both of whom played on Aja — Steely Dan), and jazz trumpeter Chuck Finley.

The overall sound of the record is very rich. Impeccably recorded, there is a new prominence to the background vocal and instrumental arrangements, and the playing is as tight as ever. It would be hard to pick 'best songs,' but if pressed, I would be inclined to pick the less commercial ones and there are a few. The last song on side one, We're waiting, a jazzy heavy very reminiscent of the Steely Dan song Aja though with a purely Scaggs touch, is perhaps the best song on the album, but I'm also partial to Gimme the goods, a raunchier rock tune. Anyway, I doubt that I'll ever be pressed to pick one, so let's just say the album is good. Dangerous in spots, but good. And if you liked Silk Degrees, (and who didn't?) you'll probably like this too. As a matter of fact, you'll probably like it so much that you'll play it over and over and over and by March you'll be so sick of it you'll be ready to give it away. Give it to me.

Apply Now!

By Sherry Heldibridle

Re-application materials for financial aid for next year have been distributed to students. There are a few changes in the procedure which students should note. These changes will make applying for aid a faster and easier process.

The Parent Confidential Statement has been replaced with the Financial Aid Form. Both dependent and independent students will use this same form, rather than separate forms as before. After completion, the form will be processed in Princeton. This must be done before financial aid can be calculated. This form will also serve as the application for federal aid (BEOG). Rather than fill out another form, students only need to indicate that they are also applying for federal aid on the F.A.F.

The state aid forms (PHEAA) will be sent to students at their homes. Students should also indicate if they will be applying for federal aid on the state's form. This condenses two applications into one, which saves sending to Iowa, where BEOG's were previously handled.

Students should indicate on the college's aid form if they are applying for federal aid with the state's form. The deadline for Juniata's form is March 15.

New applicants for financial aid are encouraged to stop and pick up aid forms this month. Though Mr. Grugel cannot promise that aid will be given, he will do his best to accommodate students' financial needs.

If all re-application forms are filed now, aid packages will be done by the end of school. Mr. Grugel would be very happy to have all packages finished in May, and encourages students to file forms as soon as possible.

New Aid Regulations

The kinds of consumer information education institutions must provide to students are spelled out in final regulations published by HEW's Office of Education.

The rules apply to colleges and postsecondary vocational schools that participate in and are eligible for an allowance to administer student financial aid programs authorized by Title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965, as amended.

Any administrative allowance for the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant, Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant, National Direct Student Loan, College Work-Study, and Guaranteed Student Loan programs must be used first for student consumer information services.

ing the residents of N.J. House a bunch of 'neurotic bitches' ". All I can say, to this is that I am a resident of N.J. House. I am aware of most of the things that go on there (although I confess I don't always understand them) and I did not exclude myself from the definition given. We all have our foibles.

Third, the list of ideas was not contrived from the dregs of my imagination, but was taken from a list that was given to all R.a.'s; and which Dr. Tilden was charitable enough to allow me to use after I told him that I hoped to use it as a theme for "Along Muddy Run."

Finally, I am appalled at the number of supposed intellectuals on this campus who have problems understanding simple satire.

John Trevithick (right) with U.N. program roommate Mike Huerta, a senior at University of California.

Trevithick at UN

MADISON, N.J. — John Trevithick, a Juniata junior majoring in political science, recently concluded a semester of study with a Drew University program at the United Nations in New York.

He participated in a unique program which each semester enrolls some 25-30 collegians from across the nation and several foreign countries. The students commute twice weekly from Drew's suburban New Jersey campus into New York, where they attend classes in facilities adjacent to the UN, hear spokesmen for the various missions and agencies, attend UN meetings, and do research into the world body.

Commenting on the experience, Trevithick, whose father is an official with the U.S. Department of State, noted that "the UN is a necessity for international relations." "However, I'm disappointed in it," he added. "It does not play as important a role as it should."

"As certain pressures in the world increase, perhaps the UN will assume a broader role," conjectured Trevithick, whose special area of interest has been the world population crisis. While with the UN program, he developed a research paper on the topic with the aid of UN officials, concluding that the answer lies in family planning and an improved standard of living in the less developed nations.

In his spare time, the 20-year-old political scientist from Bethesda, Md., enjoyed walking around New York, particularly the Central Park area, and talking with the other students in the program. "The others were all so different, coming from so many different places and cultures," he remarked, adding that his conversations with them were learning experiences in themselves. His roommate at Drew was a Californian of Mexican descent regularly enrolled at the University of California, Riverside.

What is Student Affairs Council?

By Neeta Moonka

Where might a student go if he has a question regarding the alcohol policy or who would a student refer to if she has questions about students rights regarding search and seizure? One alternative could be SAC, Student Affairs Council. The role of SAC on campus, according to Todd Kulp, president of Student Government, is that it provides a very important voice in shaping college policy in practically every area, including entertainment, the alcohol policy, inspection policy, handling damages, and many other aspects affecting the quality of life on campus.

The committee meets about twice a month, alternating Tuesdays, and the meetings are open. Kulp commented that students are not generally aware of SAC's existence, adding that student government should be getting out a newsletter soon explaining SAC's function as well as other areas of student government. If a student has a question about school policies he has several alternatives open to him. He can go to student government, to Todd Kulp or to two other students on SAC, Bill Blose and Jamie Godshall, or he can go to SAC.

Dr. Tilden, as well as three faculty members, Bob Reilly, Greg Giebel, and John Bowser, and Wayne Justham also serve on the committee. Tilden defined his purpose on the board not only as one of Chairman, but also as a resource person who provides the committee with information regarding policies and also gives suggestions.

Kulp feels that his position on the board is to represent the students. Although he gets no formal input, he gets input informally through talking to students. Kulp believes that the faculty on the committee lends experience, a different point of view, and adds legitimacy to SAC. He feels their presence is invaluable.

Kulp also talked about the role of Centerboard on SAC. The representative from Centerboard is the chairman. SAC can approve or disapprove of college activities, thereby in effect giving it authority over Centerboard.

SAC has discussed numerous policies this year. They explicitly stated the student's rights in a case of search and seizure. They are also trying to investigate the possibility of hall parties in regards to the alcohol policy. Todd Kulp thinks that the policy is not representative of what students want and it doesn't give students enough responsibility. Objections to this idea involve minority rights and damage. Vandalism and damage to school property is another issue which SAC is discussing. One point is to inform students what is going on. Kulp feels that part of the problem may lie in the idea that students don't feel as if they belong and he suggests that one solution is to work on the problem from this angle. Other issues are housing lifestyles based on degrees of quietness, semester vs. trimester, and looking into fire codes. SAC also talked about the problem of firearms kept in rooms. There have been some problems and the committee is looking into ways to keep firearms stored safely out of rooms.

SAC is a committee designed to develop policy for students and for this reason students should realize its importance and contribute to its purpose.

Trimesters or Semesters?

By Jamie Pirrello

Once again the controversy over the benefits of tri-mesters over semesters and vice-versa is brewing at Juniata as is evidenced by the recent informal discussion during one of Student Government's bi-weekly meetings. The discussion centered around the possibility of Juniata College changing back to semesters on a 4-1-4 basis or a five course semester. Among the ideas in consideration for decision is the possible energy savings as well as other benefits semesters offer over tri-mesters.

In the early 1970's Juniata switched from semesters to tri-mesters because of the feeling that the new curriculum, instituted at the same time, had a close correlation with the tri-mesters. Recently, though, there has been discussion that possibly semesters could be more beneficial to students as well as professors.

According to Dr. Terry Hartman, Dean of Academic Affairs, he feels that for some courses students can't get as far in the intensified ten week course as could be possible in a fifteen week semester course. He feels that there is a possibility in some courses that the average class can't move as far. For subjects that are repetitive, Dr. Hartman feels the trimester term is quite useful, but for courses requiring a lot of reading or thought the semester may be better.

Dr. Hartman feels that the possible ability of semesters to help create a "change of pace" for students, which could take off some of the pressure of the intensive course structure now, could be an asset. It is possible, Dr. Hartman mentioned, that this intensity could have a direct correlation with the "partying" on campus. He elaborated by saying that it seems students work hard on Monday and Tuesday and due to the fact that for some classes there are no classes on Wednesdays. Tuesday night is a party night. Then students work hard on Thursday and Fridays and the weekend brings about more parties. It seems to be Dr. Hartman's view that this may be an escape from

Rhodes Gets Grant

William R. Rhodes, Jr., assistant professor of biology at Juniata College, has received a $3,000 grant from the Grass Foundation of Quincy, Mass.

According to Dr. Jerome K. Merlis, a Grass Foundation trustee, the grant will be used to buy supplemental laboratory equipment to improve the present neurophysiology laboratory. It will also be used to develop a neurophysiology course, which will be added to the biology curriculum during the 1978-79 spring term.

Juniata has received some $17,000 in previous grants from the Grass Foundation to support science courses by two professors, Dr. Robert P. Zimmerer, Charles A. Dana Supported Professor of Biology, and Dr. Henry G. Masters, assistant professor of psychology.

The Grass Foundation encourages research in neurophysiology and allied fields of science and medicine. Its grants also finance higher education, lectureships and fellowships for summer study in marine biology.

Revisions Announced

By Bill Corbin

Revisions and some new provisions to the 1909 U.S. Copyright Law went into effect January 1, 1978. Conditions of the current act will have far reaching consequences for learning institutions and libraries. The new law, which is an untested compromise of two decades of work, helps clear up ambiguities from the original 1909 act. However, as in most pieces of legislation, areas of uncertainty still exist — a necessary condition that allows for flexibility.

A major change in the new law provides that copyright extends from the act of creation to 50 years after the death of the creator. It also allows the creator copyright protection from the moment of creation, thus giving the author a clear advantage in obtaining compensatory returns. In regards to expressed works, the copyright owner has exclusive rights to 1) reproduce copies, 2) prepare derivative works, 3) distribute reproduced copies, and 4) perform or exhibit the material publicly. The primary purpose in mind was to prevent unauthorized wholesale duplication of printed matter (or performances) without first obtaining permission.

The new law also furnishes a legal definition for the concept of "fair use" as applied to copyright matters. Previously, this was a matter of judicial decisions. Now the doctrine of fair use has four specific limitations on exclusive rights.

In determining whether fair use was made of a work in a particular case these factors are considered: 1) the purpose and character of the use; whether for commercial or nonprofit intent. 2) the nature of the copyrighted work. 3) the amount copied in relation to the subject matter as a whole. 4) the effect of such use on the market value of the copyrighted material.

Of concern to students and educators are the restraints set on using copied material for classroom and research work. Instructors are now limited in making multiple copies of copyrighted material, not to exceed one copy per person. These copies must also meet a test for brevity (less than 250 words for a poem, less than 2,500 words for an article, story, essay, etc.) spontaneity (no time to ask for permission), cumulative effect (not more than one copy per author, no more than nine instances a term), and inclusion of a notice that the material is copyrighted. Consumables, such as standardized tests and workbooks may not be copied.

Opposition to the new law's restrictions have risen from various educational groups who feel that the copying hassles may contain many instructors to "safe, banal" teaching without the educational benefits that photocopied articles may provide.

Presently notices can be found at photocopying machines that exempt the library and its employees from liability arising from the unsupervised use of such machines. Personal use of copying devices is generally ascribed to a matter of common sense.

A future article will deal with the impact of the new legislation on libraries.

Nieto at Conference

HUNTINGDON, PA. — Dr. Jose C. Nieto, associate professor of religion at Juniata College, was a guest speaker at the Modern Language Association (MLA) round table discussion of "Literature and the Spanish Inquisition" Dec. 29 in Chicago.

The discussion, recognizing the quincentennial of the Inquisition, is part of a four-day MLA conference (Dec. 27-30).

Dr. Nieto, a widely recognized scholar of Spanish humanism, mysticism and the Reformation, will discuss Spanish heretics of the sixteenth century. He will be joined on the round table by authorities from the University of Michigan, Canada's Center of Renaissance Studies, Salem College and the State University of New York at Geneseo.

A member of the Juniata faculty since 1967, Dr. Nieto chairs the religion department. He holds the master of theology and the Ph.D. degree from Princeton Theological Seminary.

A native of Spain, he has published a book, "Juan de Valdes and the Origin of the Spanish and Italian Reformation," and numerous papers.

Nahrgang Scholarship Fund Established

HUNTINGDON, PA. — Juniata College has received an initial gift of $2,500 to establish the Ross J. Nahrgang Memorial Scholarship Fund.

The gift was made by Mr. and Mrs. Armond R. Nahrgang of Lewisburg in memory of their son Ross, a 1958 Juniata graduate.

A native of Plainfield, N.J., Nahrgang was placement director for the Williamsport Area Community College prior to his death in 1973. He had recently been honored by the Air Force recruiting office for Lycoming and Clinton Counties for "consistent and devoted service."

Juniata President Dr. Frederick Binder, noted "Scholarship assistance represents one of Juniata's most urgent needs and we are, therefore, especially thankful for the Nahrgang's help by establishing this scholarship fund as a memorial to their son."

Life In Spain

Each year for five weeks of the summer, a program is offered to students in the U.S. and Canada to travel and study in Spain. Last summer, 93 students from 25 states, Canada and Puerto Rico departed from Kennedy Airport in New York and flew to Madrid. The group was then bussed to the campus of the Ciudad Universitaria quarters consisted of one room per student. Each class met five days a week.

All persons interested should write to Dr. Doreste, Augustana College, Rock Island, Ill. 61201 as soon as possible. Space is very limited.

More Aid to Private Colleges

PHILADELPHIA, Pa. December 2 — A report released by the Carnegie Council on Policy Studies in Higher Education indicates that many of America s private colleges and universities will continue to be in a weak financial position through the 1980s, and increased support from state legislatures as well as the federal government will be essential. Schools in Pennsylvania appear to be among the more vulnerable institutions.

The report, entitled, The States and Private Higher Education: Problems and Policies in a New Era, was released at a press conference in Philadelphia by Dr. Clark Kerr, chairman of the Carnegie Council. The Council, an activity of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, examines how each state supports private schools, the problems private institutions will face in the future, and what steps must be taken by state legislatures now to ensure the preservation of the private sector while sllowing it to remain independent.

The council regards private colleges and universities as an important national asset because of their contributions to educational diversity and their distinguished traditions. They also save taxpayers almost five billion dollars a year — the estimated cost to the states of absorbing their enrollment in public institutions.

The current financial situation for private institutions appears to be roughly stabilized after the difficult period of the late 1960s and early 1970s, when depression, inflation, and the expansion of low-cost public institutions dealt a serious blow to many private schools. "Although some institutions have closed and a significant number of others are noticeably hard-pressed, there is no acute general crisis calling for drastic immediate increases in public suport to perpetuate higher education," the report states.

But the problems at individual institutions vary enormously, the Council reports, and are likely to worsen in the next decade when the college-age population drops significantly About one-fourth of these schools are in distress and many others face an insecure and uncertain future. Many schools have low reserve funds; some are heavily in debt; and most have already taken the easiest step: cutting costs. Thus, coping with the financial constraints in the future will be much more difficult for both public and private institutions.

Despite the $83 million which the state of Pennsylvania spent on private higher education in 1975-1976, many institutions in the state fall in the more vulnerable category. The Carnegie Council lists as more vulnerable those institutions which have concentrated heavily on teachers' education; very small liberal arts colleges with restricted programs, often located in rural and depopulating areas; and some of the urban comprehensive colleges and universities that have little but higher tuition to distinguish them from their public counterparts.

Private institutions already receive a fair amount of public financial support and forty states now have programs for direct or indirect support for this sector. Now, as financial problems for these colleges increase, the Council states, public support must also increase to some extent. "The question," the Council explains, "is not whether more assistance will be needed and given — most states and the federal government are already committed to some support for the private sector — but how it will be given and in what amount. It is easy to 'save' the private sector one way or another. It is not so easy to do so while preserving for it the independence that has meant so much to it, to public higher education, and to American society."

Private schools must be fully involved in all state planning and coordinating efforts, the Council insists, and state systems must be planned as a whole. "We believe," the Council states, "that higher education has entered a new stage of development in which states should, and will, increasingly look to their total resources."

Trimester

the intensive pressure of school work upon them.

Dr. Hartman is against changing solely for the sake of saving energy, but realizes this could be a possible advantage. He also feels that if the majority of students oppose the change, then "it isn't worth it." He sees no dramatic change even though there is not only a possibility of more courses being offered, but also of more class conflicts.

Another advantage of the semester as noted by the Student Services Office would be less problems with the Federal Government on financial aid. As it stands now, what Juniata College considers a full-time student is in conflict with the Federal Government's requirements, which means a possible loss of aid to some students.

In the minds of Student Government President Todd Kulp, he doubts that the saving would be that much. He sees one of the main advantages to be the possibility of the college beginning summer break earlier, allowing Juniata students a better chance than they have now at finding summer jobs to fund college expenses. "It all depends on how they schedule it" President Kulp stated. Noting some of the disadvantages of the semesters, he pointed out that with a long break in January students could become bored and lose the "rhythm" developed in the first term in regard to academics.

President Kulp summarized by saying that if the benefits can't be proven by the Administration, then the College should stick with tri-mesters and re-schedule the terms so as to be advantageous to the students. He does see, though, a formal debate coming up in Student Government some time in February.

Professor Wise, Department Chairman of the Business and Economic Department, feels a need to stay with the tri-mesters for his department. He pointed out that the Business and Economics department has "developed, through no small effort" a curriculum designed for trimesters that he feels is very successful. He said to switch to semesters would mean in part "to re-think everything we have done so far;" this could mean restructuring courses and in some cases combining courses. In changing to semesters he sees the possibility of offering less courses and in turn possibly increasing class size.

In regard to the intensity of the pressure students face, Professor Wise pointed out that his department has handled this by scheduling some classes to meet every day if necessary while others, more intense, meet three times a week or even only twice a week. Professor Wise is personally against semesters; he stated that if semesters are instituted "we'll have to undo all that we've done, we'll have to reinvent the wheel."

The department Chairman of the Philosophy Department, Professor Janet Lewis, sees tri-mesters as being useful for courses that teach skills because under tri-mesters students can practice everyday, but for courses with substantial reading, semesters would give students more time to understand the material as well as prepare it for class. She noted that on paper the tri-mester seems better in comparison to a semester, but in reality they are "really the same." Professor Lewis prefers semesters even though she recognizes the possibility of scheduling conflicts. Professor Lewis feels the advantages of tri-mesters could also be integrated into semesters; although she sees the possible conflicts for internships in some of the other departments.

National Competition Sponsored

The National Student Educational Fund is sponsoring a national competition to recognize college students who produce the best informational materials for other students.

$12,000 in scholarships will be awarded in this national competition called the Better Information Project: Prizes in Education (BIPPIE).

Individual students or student groups are eligible to submit entries in any media produced during the 1876-77 or 1977-78 academic years. Materials must be aimed at informing fellow students about campus programs, opportunities and experiences.

Prizes will be awarded in two categories: general information aimed at the entire student community (such as orientation guides, course and teacher evaluations and financial aid manuals) and information aimed at specific student groups including but not limited to women, the handicapped, minorities and older students.

Each of twelve winners will be awarded a trip to Washington, D.C. to accept, on behalf of their school, a $1,000 scholarship, which will be given to a student with financial need.

Application packets and competition rules are available on request from the National Student Educational Fund, 2000 P St. NW, Suite 305, Washington, D.C. 20036. Entries must be postmarked no later than February 28, 1978.

The competition is supported by a grant from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare's Fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education. To date, scholarships have been provided by The Chronicle of Higher Education, The Ford Foundation, The Forum for the Advancement of Students in Science and Technology, Inc., and The International Study Travel Center, Inc. The College Entrance Examination Board has contributed toward the project's evaluation activities.

Kaylor Publishes Book

"Truth Sets Free," a 430-page centennial history of Juniata College by Dr. Earl C. Kaylor, Jr., has been published by A.S. Barnes and Company, Inc., of Cranbury, N.J.

Dr. Kaylor, the Charles A. Dana Supported Professor of History and Religion at Juniata, presents in the book a 14-chapter chronicle of Juniata's first 100 years, 1876-1976. He was commissioned by the college in 1975 to compile the centennial work.

According to the publisher, "'Truth Sets Free' vividly enlivens all areas of campus life in Juniata's history — fun-loving and hard-working students, memorable teachers, dedicated trustees and alumni, able administrators. Above all, this book emphasizes Juniata's commitment, as a free-standing college, to put humanistic and Christian values into the core of its curriculum."

"For nearly two centuries small liberal arts colleges have been a bulwark of learning and civilization in this country. Juniata, a hundred years old in 1976, has been part of this educational tradition," says Barnes.

"The Hilltop college was founded by members of the Church of the Brethren, a religious group then benighted by a sectarian mentality. This book, richly anecdotal and illustrated, tells of its origins in the face of stubborn opposition by the Brethren. Juniata stands as their first permanent institution of higher learning (seven in all today)."

Kaylor's book is the third historical work about Juniata. The others are David Emmert's "Reminiscences of Juniata College," published in 1901, and Charles C. Ellis' "Seventy Years of Juniata College," written in 1947 as the college prepared for its diamond anniversary in 1951.

Dr. Kaylor has taught at Juniata since 1958. A 1946 alumnus of the college, he holds the B.D. degree from Bethany Theological Seminary, Oak Brook, Ill., the M.A. degree in history from the University of Notre Dame, and the Ph.D. in American social and intellectual history from the Pennsylvania State University.

An ordained Church of the Brethren minister, Dr. Kaylor pastored the Westmont Church of the Brethren, Johnstown, for five years and also served congregations in Huntingdon, James Creek and Ardenheim.

The Greensburg native has contributed articles and book reviews to scholarly journals and authored several biographical studies for the multi-volume work, "Notable American Women, 1607-1950," published by the Harvard University Press.

"Truth Sets Free" can be purchased at the Juniata College Bookstore and at Miller's and Keller's in Huntingdon.

Tuition Tax Credits

(CPS) — Questions of constitutionality and institutionalized elitism should enliven the campaign for the proposed Tuition Tax Credit Bill of 1977.

The bill, recently introduced in Congress, would allow an income tax credit for half of tuition costs up to $500 per student. The tax break includes students enrolled in private as well as public schools from kindergarten to graduate studies.

The consitutionality of the bill is questionable by the inclusion of religious institutions. The Supreme Court, eginning in 1947, has interpreted the First Amendment clause, "Congress shall make no law respecting establishment of religion" to mean complete separation of church and state including private church-sponsored schools.

Senator Patrick Moynihan (D-NY), one of 43 co-sponsors of the bill thinks the Supreme Court was wrong. Speaking before the Senate during the introduction to the bill on Sept. 26, Moynihan argued that the founding fathers meant to protect against the founding of a national religion favored above others, rather than separation of church and state.

If passed, the bill will most benefit private schools and middle income families. The plight of middle income families has been the focus of much attention in recent, inflation-riddled years. With incomes above the level for qualifying for federal and financial aid, middle income families are having difficulties meeting the costs of educating their college-age children. The same holds true for many families wishing to enroll their children in private or parochial schools. Moynihan claimed that 51 percent of private school enrollees come from lower and middle income families.

Moynihan strongly supported federal assistance to private schools. He stated that they "provide diversity to the society, choices to students and their parents, and a rich array of distinctive educational offerings that even the finest of public institutions find difficult to supply, not least because they are public and must embody generalized principles."

One of the "generalized principles" Moynihan didn't elaborate on was the mediocrity and poverty which have become features of public education in the U.S. Members of the Senate Finance Committee, who will hold hearings on the bill in January, will invariably question whether public money should help finance the lucky few so they can continue to benefit from "the rich array of distinctive educational offerings" of private schools while Cleveland students take a two month Christmas vacation because there's no money in the board of education's coffers to pay teachers.

The bill promises some relief to its intended audiences—needy college students. For senators who in the past have killed similar legislation, the issues of the bill's constitutionality and institutionalized elitism may prompt the same response.

Hostel Application

American Youth Hostels, Inc., America's oldest, non-profit, hiking, bicycling and outdoor recreational organization, announced that the largest number of college students ever, used hostels while traveling in the United States and Europe this past summer.

AYH is a member of the International Youth Hostel Federation comprised of 50 countries that collectively operate more than 4,500 hostels (simple, dormitory-style places to stay) worldwide, where travelers pay $2.00-$3.00 a night.

AYH said that many membership requests were delayed because so many travelers waited to apply in Spring just before they departed on their trips.

For a free general information brochure about hosteling, write to AYH, Dept. C, Delaplane, Virginia 22025.

USO Seeks Talent

College-sponsored entertainment groups of no more than eight performers are being sought by USO SHOWS to tour isolated military instillations overseas. Expanse-paid tours ranging in length from four to six weeks are scheduled to give areas: Alaska, the Orient, Europe, Mediterranean, and the Caribbean.

A live audition and completion of a normal application are required of groups desiring to be considered for the limited number of tours available each year.

A brochure entitled "Guidelines for Audition and Tour Application" has been published by the USO SHOWS Campus Music Committee (CMC). The guidelines provide specific information regarding qualifications and restrictions, types of shows desired, production suggestions, details of touring and a step-by-step outline on how to apply. Music Departments or Student Production Departments may obtain a free copy of the CMC Guidelines by writing USO SHOWS, 1146 19th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036.

Theatre Departments interested in preparing a book musical or comedy for audition (maximum cast of 10 including manager) may also write to USO SHOWS for guidelines prepared by the American Theatre Association (ATA) Overseas Touring Committee.

Flicks

By Judy Young

This week's Center Board film presentation is Cool Hand Luke, starring Paul Newman as an independent loner stuck on a Southern chain gang. Newman's runins with your typical, stereotyped Southern sherriff are the basis for the story, from which comes the line "What we have here is a failure to communicate", which, believe me, was spoken all over America once upon time. I have never seen this movie, but, judging from the gleams in the eyes of people when I ask them if they've seen it, it shouldn't be missed.

Cool Hand Luke will be shown in Oller Hall at 7:30

Cagers End Drought with Victory

By Bob Wallace

The Juniata Indians broke a long losing streak last Saturday in Memorial Gym. After a terrible showing against Gettysburg a week ago, the Tribe bounced back to defeat Albright 80-72. It was a game that was long overdue for the players. For the first time this season the fans got to see the team play the caliber of basketball that has been expected of them.
